Recycling pick-up service first of its kind in Manhattan area

CORI CORNELISON
Collegian

A K-State student combined his experience in recycling with a desire to educate people and turned it into a business.

While working at Howie's Recycling this summer, Randy Harris, junior in physical education and senior at Manhattan Christian College, said he realized the need and convenience of a curbside recycling service in Manhattan.

"I think people are ignorant as far as they don't know what's recyclable," Harris said. "We've all grown up in a time and era where you just throw everything away."

Harris began Randy's Recycling Pick-up Service July 1 with help from Howard Wilson, owner of Howie's Recycling.

Cost of the service is $5 for pick-up twice a month. Pick-up days are determined by Harris.

Harris said Wilson helped him start his pick-up service as far as educating and advising.

"He's like the pioneer of recycling in this part of the state. If there's something to be known about recycling, Howard knows," Harris said. "His advice is pretty much as good as gold."

Wilson said Randy's Recycling Pick-up Service is not a partnership. It belongs solely to Harris.

"This is his baby. I'm just endorsing him," Wilson said. "The only thing we did was kind of educate him on what we take and told him there was a need for it, and he took the ball and ran with it."

Harris' initial investment was $2,000, which included the purchase of a truck, advertising and literature about the service, he said.

Harris said he is looking for someone to sponsor the service and to help with some of the financial burden.

"The Chamber of Commerce knows that we've started," Harris said. "We've talked with them down there as far as trying to get grants."

Wilson said he doesn't foresee the city sponsoring the pick-up service.

"I don't perceive the city doing anything to sponsor it," Wilson said. "If anything is happening, the county will do it, because the county has that kind of jurisdiction on the solid waste."

Monty Wedel, recycling coordinator and planning director of Riley County, said the county currently has no plans to sponsor the pick-up service.

Harris said everything he makes he puts back into the service. There is no profit now, but perhaps eventually there will be.

"We have about 20-to-25 customers right now, and we've mailed out probably about 125 letters over the past five-to-six days," Harris said. "Everything I make — you're looking at 20 customers at $5 a month — that's $100 you put back into public relations."

Harris said it is hard to advertise for more customers when ads are so costly.

"You call up newspapers for an ad, and it costs more than $100, so you have to be in business a couple of months just to set up an ad," Harris said.

Besides running his own business, Harris said he is taking 21 hours between K-State, night classes at Highland Community College and Manhattan Christian College.

"I don't have much of a social life," Harris said. "To me, it's not that big of a deal."

Pick-ups are on Tuesday and Thursday mornings, Harris said.

"Nine of my hours are night classes, which leaves my afternoons open, and my Tuesday and Thursday mornings are open, so that's when I do all my pick-ups," Harris said.

Some people frown at paying $5 for the service, Harris said.

Wilson said Harris has to sort the recyclable goods before they can be recycled.

"With it being all together, it is trash. With it being separated, it is recyclable goods," Wilson said.

Harris said he is working to improve his service by being a direct distributor of recycling bins.

"We're working right now with Tucker Recycling, and we're trying to become a direct distributor of that just so we can offer it at a cheaper price to customers," Harris said.

Positive outlook has helped Harris be persistent in making the service work, he said.

"Instead of sitting around hoping things go right, you make sure things go right," Harris said.

Camilo Estremadoiro, junior in business, said he has volunteered to help with Randy's Recycling Pick-up Service along with another K-State student.

Estremadoiro said he has basically been trying to make the community aware.

"We're trying to make it easy for the household and business to recycle," he said.

IN OUR OPINION

By the Collegian Editorial Board

Players' punishment should be consistent

Both quarterback Chad May and defensive back Steve Hanks have been arrested for driving under the influence of alcohol or drugs during the last few months.

K-State coach Bill Snyder said Tuesday in a press conference that Hanks will not suit up for Saturday's game. However, May, who received his DUI this summer, started the first game.

These punishments are inconsistent, to say the least. The two players should have received the same reprimand for their offenses.

Even though May's DUI was during the off-season, both Hanks and May are player representatives for the football team. Any student who is serving as an example of K-State excellence should be required to maintain higher standards. We, as students, need to demand this of our athletes.

K-State football players are often put in the position of role models for the young people of Kansas. Whether they like it, they represent the University on a highly publicized level.

The high-profile nature of the team requires that we hold its members to a higher scale. This should include the mechanism that we use to penalize them.

It is time to evaluate the system with which athletes are punished. The discipline for any prohibited actions should be standardized.

Disciplinary actions should not be reviewed on a case-to-case basis. The current setup allows the more well-known players to escape unpunished.

Although team rules and policies are not public knowledge, it is extremely important that the punishments be swift, clear and balanced.

Policies concerning team rules need to have a more consistent pattern. Unless this changes, we need to demand a revamp of the athletic judicial system.

MARLETT'S WORLD

Having a disability can be hard

ERIN MANSUR-SMITH

When Dan Hayden makes a comment about a woman's breasts, he isn't doing it because he's a swine. He's doing it because he can't help himself.

He and Matthew Locke have Tourette's syndrome, a condition marked by involuntary physical movements and vocal tics. Dan can't control his whistles, barks and sexual comments.

In an effort to educate people, Hayden and Locke gave a presentation in Moore Hall about Tourette's Syndrome.

Dan wanted, not only to make people understand about him, but also to circulate the fact that he had Tourette's as widely as he could, so others around him would know what it was that made him behave as he does.

In other words, Dan Hayden "came out."

Speaking as a person who has a physical impairment, sharing with people the nature of a disability that may not be easily discernible or of common public knowledge, can be a big decision.

It is not only because of the stigma this society still attaches to people who don't fit the popular image of a healthy, walking, talking, hearing and seeing individual with all their fingers and toes. Most people who have physical disabilities and who have any sense of self esteem, aren't ashamed or embarrassed of what they can or can't do.

Most people with physical disabilities are proud of who they are and what they are capable of doing. I don't consider myself limited merely because I can't hear birds and car horns. I consider myself lucky enough to be able to sit in Denison Hall and not be bothered by the sounds of construction next door when I turn off my hearing aids.

Some people may decide to keep their abilities to themselves because they don't want any special concessions made for them. People are goofy. They think just because you can't hear that you are stupid or just because you have a learning disability that you have to have everything explained 20 million times.

Everyone wants to be judged by their merits, by what they have learned and what they can contribute, not by what they aren't capable of doing.

People don't want to have the scales tipped in their favor just because they can't walk or because they have a speech impediment or have people act differently toward them because they have a slight problem processing information.

For others, it may just be a matter of privacy. It seems that people forget that no one with a physical impairment, unless it interferes with the the way people interact with one another, is under any obligation to disclose the nature of that condition.

People forget not to stare, not to ask how I "got this way." It seems as if all the rules of proper behavior are suspended and anyone may treat you as they wish, asking whatever they wish. Dan Hayden and Matthew Locke want people to understand them, and they make the effort to educate others. They didn't have to explain themselves. They wanted to educate, and the people who heard what they had to say should feel honored they were willing to share that piece of themselves.

Republicans turn against Kassebaum, Chafee

DAN LEWERENZ

This year's award for vindictive, cruel and unusual behavior toward rational and decent individuals goes to the Republican Caucus.

Last week, at the GOP's weekly gathering on Capitol Hill, Sens. John H. Chafee, R-R.I., and Nancy Kassebaum, R-Kan., were the targets of an attack with a unique and particularly damaging nature. Their seniority has been threatened.

Stripping a legislator of seniority doesn't sound like anything particularly nasty to the political outsider.

But committees in both the Senate and the House of Representatives usually use seniority to determine leadership positions.

Traditionally, committee chairs are chosen from among those in the majority party who have served the most time on the committee.

Similarly, the ranking minority member is chosen from those with the most seniority among the minority party.

Both Chafee and Kassebaum have a lot to lose if their seniority is taken. Chafee currently serves as the ranking minority on the Environment and Public Works Committee, and Kassebaum is the ranking Republican on the Labor and Human Resources Committee

If pollsters are right, and the GOP stands a legitimate chance of regaining a Senate majority, both Chafee and Kassebaum would be prevented from assuming their rightful positions as committee chairs.

All because these two senators defected on the crime bill.

The GOP will tell you that it goes farther than that.

While six Republicans voted for the bill, Chafee and Kassebaum (along with Sen. John C. Danforth, R-Miss., who is not seeking re-election and, therefore, would be unaffected) had originally signed a letter stating that they would oppose the bill.

"They stabbed Dole in the back," one senator said. Both were deserted by their party long before they returned the favor.

Chafee signed the letter only after being assured that the GOP would not challenge the provision banning assault weapons.

He didn't find out that the Republican position had required the removal of the ban until Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell read him the list of demands over the phone.

Kassebaum, concerned about the amount of spending contained in the bill, signed the letter to strengthen the party's bargaining position.

But when the Republicans passed on Mitchell's offer to cut several million dollars, she felt that politics, rather than informed policy concerns, was dictating the debate.

If pollsters are right, and the GOP stands a legitimate chance of regaining a Senate majority, both Chafee and Kassebaum would be prevented from assuming their rightful positions as committee chairs. All because these two senators defected on the crime bill.

Sen. Joseph McCarthy, R-Wis., despite being condemned by the Senate in 1954, retained his seniority.

So did Sen. David Durenberger, R-Minn., in 1990, when his financial misconduct brought "dishonor and disrepute" on the Party and the Senate.

So did Sen. Bob Packwood, R-Ore., even though he admitted to sexual misconduct in his relationships with several women and later tried to intimidate them into silence.

To his credit, Dole said through a spokesman that he will oppose challenging any senator's seniority. Absent a truly heinous ethics violation, such a challenge would only exacerbate the increasing factionalism that currently threatens the GOP.

But insiders agree that, successful or not, it is almost inevitable that the challenge will be made. Senators Chafee and Kassebaum will be asked to answer to their party rather than constituents or conscience.

The goal is to make them simple tools in the implementation of an increasingly conservative ideology that they, and most of the country, don't share.

That is not what representative democracy is all about.

Dan Lewerenz is a senior in philosophy.

▶ POLICE

Officer did his job

Dear Editor,

I have been following the Camp story with interest over the past week. I have seen many things written in this time. There have been a lot of contradictions and guessing done by different people. The only people who know what happened is Camp and Officer Bob Fenton. We have only heard Camp's side of the story.

Knowing that the Collegian isn't very objective in its stories, I decided to do some questioning on my own. I know Officer Fenton because he was the subject of a paper I wrote for a summer class. When I rode on patrol to interview him, I had the chance to see him interact with several people in the performance of his duties.

At one point in the evening, we were talking to a person who was living in the men's washroom at Ahearn Field House. This person refused to identify himself to Officer Fenton. Officer Fenton talked to this subject until he provided him with the correct name and social security number. After receiving this information, Officer Fenton verified it over the radio.

When I saw that Camp refused to identify himself and was unable to provide proper ID, I thought that Officer Fenton would try the same thing as he had done before in order to identify Camp.

I talked to a source at the KSU Police Department to see if this method had been tried.

I was told that Camp had refused to identify himself until he was at the KSU police station.

The source then asked Camp why he waited so long to ID himself, and he said he wanted to see how far the issue would be pushed.

Now the fundamental mistake that everyone is making is that they are connecting the detention of Camp to riding a bicycle on the sidewalk. This is not the case.

The officer involved tried to identify Camp. Camp refused to give identification. Now this officer doesn't know who this person is. Camp could have been a fleeing felon, have a warrant out for his arrest or any number of things. Camp was taken into custody to protect the officer, who didn't know who he was dealing with and to protect society at large.

▶ BICYCLES

Not enough space to park bike

Dear Editor,

On Friday, Sept. 1, I rode my bike to an afternoon class. The problem began when I tried to park my bike in the bicycle racks on the north side of Bluemont Hall. As usual, there were no spots available.I proceeded to lock my bike to one of the railings leading into the building. In case you didn't know, this is illegal. I found this out by leaving class and noticing a parking-services employee leaving a ticket (bicycle improper parking) on every bike locked to the railing. I feel there is a problem with receiving a $15 ticket for this. The University has been trying for years to alleviate the automobile-parking problem. Students have found a temporary solution by commuting to campus by bike. The solution has become a University problem due to a lack of designated bicycle racks.If the University intends to ticket students for locking their bikes to alternate stands (railings), then they need to provide an adequate amount of legal parking racks. Thank you.

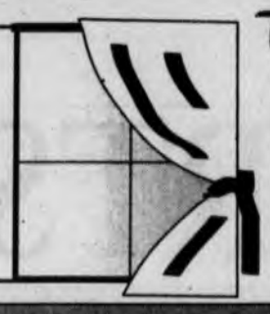
▶ TAXES

Students use water too

Dear Editor,

I have to comment on your editorial from Monday's issue, where you encourage "students to vote down the sales tax increase students will get very little use out of these projects because most of us are gone in 4, 5 or 6 years."



Excuse me, but didn't you just list "those projects" as a new water treatment plant? I was under the impression that every student will use the city water every day during those 4 or 5 or 6 years they are in Manhattan.

How many glasses of water, showers, car washes, toilet flushes, loads of laundry, etc., will the students of KSU use? I think every person should be willing to pay a few cents a day for a steady supply of clean drinking water and reliable sewage treatment— not just property owners. Unless, of course, you are willing to haul your own water from "home" during the years you are at K-State. If you are willing to drink it, use it or flush it, you should be willing to pay a penny (sales tax) for it.

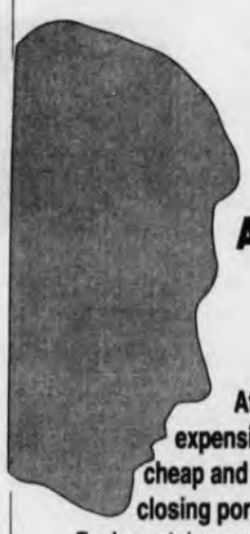
Tidbits

Window cleaner:
Mix 2 cups of kerosene into a gallon of warm water. When the glass is wiped, the kerosene leaves an invisible film that lets water bead up and run off.

Tidbits



Mirror cleaner:
Leftover tea is one of the best mirror cleaners. The stronger the tea, the better the cleaner.

In the age of automatic teller machines and e-mail, it's easy to buy everything ready-made and pre-packaged. But why would you want to, when you can

MAKE your own

PERSONAL CARE

AFTERSHAVE

Equipment: large mixing bowl, mixing spoon, measuring cups, gallon jar with lid, funnel, coffee filter. Ingredients: boric acid, glycerin, rubbing alcohol, witch hazel, water, cologne as desired.

Yield: 1 gallon.

Measure 1 tablespoon of boric acid into a large mixing bowl and add 1/2 cup of glycerin. Mix thoroughly, making sure to get all the lumps out.

Pour the mixture into a gallon jar through a funnel lined with a coffee filter. If desired, add a few drops of your favorite cologne.

SOOTHING LIP BALM

Instead of buying Chapstick, a simple recipe will heal and soothe chapped lips.

Equipment: measuring spoons, double boiler, mixing spoon, small jar with cover. Ingredients: beeswax, castor oil, anhydrous lanolin, spirits of camphor. Buy all ingredients at a pharmacy.

Yield: 2.5 ounces.

Melt 1 ounce — about 2 tablespoons — of beeswax in a double boiler. Add 2 tablespoons of castor oil and 1 tablespoon of anhydrous lanolin. Stir thoroughly. When cool, add 1 teaspoon of spirits of camphor and mix. Spoon the mixture into a small jar and cover it tightly.

PEPPERMINT TOOTHPASTE

There are toothpastes you can make at home that don't have the powdery taste of baking powder.

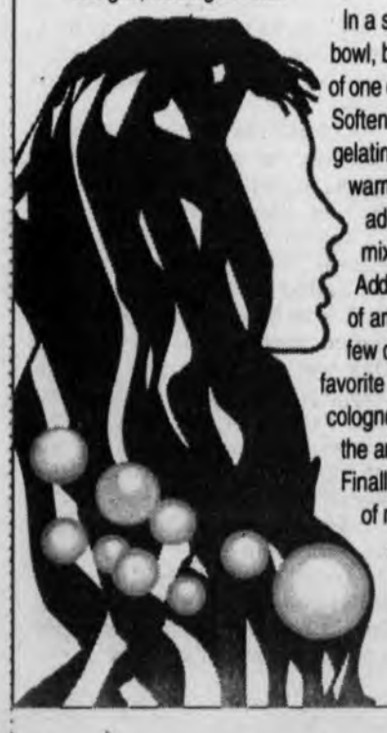
Yield: 4 ounces.

Measure 1/4 cup of precipitated chalk and 1/4 cup of soap flakes into a mixing bowl. Add enough glycering to form a thick paste. Add a few drops pf liquid saccharin and a few drops of peppermint extract. Stir to blend well into a smooth paste.Transfer the paste to a small jar and cover tightly.



HAIR

PROTEIN SHAMPOO

This high-protein shampoo can be made fresh before each washing.

In a small mixing bowl, beat the white of one egg until frothy. Soften a packet of gelatin in 1/4 cup of warm water and add to the mixture. Mix well. Add 3 tablespoons of ammonia. Add a few drops of your favorite perfume or cologne (this masks the ammonia). Finally, add 1/4 cup of rubbing alcohol and mix thoroughly.

HERBS

DRIED HERBS

Drying your own herbs costs a fraction of store prices, and the flavor is usually of higher quality.

Equipment: Paper towels, cookie sheets, glass storage jars with airtight lids, paper bag, string.

Pick individual healthy leaves or sprigs from the top two-thirds of the plant. Wash the herb quickly with cold water, and pat dry with paper towels. Spread the leaves evenly in a single layer on a cookie sheet. Dry in the oven at no higher than 120 degrees until the herb is brittle and crumbles when pinched (usually about an hour).

HERB VINEGARS

Ingredients: herb leaves (basil, dill, mint, parsley, sage, savory, tarragon, thyme) white cider vinegar or red wine vinegar. The milder the vinegar, the more pronounced the herb flavor.

Slightly crush herb leaves to make 3/4 cup of herbs. Pour the leaves into a 1-quart wide-mouth jar and add 2 cups of vinegar. Cover the jar tightly and shake it to moisten all the leaves. Let it stand in a cool, dark place for five days to steep. Strain the vinegar through cheesecloth into a pint jar. Discard the herb leaves. Add a whole sprig of herb to the vinegar in a decorative jar, and refrigerate it.

DETAILS

PERFUME SACHETS

Ingredients: Plaster of Paris, water, cologne or toilet water. Measure 1/4 cup plaster of paris into a mixing bowl. Add 1-2 tablespoons of water and stir to a creamy consistency. Pour the mixture into vials, filling each one half full. Let the plaster of paris harden overnight.

When the plaster has hardened, fill each vial with your favorite cologne or toilet water and let the vials stand until the liquid is absorbed by the plaster. Set the vials, uncovered, in drawers and closets as desired. When the scent fades, recharge the vials with more cologne.

SILK SCARVES

Good scarves can be expensive, but making your own is much cheaper and gives you greater control over patterns and fabrics.

Materials: Fabric, thread, fringe or trim as desired.

Fabric for scarves should have enough resiliency to drape well. Natural fabrics are more comfortable than synthetics. Silk, the obvious choice, can be expensive, but looking through the rummage pile at a fabric store can be useful. Lightweight cottons work well with jeans and cotton skirts.

Fabric resources: Look in thrift stores or in your own wardrobe for old clothes that you can salvage cloth from. Keep an eye out for old silk dresses or blouses or chiffon and satin evening gowns. Some garments can make several scarves.

Sizes: For a square scarf, a good size is at least 13 inches square. For an oblong scarf, you'll need a piece of fabric at least 9 x 36 inches.

To make the scarf, spread out the material on a flat work surface. With a fabric marker, outline the scarf on the back side of the fabric, making it about 1/2 inch larger on all sides than you want the final scarf to be.

Make a line of stitching all around on the marked outline. Cut the scarf out about 1/16 inch outside the line of stitching. Roll the stitched edges under twice to form a narrow hem. Pin the hem in place, and then stitch the hem carefully around the perimeter of the scarf.

OWNERS TO ANNOUNCE BASEBALL'S FATE

Acting commissioner Bud Selig reviewed a draft news release Tuesday and sent a draft resolution to owners, baseball sources said. He scheduled a telephone conference call for 2 p.m. EDT today, and sources said that's when owners would make a formal decision on the season.

Running returns to lineup

JULIE KUHLMAN
Collegian

A familiar number will be returning to the field as the Wildcats take on the Rice Owls Saturday.

Mitch Running will be back in uniform Saturday and will see some playing time, Coach Bill Snyder said.

Running has been recovering from surgery to repair torn ligaments in his thumb he suffered the week before the Southwestern Louisiana game.

Running said his injury occurred when he hit his thumb on the turf while diving for a pass.

"When I did it, I thought it was a sprain," he said. "After I took the ice off, I knew it was something worse."

Despite the surgery, Running missed only one contest.

"This is the first injury I've ever really had," Running said. "It was extremely tough to watch the game last week."

How much playing time Running will receive Saturday is still in question, though.

"Mitch will play, and my anticipation is that he could be a starter," Snyder said.

Running said he isn't feeling any pain and is happy to be back in uniform.

"I started catching passes a couple of days ago," he said. "I guess I just had to jump in and get my feet wet."

He also gave fans a taste of his potential when he exploded at the Copper Bowl, rushing for 65 yards and a 13-yard touchdown.

■ K-State was listed as having the ninth-best home record in the 1990s among all NCAA Division I-A football teams.

"This means a lot to our players, and there is a degree of pride in it," Snyder said.

Nebraska was the only other Big Eight school in the top 10, and Miami led the list with a 26-0 record at home.

Some other schools listed were Florida State, Florida, Texas A&M and Washington.

"This is something that K-State can hang its hat on," Snyder said.

■ Preparation for the match-up with the Rice Owls has been the focus for the Cats this week.

An area of concern was the lengthy third-down conversions the Cats gave up against Southwestern Louisiana.

"The first thing we did is correct our fundamental mistakes," Snyder said.

"The second thing was to scrimmage, which gave our defense the opportunity to respond," he said.

Snyder said Rice will be no cakewalk for the Cats since the newness of its offense may not give the players as much trouble.

"The offense was brand new to them in a playing situation last week, and this time, they will probably be more confident in running it," he said.

Although Rice lost 15-13 to Tulane last weekend, Snyder said Owls' confidence seemed to improve throughout the game.

"They moved the ball much better the second half," Snyder said.

HOME FIELD ADVANTAGE

K-State boasts the ninth-best home record in the 1990s.

1.	Miami	26-0
2.	Texas A&M	25-0-1
3.	Florida State	24-1
4.	Florida	23-1
5.	Nebraska	25-2
6.	Washington	23-2
7.	Fresno State	24-2-1
8.	Georgia	23-2-1

Steve Hanks will not suit up for Saturday's game against Rice.

Hanks was suspended as the result of being arrested for driving under the influence of alcohol or drugs Thursday morning at 12:43 a.m.

"We have team rules," Snyder said. "There is certain discipline that takes place, but I'm not going to tell you what that is."

Hanks is scheduled to appear for a preliminary hearing at 8:15 a.m. Thursday.

Military tough on K-State

The Rice Owls aren't too good this year, and it looks like an easy win for the Wildcats.

To bring in the crowd, the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics will welcome Fort Riley soldiers and the states' high school bands too, on what else, Fort Riley and Band Day.

The history of K-State football shows the Cats have done fair against military teams, but the team has been average against Fort Riley with a 3-3-1 record.

K-State, then named Kansas State Agricultural College, played its first game against Fort Riley on Thanksgiving Day and lost 14-0 in 1896 — the first of 538 losses for the school.

The two played again on Dec. 5 of the same year in Manhattan and tied 6-6. K-State coach Ira Pratt never coached again for the Cats.

The two schools got together in 1902 in Manhattan, a field today occupied by the Bluemont Elementary School at the corners of Bluemont and Juliette avenues.

KSAC lost 6-0 to Fort Riley. This would be the only campaign for coach C.E. Dietz, a Northwestern graduate who guided the Aggies to a 2-6 mark. He taught his 30 players to play fair and to be gentlemanly. Probably, this explains his 2-6 record.

BRIAN ANDERSON

Dietz's brother, G.O. Dietz, was named the coach for the 1903 season. He beat Fort Riley 11-0 in Manhattan and went 3-4-1 that year, making it the best football season at KSAC. He never coached for the school again because of a lack of enthusiasm from the administration and students.

A.A. Booth, a graduate assistant in mathematics, got his only win of the 1904 season with a 28-0 triumph against the soldiers in Manhattan.

The win was the third-largest victory margin at that time.

Booth's greatest accomplishment was when his team scored the first points against Kansas in three tries in a 41-4 defeat. He never coached for KSAC again.

KSAC Farmers (the nickname after the Aggies and before the Wildcats) got together with Fort Riley in 1918 and won 27-7. Coach Zona Clevenger and his team got a 4-1 record, losing at Kansas.

Clevenger had a coaching record of 19-9-2 in four seasons from 1916 to 1919 but died before the 1920 season.

Thirty-four years later, the two teams met in 1942 during World War II.

Now known as the Wildcats, KSAC lost to Fort Riley 21-7 as track coach Ward Haylett led the Cats.

Haylett coached from 1942 to 1944 and had a record of 6-20-2. Once the war was over, Haylett went back to coaching track until 1969.

K-State played against Camp Funston, the eastern part of Fort Riley, in 1919 and 1920, beating the team 20-6 and 55-0.

Against other military teams, K-State is 3-0 against Air Force and 2-3 against Texas A&M.

It is unknown when Band Day started, but the best known Band Day was in 1989 when K-State defeated North Texas 20-17 in the final minute of the contest. The win marked the 300th victory for the school, ended a 30-game losing streak and the first time in Snyder's tenure when a goal post was torn down.

Even though Fort Riley and high school bands appear to have little in common, both have played a part in the school's history.

Walk on taking advantage

JAMIE BUSH
Collegian

Walking on may be a term used by many Division I schools, but to Erin Egan, freshman undecided, and a walk-on to the K-State cross country team, it is not held in high regard.

A walk-on tries out for the team usually on a trial basis for 10 days, and after that, the coaching staff of the sport decides whether to keep the athlete on the active roster.

"I am taking one meet at a time," Egan said. "I thought last week's meet at Baker was going to be my only meet of the season, but now I am running at Nebraska," Egan said. "I have told myself I have to go there and do the best I can."

Egan placed 13th, and the women's squad won the meet with 24 points last Saturday at the Baker Wildcat Invitational in Baldwin City.

The future is still untold, and K-State is a new horizon for the young harrier. Running and competition are things that have always played an active role in her life.

"When I was about 10 years old, I did a Kool-aid kids triathlon," Egan said. "It was a lot of fun. I got third in my age group, and it all just started from there."

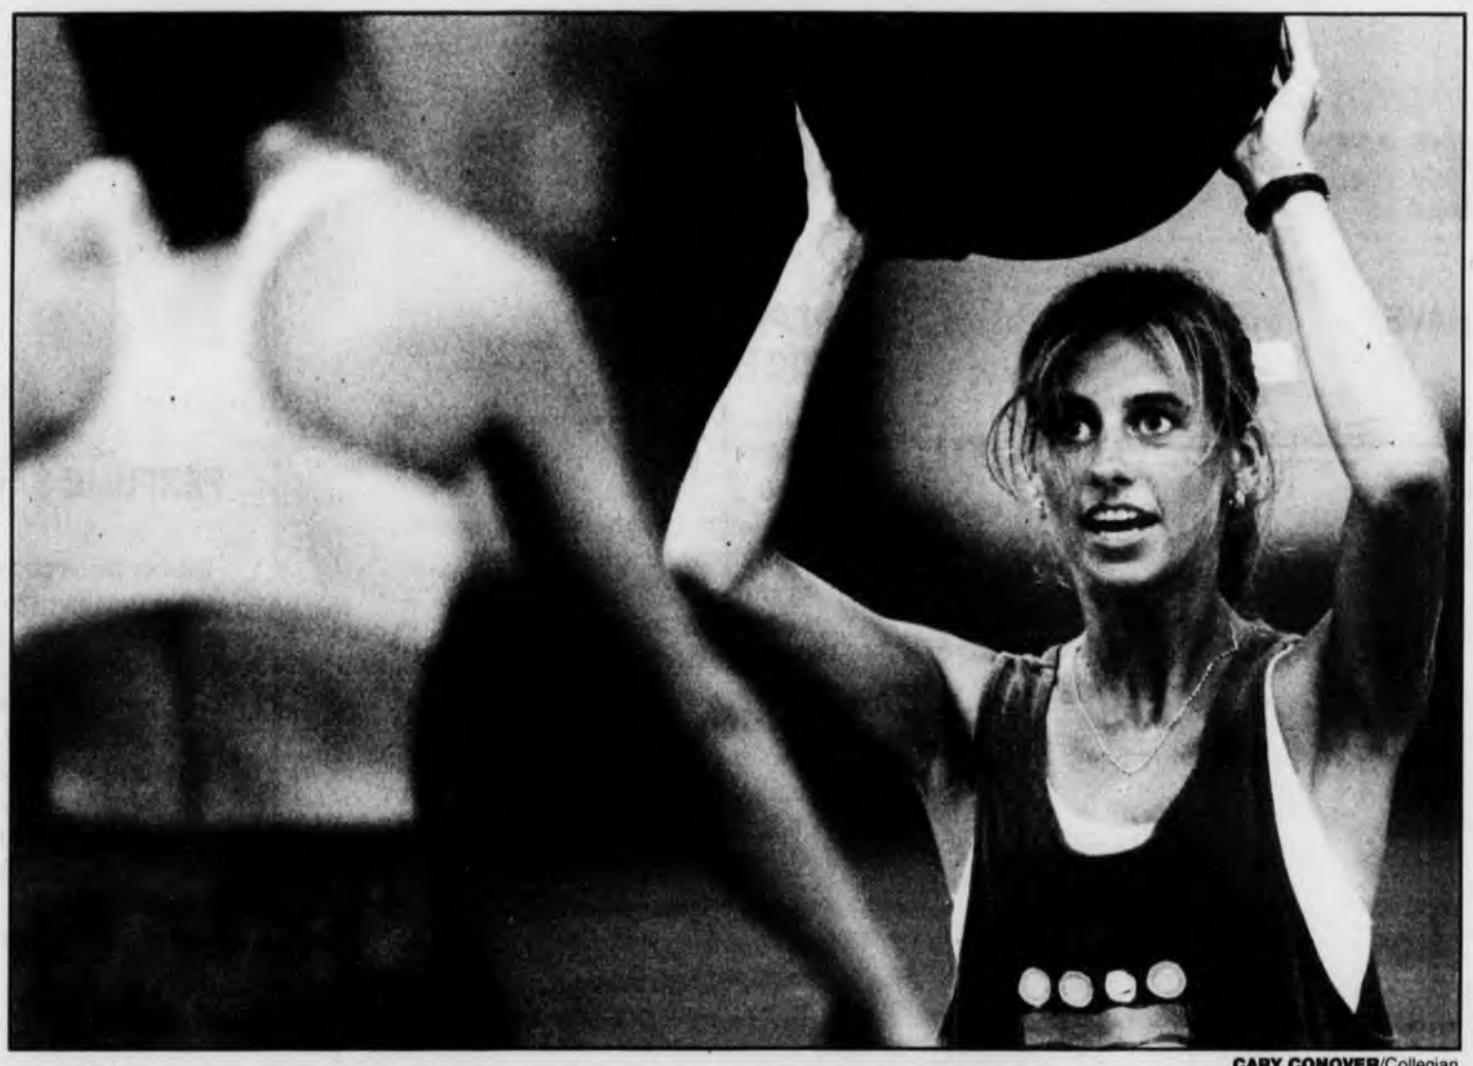
"After my first meet, my coach put me on the varsity team of 109 members at Arapahoe High School, where I went to school in Littleton, Colorado," Egan said.

Egan competed in the Colorado State cross-country meet two years, and the state track and field championships three years.

Running always seemed to be a way for her to relieve the pressures of life, Egan said.

"All people have different ways to release their feelings, some people do it through poetry, and some do it through just talking," Egan said. "For me, being a shy person, I often find it hard to open up to people and to express my feelings, and running has just seemed to solve all of my problems."

Running was a plus for her even when some of those problems were caused by running, she said.



"My very first cross country race I sprained my ankle on the second mile, and then two weeks later in my second race, I passed out," Egan said.

"By the third week, I had made it through the race without physical injury, but I found myself in the lead, and I got lost on the course," she said.

Egan said running is not just going out and putting one leg in front of the other, something that she has noticed after joining some of the runners on the Wildcat squad.

"I have had to learn real quickly how to manage my time, just so that I can work in that much needed nap time before practice," Egan said.

"I plan everything according to practice, so that if I am real busy with school I still have a half an hour before practice to rest and a half an hour after practice to study," she said.

Former NFL coach leads Wildcat offensive linemen

WESS HUDELSON
Collegian

The experience of four Rose Bowls, a Super Bowl, 19 NFL seasons and numerous all-Americans have come to K-State.

"I think I've covered almost all of the North American continent," Humenuik said.

Humenuik's coaching career has taken him to Cleveland, Boston, Los Angeles, Kansas City, New York and Toronto, Ontario.

Humenuik coached five all-Americans at USC, including the 1967 Outland Trophy winner, Ron Yary. That same year, the Trojans captured a Rose Bowl victory and the national title.

"It is the ultimate in sports to step up to the plate and play for the championship," Humenuik said. "I lost two Rose Bowls, and I won two."

Humenuik coached in the '86 Super Bowl against the Chicago Bears and suffered a lopsided defeat.

"It is a great accomplishment to make it to that point, but when you lose, it hurts worse than any other loss," he said.

During the '67 season, a running back named O.J. Simpson won the Heisman Trophy behind Humenuik's offensive line.

"O.J. always made a point to talk to me before games in the NFL, both as a player and a broadcaster," Humenuik said.

"As for what has happened lately, I can't really comment on it, because I don't know what he's done after he retired," he said

They include Brian Sipe, Ozzie Newsome, Steve Grogan and Bruce Armstrong.

Despite all of the outstanding performers with whom he has been associated, he said there isn't much difference between professional players and college players.

"A player is a player," Humenuik said. "Players want to win no matter what level it is, and they want to get better."

The biggest difference in players, Humenuik said, is the amount of knowledge today's players have compared to players from the '60s.

"Today's athlete is more knowledgeable about everything," Humenuik said. "They are more aware of the media, travel, lifestyles, just everything.

"Screaming and yelling doesn't do it anymore. You have to give players some substance and give reasons," he said.

How did a coach with his credentials find K-State?

"Coach Snyder offered me a great working environment. The community here is great from Dr. Wefald on down, and the talent level is good," Humenuik said. "That is everything a coach wants."

Snyder was serving as a graduate assistant. Snyder impressed Humenuik even then.

"I knew Bill was an intelligent guy," he said. "I saw the opportunity here with the Big Twelve and how Bill had built the program up so well, and I knew it would be a good fit."

At age 56, Humenuik is the elder statesman of the caoching staff but has no intentions of leaving the profession anytime soon.

"Blanton Collier, a coach for the Cleveland Browns, returned to the team to coach when he was 70 years old. He told me he came back because he loved to coach," Humenuik said. "Even at age 70, he was the first one to practice and the last one to leave."

"Players want to win no matter what level it is, and they want to get better."

rhetoric and practices in an effort to sustain huge military forces and budgets.

"The debate should start with a new definition of national security. No standard dictionary even lists the term national security. The only place it is defined is in the official dictionary of the Joint Chiefs of Staff," Carroll said.

The Joint Chiefs of Staff defines national security as "a collective term encompassing both national defense and foreign relations of the United States. Specifically, the condition provided by a military or defense advantage over any foreign nation or group of nations."

"The condition existing when citizens live together with dignity as productive members of a unified society under the rule of law, free of undue fear of violence and look forward with confidence to a better future for their children in a global community of peaceful nations," should be the definition, Carroll said.

Carroll said there are seven elements of true security for America. The elements include defending the Constitution of the United States, defending and sustaining the rights and dignity of the individual, maintaining economic vitality, maintaining social unity, maintaining domestic tranquility, defending the environment and defending the nation.

Changes can be made without weakening U.S. defenses and still leave the U. S. with the most powerful military force in the world into the next century, Carroll said.

Two broad actions are required, he said.

Carroll said the government should cut active strength from almost 1,700,000 million today to 1 million uniformed men and women, backed by 1 million well-equipped, highly trained National Guard and Reserves forces.

The government, he said, should cut back sharply on the production of unneeded new weapons. Production of these weapons, in accordance with current plans would cost more than $800 billion.

President Clinton's current plan is to spend $1 trillion.

His plans to spend $300 billion on the military over the next five years can be cut by least 25 percent.

The resultant savings of more than $325 billion could be used to reduce the deficit while precluding the need for heavy tax increases and disastrous cuts in valuable medical care and social programs, Carroll said.

Since the demise of the Soviet Union, the United Nations has been actively expanding its peacekeeping role each year and has contributed to non-violent resolution of regional tensions.

The United Nations needs to strengthen its action agencies, Carroll said.

One major obstacle exists to increase reliance on U.N. leadership, Carroll said.

That obstacle is described in two words: national sovereignty. The U.N. today is an organization of 184 sovereign states. Five of those states, the permanent members of the Security Council, are even more sovereign than the others because they possess the power to veto any and all measures which they deem an infringement on their sovereign rights.

"To accelerate the process of strengthening the U.N., the U.S. should lead the way by paying all our debts. Just the cost of one new Arleigh Burke destroyer for the U.S. Navy, $915 million, would pay our total arrearage.

"Instead, the Navy is building three new Burkes in 1994 at a cost of $2.75 billion. This is a classic example of seeking security through military power when a strong U.N. could do far more for U.S. security than any number of new warships," Carroll said.

▶ CRIME BILL

More officers a possibility

MIKE HIND
Collegian

A press release from Rep. Jim Slattery, D-Kan., says that if the new crime bill passes, it guarantees Kansas communities a minimum of $44 million for about 500 additional police officers.

Kansas Attorney General Bob Stephan said the figures are misleading.

"The money depends on grants from the federal government to state and local units of government," Stephan said.

Stephan said that the portion of the bill that would grant money to create programs like Midnight Sports Leagues to help teen-agers was purely political.

The bill would grant Kansas $34 million for prisons, including military-style boot camp prisons.

Building a prison is the cheapest way to lock someone up, and boot camp prisons are a band-aid approach to crime, he said.

One professor has doubts that this program will serve as a deterrent to violent crime.

"When people are that angry, they aren't thinking beyond that immediate circumstance," said Richard Brede, assistant professor of sociology anthropology and social work.

Brede also said banning assault weapons may have little effect on the instances of crime.

He said that no-bore weapons are the ones most often found in violent crime, but he sees no reason why assault-type weapons are needed.

"Personally, I don't see any reason for having a clip that holds fifty rounds," Brede said.

BOOK ARTS WORKSHOPS
A series of four, day long, workshops where you will explore book binding techniques, become familiar with the materials of the art, and develop a strong foundation for the continued exploration of the medium. You will leave the workshops with skeleton books, examples of bindings that include instructions, for all the bindings we explore.
Topics include: Basic book binding, Asian book binding, and Non-Adhesive book binding.
The workshops are open to everyone interested. The fee to cover all materials is 15 dollars for students and 20 dollars for non-students.
The dates of the four workshops are: 24 September and 1,15 and 22 October.
Registration will be open from 1 to 15 September.
The workshops will be taught by book artist, Lea Cyr.

Audience didn't show enthusiasm

The drummer works up a strong beat and an intense rhythm with his drumsticks. The singers scream into the microphones and hop around on the stage with their guitars, and the audience sits quietly and stares at the performers.

What is wrong with this picture?

For anyone who attended the Opus band competition, sponsored by Union Program Council, the reason why Manhattan's music scene is in a pothole is obvious.

AMY ZIEGLER

The turnout was great, but the audience was about as lively as the residents of a funeral home. Throughout all the energetic and entertaining displays onstage, the crowd just sat and watched in silence.

No one moved back and forth, tapped their feet to the beat or danced in front of the stage.

I felt like instead of being at a concert, I was in the stands at Wimbledon, where the sound of a pin drop could ruin the tennis players' concentration.

I'm aware the bands on-stage were seven bands without a record contract, but who knows?

The bands we watched in the Opus competition could go on to be on the cover of Rolling Stone someday.

The songs that the bands played were rated on originality, so all of the musicians avoided doing covers.

Even though the audience didn't recognize any of the songs or the band names, that is no excuse for the lack of support.

All bands in America and across the world have to get their start somewhere, and for some groups like Truck Stop Love, their roots are right here in Manhattan. If we want to attract more bands to this area, we need to prove to them that we enjoy new and different music.

We need to welcome them with open arms, instead of stamping on their confidence and destroying their hopes for a record contract.

I know if I was onstage and I looked out in the audience, saw a sea of blank faces and no movement, I would feel extremely unappreciated and would automatically form a negative view of our campus.

Steve McCanulla, vocalist for Opus performer 425 Main, from Great Bend, said he had a difficult time with the audience.

"It's hard to do a real good job when no one gets into it. We feed off them and they feed off us," he said. After watching the lifeless crowd for a few hours, McCanulla decided to take action.

He waved a dollar bill in the air and said he would pay someone or give away a demo tape to the first person to come up by the stage.

A few fanatic fans grabbed for the tape, but the overwhelming majority just sat and gave no response.

McCanulla said he would have liked to get more people up by the stage and regretted the attempt to stir up some energy in the crowd.

"I think I kind of scared them because they got to sit down all night, and I tried to get them to actually stand up and dance," he said.

Come on Wildcat fans — get some spirit before it's too late. With the apathetic attitude we showed the bands, I was shocked when they told me they were planning on coming back to play in Aggieville.

From the way the audience treated them, I wouldn't have been surprised if they never wanted to set foot in Manhattan again.

Most of the bands who performed in the competition had to venture out on a road trip to get to Manhattan, and for most of them, it was their first time ever visiting K-State. These bands from around the state don't come around this area often, and the first impression that they got was less than desirable.

We can't do anything to change the past, but the future still lies ahead of us. If we want to make Aggieville the hot spot of the Midwest, we need to give a little back to our University, the community and actively support the live music scene.

Forces gather for training

The camouflage-uniformed West Indians stood at attention before him, lined up five deep inside a lighted, mosquito-filled aircraft hangar. The Jamaicans carried AK-47 assault weapons, but the soldiers from Antigua and Belize came unarmed. They will be issued weapons during the three-week training course.

"There is no doubt in my mind that you'll be able to fulfill the role of the mission to come," Jamaican Lt. Col. Linton Graham said, who will be the chief for what will be a 266-member Caribbean contingent. "I wish you luck."

The Green Berets, from the 3rd U.S. Army Special Forces group based in Fort Bragg, N.C., train foreign soldiers regularly. Several of the trainers speak fluent Haitian Creole, Griffin said.

The arrival of the multinational force came just hours after 1,300 Marines wrapped up six days of mock-invasion exercises on the island of Vieques off Puerto Rico, part of the Roosevelt Roads base.

ANNOUNCING TWO NEW CREF ACCOUNTS

YOU'RE LOOKING AT TWO COMPLETELY OPPOSITE, FUNDAMENTALLY DIFFERENT WAYS TO INVEST IN STOCKS. WE RECOMMEND BOTH.

Introducing the CREF Growth Account and the CREF Equity Index Account.

Whether you want a fund that selects specific stocks or one that covers the market, we're on the same page. Our new CREF Growth and CREF Equity Index Accounts use two distinct strategies for investing in the stock market, but both aim to provide what every smart investor looks for: long-term growth that outpaces inflation.*

The CREF Growth Account searches for individual companies that are poised for superior growth. In contrast, the Equity Index Account looks for more diversification, with a portfolio encompassing almost the entire range of U.S. stock investments. It will invest in stocks in the Russell 3000, a broad index of U.S. stocks.

Like our CREF Stock Account, which combines active, indexed, and foreign investing, and our Global Equities Account, which actively seeks opportunities worldwide, the new funds are managed by experienced investment professionals. They're the same experts who have helped make TIAA-CREF the largest pension system in the U.S., managing over $130 billion in assets.

To find out more about our new stock funds, and building your portfolio with TIAA-CREF, just call 1 800-842-2776. And take your pick.

Student angry over parking by employee

Dear Cassandra,

With the construction on Farrell Library, the foot traffic pretty much sucks. I understand it's something I'll have to deal with for the next two years, and I can deal with that. My problem is with the entrance to Farrell.

What I don't understand is that stupid whitecampus mini-van on our sidewalk. It's there all the time lately. Has our one remaining sidewalk to the library now become a parking lot for campus vehicles? I don't think the students should have to surrender our one remaining sidewalk to our student library so that some lazy campus employee can have convenient parking.

Am I being petty?

Signed,
S.H.

Dear S.H.,

With things like third-world hunger, the homeless, refugee camps overflowing and numerous other problems, how could worrying about a van being parked on the sidewalk seem petty?

I say you write to the campus police and demand they go straight over and give this van a $25 ticket for driving on the sidewalk.

▶ REVIEW

Directing makes "Short Cuts"

RUSSELL FORTMEYER
Collegian

"Short Cuts," Robert Altman's latest off-beat melange of people and the lives they lead, is nothing short of brilliant.

Altman is probably best known for the successful movie, "The Player," and to movie buffs as the outrageously original director of "Nashville" and "M*A*S*H*."

Altman's direction of "Short Cuts" has exceeded all expectations with a cannily crafted movie that explodes the myth that interweaving stories doesn't work.

Altman's movie's strong points definitely lie in casting. "Short Cuts" brings together Altman favorites Tim Robbins (of "The Player"), Lily Tomlin (of "Nashville"), and Lyle Lovett (of "The Player").

At first, this movie can be somewhat confusing.

There's Tomlin, the down-on-her-luck waitress that gets ogled by Huey Lewis among others. Then there's Robbins, the egotistical policeman who cheats on his wife and ignores his kids, and Jennifer Jason Leigh, the phone sex operator/mother that turns her husband on about every hour only to deny him any sex.

Just because Lovett is married to Julia Roberts, doesn't mean he can act. He stumbles through this movie as awkwardly as "The Player." Perhaps Altman is attracted to this innocent ineptitude.

The real question should be: Do any of these actors shine, since they are only allotted so much time in recurring frames of the movie? Well, for the most part, yes. There remains, however, an underlying feeling that you don't really understand or know the characters. You'll ask questions like "Why did they do that?"

There is a trade-off in multi-story movies. The characters don't materialize nearly as well.

The only major drawback of "Short Cuts" is the length. It is pretty hard to sit still during the second half of the movie. I mean, this isn't an intense movie like "Schindler's List," but more on the level of watching a very well-written, offbeat soap opera for three hours.

Don't worry if you don't understand some parts. It will all come together, eventually.

The movie ties itself together with ominous airplanes flying across the city spraying insecticide for the medfly quarantine. It concludes with an earthquake bringing everyone together at the same time. So, even though the movie concerns separate stories, it is, after all, a whole.

Altman has only secured his presence as one of the most original, thought-provoking directors in America. No one else could have pulled this movie off with as much punch, not even a Lawrence Kasdan (Grand Canyon).

Entering his fifth year teaching Introduction to American Music, David Royse goes to each class with energy and enthusiasm.

MARK LEFFINGWELL
Collegian

Professor loves music, teaching

JOYCE LEFTOFF
Collegian

"GOODmorning!"

If you are the least bit interested in music and don't mind a chipper greeting like this every day, you should consider taking Introduction to American Music from David Royse, assistant professor of music education.

"Classes like this can be very boring, so I try to mix a lot of oral and visual images with lecture material," Royse said. "This helps non-majors to begin to see the act of making music."

Royse doesn't deny being energetic about his class. He said that he hopes his rural Kentucky upbringing comes through in his excitement for music.

"You can't fake liking something when it's sort of second nature to you," Royse said.

This is the beginning of Royse's fifth year at K-State, and he says that he fits in with the student-oriented type of atmosphere on campus.

"I'm a K-State kind of person," Royse said. "The University really caters to the students. I believe in that policy and enjoy being part of it."

Royse said that preparation for his classes is a continual process. He said it probably takes him from 2-to-3 hours just to gather all the materials he needs for his 50-minute American music class.

"The library has worked well with me to buy these tapes," Royse said. "All of these materials are necessary to allow the students to see, hear, smell and touch the different types of music."

Royse said he was influenced to be in education by his mother and grandmother, who were both teachers. Even his sister is a teacher.

He said he thought about pre-law, but he knew that music education was what he really wanted to do.

"You can't beat that," Royse said, "Being paid to do something you love is what it's all about."

But he did say that the British-American traditional music was one of his favorites because he grew up with it in the foot hills of the Appalachian Mountains.

Royse can sometimes be more entertaining than the subject material in his class. It's not unusual to see him running around the room to make sure his tapes are cued at the right times.

Royse never runs short of colorful anecdotes — colorful because of the animated manner in which he tells them with his Kentucky/southern accent.

Royse said teaching the American music class is rewarding.

"I enjoy uncovering the vast array of music in the U.S.," Royse said. "I am hopeful that it will excite students and make each one a better person for knowing it."

Fire safety top priority for Seaton Hall facelift

SERA L. TANK
Collegian

The construction bug that has hit the K-State campus seems to have missed Seaton Hall.

Unfortunately, it is one building that is in need of some renovations, Gary Morris, sophomore in architectural engineering, said.

A bad air conditioner, rotting wood and dysfunctional equipment has prompted Morris to try and get something done about the problems that plague the aging Seaton Hall.

Morris said the problems have been going on for a while, but it was the last straw when he walked into his studio and found thousands of dead bugs laying on the floor and drafting tables.

"The air conditioners went out, so people opened the windows and the bugs just flew in and died," Morris said.

Morris said he tried talking to several administrators from both the College of Architecture and Design and the University.

"I got mad. I probably shouldn't have, but something had to be done. We pay tuition, too," he said.

The air conditioner was finally fixed, but is still not working the way that it should be, Morris said.

A faulty air conditioner is not the only problem that the architecture studios in Seaton Hall suffer from, Morris said.

"The electrical outlets aren't covered, none of the drafting tables are usable and the wooden panes outside the windows are rotting," he said.

One reason these problems have existed for so long is because all the money for renovations on Seaton are going toward the biggest problem the building faces, Eugene Kremer, head of the Department of Architecture, said.

"Neither Seaton Hall nor Seaton Court meet the state fire codes, and our main concern is that the building is made safe for human occupancy," Kremer said.

The buildings are allowed to remain in use because they are part of a state agency, he said.

The difficulties in Seaton Hall are not getting any better and only being given temporary solutions, said Susanne Siepl-Coates, associate director of the architecture department.

"We are constantly putting little bandages on the problems, and they are only getting worse," Siepl-Coates said.

There have been some renovations done on Seaton Court, Jerry Carter, director of facilities planning, said.

"We're putting in elevators, making the building handicap accessible and bringing it up to code," Carter said.

Seaton Court has been undergoing construction for the last 2-1/2 years, and there should be construction beginning on Seaton Hall soon, he said.

"I'm anticipating the construction package to go up for bid in the next couple of weeks, and we should begin construction by the end of fall," Carter said.

▶ FACULTY SENATE

Professors' tenures, evaluations raise questions

KIM HALL
Collegian

Tuesday, Faculty Senate discussed the attitude of the Kansas Board of Regents concerning K-State faculty evaluations.

Dennis Kuhlman, president of Faculty Senate, reflected on last week's visit to K-State by the board's chairman, Frank Sabatini.

"It's very clear that the Board of Regents has a different attitude than they did two or three years ago," he said. "Frank Sabatini is very open to discussion and comments."

Kuhlman led discussions about whether action should be taken for unsatisfactory evaluations.

"The underlying question is, if you have a faculty member that is not performing and has not been performing for a long time, and he is tenured, what process is there to get rid of him?" Kuhlman said.

"Some people are saying that we have people hiding behind tenure," he said.

"Should we have a statement that says if you're a deadbeat and have been a deadbeat for a long time, then you won't be a deadbeat anymore?" Kuhlman said.

Kuhlman said Sabatini pointed out these concerns as being the reason for the return of faculty evaluations.

Faculty senator James DuBois, associate professor of interior architecture, said he was concerned that much of the focus is looking for these chronic underachievers.

"A lot of time and energy is being spent to search out one or two underachievers and not the achieving faculty," he said.

"We feel this tremendous imbalance in looking for the negative aspects rather than time to look for the positive," DuBois said.

Kuhlman said a chronic underachiever can be defined as a person who gets low amounts of raises over a significant number of years.

"The Board of Regents hasn't done a very good job of communicating to the general public what a faculty member actually does," he said.

"Legislature and probably the general public does not understand tenure," Kuhlman said.

"They don't understand academia," he said.

In other business, Kuhlman said more parking changes are expected on campus. He said that new library construction is causing some changes in terms of routing.

"The one-way street in front of Anderson Hall will become a two-way street," Kuhlman said.

Three cubs were born to Raisa, a snow leopard on loan from Como Zoo in Minnesota, at Sunset Zoo on July 18. The big cats, native to the mountains of central Aisa and the former Soviet Union, are threatened by a loss of habitat. The cubs, now about six pounds, will reach an adult weight of 100 pounds.

Baby leopards adventure into Manhattan zoo

MIKE HIND
Collegian

Three new additions to the Sunset Zoo came virtually unannounced July 18, but curators and caretakers are all pleased with their arrival.

The new additions are Nakita, Vladimir and Aleksei, three male snow leopards, the first to be born in a Kansas zoo.

"We didn't know if they had bred or not," said Don Wixom, zoo director, of the leopards' parents, Raisa and Mikael.

"The keeper noticed a couple of days before they were born that she was getting very big," Wixom said.

The SSP works with zoos and various endangered animals all across the country to help further endangered animal breeding in captivity.

Raisa was introduced to the Sunset Zoo's own male leopard, Mikael. After a gestation of 90-100 days, Raisa gave birth to three blind and helpless cubs.

The cubs, which are white-gray with black spots, are six pounds now, but will reach 100 pounds when they are fully grown.

"They are built for snow in high mountain regions," said Ryan Gulker, assistant general curator.

At this time, one of the biggest threats to the snow leopard's survival is the loss of habitat.

The cat dwells in the mountainous regions of central Asia and the former Soviet Union.

Recently, the people of the regions have begun to use this land for farming and grazing animals. Now, the snow leopard has been forced into remote areas and away from its primary food source, which is wild sheep and goats.

In a few weeks, their shy and secretive disposition will give way to a more adventurous attitude when the cubs venture out into the exhibit, Wixom said.

The snow-leopard exhibit at Sunset Zoo has been renovated to give the leopards a more natural environment.

"The old exhibit looked sterile and ugly," Gulker said.

Five cages were turned into one when partitions were knocked down and the center was gutted.

"Now it looks more natural," Gulker said.

The renovation was made possible by a donation from Richard and Jane Thiessen, of Manhattan.

The Thiessens were also given the opportunity to name the cubs. Education played a big part in choosing the Russian names, Jane Thiessen said.

"The leopards are native to Tibet and Russia," Thiessen said. "The names are used as an educational tool so kids will understand what part of Asia the leopards are from."

Research blooming

LORI CAGLE
Collegian

Driving down Kansas roads, you may notice an increase in the bright yellow sunflower patches along the ditches and fields.

This year, the patches are bigger and brighter because of a wet summer last year and the wet spring and dry August this year, said Ted Barkley, professor of biology and curator of the herbarium.

Research on the state flower has been going on at K-State for years.

Karen Gast, assistant professor of horticulture forestry and an extension horticulturist, has spent the last four summers evaluating production levels of sunflowers, as well as their appearance, popularity, marketing potential and vase life.

Alan Stevens, extension specialist in floriculture, has been studying basic variety selection and the production side.

"In the research I've done, I have seen the popularity and trendiness of the sunflower as a specialty-cut flower and have even been told by an exchange student that they are popular in Holland," Gast said.

"Sunflowers are being sold at farmer's markets for 25-to-50 cents a stem, and they're just picking them from the roadsides," she said.

These are becoming so popular that the industry has come up with its own terminology, roadsidia, she said.

Stevens said he sees Kansas as having the proper climate for cut flowers, and with seed cost low and availability high, it is a favorable industry to start.

Gast co-authored a publication on sunflowers with Stevens on the collection of their research.

Gast said that the sunflower has been popular in the past. Before World War II, sunflowers were grown in greenhouses as specialty-cut flowers.

Somewhere the popularity was lost, and now they have been discovered as a popular and easy-to-grow specialty-cut flower for both fresh cut and dried industries, Gast said.

Research has discovered breeds of sunflowers more shippable and better for fresh-cut design. There is even a new variety that is pollenless, Gast said.

"The question is if it's a trend or a fad," Gast said.

The trend began in 1903 when Kansas decided to name the sunflower to be its state flower.

It was to inspire the pioneering spirit that many felt moving into the prairie, Gene Towne, research associate in biology, said.

But it isn't the tall, droopy-headed flower that most people think of that brought about this spirit, Towne said.

Barkley said the common sunflower, Helianthus annuus, is the weed variety seen in the ditches and field edges throughout Kansas. This is one of the two annual species of sunflowers that grow in Kansas, and it is the namesake for our sunflower state, he said.

Sunflowers are native to North America and grow in continually disturbed areas like ditches, field edges and, in the past, buffalo wallows, Barkley said.

"Sunflowers have been hugging the heels of mankind forever," Barkley said.

Sunflowers are not just a North American flower, however, said Barkley, who recently returned from a European conference on sunflowers.

Russians have eaten the seeds and used a bushy variety as snow walls for years, he said.

In Hays, a society with Russian heritage, sunflower seeds are called Russian goobers, Barkley said.

Of the 20,000 species in the sunflower family, only two dozen are actually sunflowers and nine to 12 are native to Kansas, he said. Others in the family include sagebrush, asters and goldenrod.

MARK LEFFINGWELL/Collegian

Because of last year's wet weather, sunflowers have sprung up in abundance along highways and ditches in Kansas.

Officers to fight friendly fire charges

ASSOCIATED PRESS

OKLAHOMA CITY — Four Air Force officers signaled today they will fight charges of dereliction of duty aboard the radar plane that failed to prevent the friendly fire downing of two U.S. helicopters over Iraq.

"I am deeply disappointed and outraged that I have been accused of criminal offenses," Maj. Lawrence M. Tracey, a 14-year Air Force veteran and mission crew commander on the flight, said in a written statement to the Oklahoma City Daily Oklahoman.

"I feel great sadness for the families of the persons killed in this tragic accident, however, I did nothing wrong."

The newspaper also quoted from brief statements by Capt. Jim Wang, senior director of the mission crew; 1st Lt. Joseph Halcli, an en route controller; and air controller 2nd Lt. Ricky Wilson. They denied any criminal conduct and said their actions were based on their training.

The four were crew members on an Airborne Warning and Control System aircraft monitoring a restricted flight zone over Iraq. Two F-15 fighters mistakenly shot down two Black Hawk helicopters ferrying an international group working with Iraqi Kurds.

While one of the F-15 pilots faces more serious charges, the AWACS crew members are accused of failing to tell the pilots the helicopters were American and to ensure that the aircraft used the right identification codes.

The four AWACS officers assigned to the 963rd Airborne Control Squadron at nearby Tinker Air Force Base face multiple counts of dereliction of duty in the April 14 shootings over northern Iraq that killed 26 people.

BIG 8 FOOTBALL

PREVIEW FOR SEPT. 17

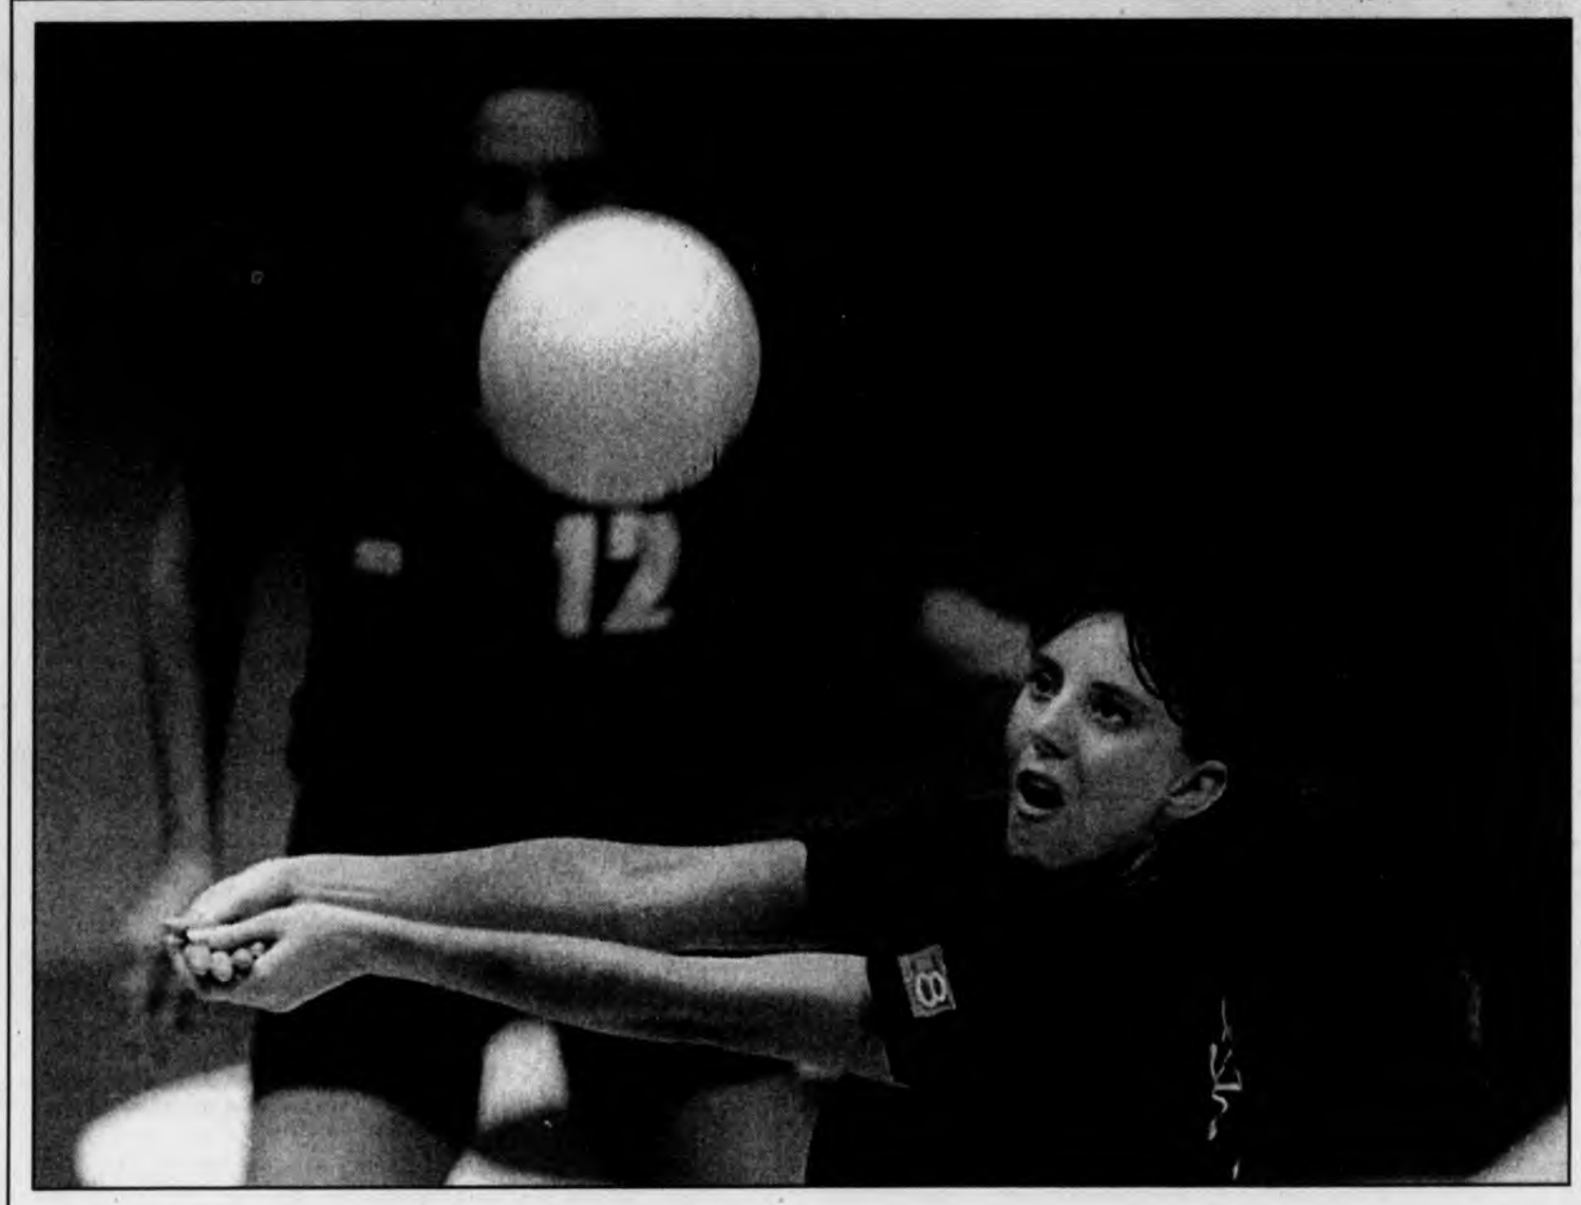
UCLA at Nebraska

When: 2:30 p.m. Saturday Sept. 17
Where: Memorial Stadium (72,700)
About the Bruins: UCLA is now 1-1, but it had to struggle to defeat Southern Methodist. Leading the way for UCLA is Heisman canidate J.J. Stokes. Stokes is rated as the country's best receiver.
About the Cornhuskers: The Big Red is still the No.1 team in college football. Last week the Huskers buried Texas Tech. Quarterback Tommie Frazier is Nebraska's leader on and off the field. I-back Lawrence Phillips had two touchdowns against Tech.

Texas Tech at Oklahoma

When: 1 p.m. Saturday, Sept. 17
Where: Memorial Stadium (75,004)
About the Raiders: Nebraska pounded the Raiders at home last week. Linebacker Zach Thomas led the way on defense, and Texas Tech's two freshmen quarterbacks played well at times.
About the Sooners: The question around Norman, Okla, is what happened against Texas A&M? The Sooners ran into a road block as the Aggies dominated them in every phase of the game. Running back James Allen is the key player for OU.

Wisconsin at Colorado



When: 7:30 p.m. Saturday, Sept. 17
Where: Folsom Field (51,748)
About the Badgers: Wisconsin took the College football world by storm last season. The Badgers captured the Big Ten title and won the Rose Bowl. This season the Badgers return 15 starters. This includes quaterback Darrel Bevell, who passed for 2,390 yards last season.
About the Buffaloes: Colorado proved why it deserves a top 10 ranking with a spanking of Northeast Louisiana. Colorado used a solid rushing attack and a strong passing game to capture the victory. The Buffaloes leaders are quarterback Kordell Stewart and running back Rashan Salaam

Oklahoma State at Baylor

When: 7 p.m. Saturday, Sept. 17
Where: Floyd Casey Stadium (48,500)
About the Cowboys: Oklahoma State started off on the right foot with a victory over Northern Illinois. David Thompson led the Cowboys in rushing, and quarterback Toné Jones led the way through the air. Oklahoma State's defense also stepped up and performed well.
About the Bears: Baylor finished with 5-6 record last season. This marks the first time in a while that the Bears finished with a losing record. They are led by tailback Brandell Jackson, who rushed for 899 yards last season.

K-State volleyball team improves record to 6-1

CRESTON KUENZI
Collegian

The K-State volleyball team has gotten off to its best start since the 1988 season.

The Wildcats went 3-1 at the Sizzler Showcase Tournament this past weekend at Oregon State University in Corvallis, Ore., bringing their overall record to 6-1 on the season.

The 1988 squad started with an 8-0 record and went on to a 15-13 record for the year.

"I don't know what I expected at the beginning of the year," coach Jim Moore said. "All I've really done, so far, is make sure that we went out and competed.

"I'd be lying if I said that I didn't want to be successful the rest of the way."

Moore said winning after the good start will not be easy.

"People are going to start to pay attention to us," he said. "Now, it's going to be more difficult."

The first test in the tournament for K-State was Cal-State Fullerton, who entered the game with an 0-4 record.

The Cats jumped on Cal-State from the opening serve as they won the first two games, 15-4 and 15-9.

Cal-State made a comeback bid, and won the third game, 15-10. However, the Cats shut the door with a 15-8 win in the fourth.

Yolanda Young led the Cats in kills with 12, and Kate DeClerk had three blocks. Chi Dau and Devon Ryning combined for 38 assists.

In the Cats' next match, the hometown Oregon State Beavers welcomed K-State, and they weren't very hospitable as they dominated the Cats, 15-4, 15-7 and 15-1.

Moore said Oregon State was an extremely efficient team.

"They were a very disciplined team and they executed well," Moore said. "My offense is high risk anyway, and since we're still learning it, we're going to be error prone.

"When we face an error-free team, it's going to be difficult."

Moore said he was pleased with his team at the beginning of the match.

"Up to the Oregon State match, we hadn't really tried anything tactical," he said. "We tried to run the offense against what defense they were showing.

"We did a pretty good job, but we just couldn't sustain it."

K-State rebounded in their next match as they dismantled Portland 15-9, 15-12 and 15-11.

Young led in kills again with 11 spikes, and Dau scorched four service aces. Ryning recorded 33 assists to help K-State to the win.

The last opponent the Cats faced was Eastern Washington.

After winning the first game, 15-13, the Cats traded off games with Eastern Washington until the Cats won a nail-biter in the fifth. The final scores were 15-13, 5-15, 15-5, 8-15 and 15-12.

Moore said Jill Dugan contributed in a big way in the match.

"She played exceptionally well," he said. "She's starting to do the things that helped us win against a very good team."

Dugan had six kills, two service aces, 14 digs and five blocks.

Young provided 22 kills, while Ryning had 37 assists, three service aces and two solo blocks.

"A lot of people played well," Moore said. "Yolanda Young and Kate DeClerk made the all-tournament team and Devon Ryning is starting to come into her own.

"Devon set most of the tournament and she played very well."

Financial woes grip athletic department

"We're running in a deficit situation this year that will probably run around $600,000 to $650,000."

MAX URICK
K-State
Athletic Director

NICOLE POELL
Collegian

This is the first in a two-part series on the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics' budget.

These days, one of K-State athletic director Max Urick's biggest concerns is the weather.

"I just wish I had a crystal ball to know what the weather's going to be like on game days," Urick said. "I mean, if we have a series of bad, rainy Saturdays — that can have an impact."

Why would something as seemingly insignificant as Manhattan's weekend forecast worry Urick?

It's because the weather equals a loss in game-day attendance, just one factor that could mean the difference between the K-State athletic department being a few thousand dollars in the red or the black.

Right now, it's the amount of money in the red that has Urick watching every dollar going into and out of the athletic department's budget.

"We're running in a deficit situation this year that will probably run around $600,000 to $650,000 dollars," Urick said.

K-State's financial woes began to escalate last spring, he said, when the Big Eight Conference failed to generate its projected revenue.

"When we saw that our Big Eight Conference revenue was not coming in this spring, that's when we said, 'Oh hell,'" Urick said.

But a shortfall of $600,000 dollars in conference revenue wasn't the only factor affecting the Wildcat budget.

The transition of two different coaching staffs, in men's basketball and women's volleyball, within the athletic department also accounted for some of the loss.

"We don't plan on coaching turnover when we make our yearly budget projections," Urick said. "An example would be the turnover of the men's basketball staff and a turnover of the women's volleyball staff.

"We don't budget for interviewing expenses, so when those things occur, we have to pay them, and that's when we can end up with a loss through the course of the year."

While Urick said these unforeseen expenses did the most damage to the budget, he said funds within the department could have been handled more effectively.

"I think it was a combination of both these factors," he said. "You don't count on a boiler in the Vanier building blowing, which was just one of those unexpected things. I would also say that some of our coaches did not do a very good job managing their own units as well."

"All of our coaches are given a plan on what we expect their expenses to be, and how we expect them to work within that plan."

"If something comes up that deviates from that plan, then we need to talk about where that money is going to come from. We can, and I hope we will, do a better job of handling those expenses," he said.

One of the ways Urick will handle his department's own expenses this year is with cutbacks, something he said he doesn't look forward to.

"It's something I don't want to do and don't enjoy," he said.

"But we're going to take a two and a half

BUDGET STATISTICS

- The athletic department is currently around $600,00 to $650,000 in deficit
- The athletic department will have to make a two and half percent cutback in operation to meet the projected future budget
- Athletic department staff only received a one and half percent raise this past year

Learning a work ethic

WESS HUDELSON
Collegian

Picture a person who throws hay bales, drives tractors and loves animals.

Jeanene Rugan, a senior from a few miles south of Ellinwood, said growing up on a farm has instilled a work ethic in her most runners don't have.

"I always had responsibilities on the farm," Rugan said. "There was always a lot to do, and I had to learn how to keep up with it all."

The thick, sandy roads around the farm has offered Rugan a unique setting to train in during the summer as well. The roads around the farm are covered six inches deep with sand blown from the nearby Arkansas River.

ONE on ONE

Rugan said she trained in the sand nearly every day since her career during her freshman year of high school.

"I definitely consider it to be a hill workout even though we don't have many hills back home," Rugan said.

Rugan said there aren't too many people to run with when she is home in Ellinwood. So in order to ease some of the monotony, her dog, Bobo, joins her during training.

Bobo, a rat terrier, is one of several dogs at the Rugan farm, but is the only one that can last the duration of the workouts, Rugan said.

"I try to catch him most of the time," she said.

"He always pushes ahead, and he usually beats me."

CRAIG HACKER/Collegian

Jeanene Rugan stretches out before cross country practice last week. Rugan is considered to be one of the top runners in the Big Eight Conference. Last season, Rugan earned a trip to the NCAA Cross Country Championships and was a member of the 1992 Big Eight championship team.

Rugan's unique training habits have paid off.

In her senior year at Ellinwood High School, Rugan captured state titles in cross country, the 1,500 meters and the 3,000 meters in track.

Last season, Rugan earned a trip to the NCAA Cross Country Championships and was a member of the 1992 Big Eight championship team.

Despite all the races she has participated in and the accomplishments she has earned, Rugan said she finds herself as K-State's front runner for the first time.

"When I was a freshman, I always looked up to the older people on the team, and now that is me," Rugan said. "We have a lot of people on the team who could be front runners, but I enjoy being a leader."

Rugan has assumed the leadership role from her former roommate, Paulette Staats, who finished her career at K-State after cross country concluded last year.

"We could really use her this year," she said.

"We have a pretty solid team, but I think Paulette would double the security."

Although cross country seems to be an individual sport, Rugan said one of her biggest goals for the year is team-oriented.

"A Big Eight title would mean everything to me," Rugan said about the upcoming Big Eight Championships, will take place at Warner Park on Oct. 29.

Last spring, Coach Terry Drake had planned to redshirt Rugan during the cross country season, but after a good recruiting year, they decided she should run.

"I feel we have a good chance to win the Big Eight this year, especially since it's in Manhattan," Rugan said.

"That's part of the reason I decided to come back."

Rugan said the road to the Big Eight meet is long and filled with practices where inspiration is hard to find.

"Some days you feel like you just don't want to run," Rugan said, "but if we have a really hard practice planned, Coach Drake usually takes us somewhere to make it more fun."

The team has traveled to the Konza Prairie, City Park and Warner Park for workouts.

"Running for me is free time to be alone and clear my brain," she said.

"I kind of enjoy running by myself sometimes."

Above all else, the competition drives Rugan to keep practicing, The nice country girl from central Kansas has another side on the race course.

"I think I do have a split personality," Rugan said. "When I race, I'm really focused and competitive."

After cross country and track are finished, Rugan, a kinesiology major, said she wants to cling to her roots on the farm.

"I could see myself staying in Kansas, hopefully with a job in fitness and living in the country with a lot of animals," Rugan said.

True to her roots, Rugan said she wants to be remembered as someone who worked hard all the time.

"I want to be remembered as a person who is enthusiastic and just went out and did things," she said.

Rice's offense shows multiple formations

JULIE KULHMAN
Collegian

The Rice Owls, from the Southwest Conference, are coming to K-State this weekend looking for their first win after losing 15-13 to Tulane last Saturday.

The Owls' coach Ken Hatfield has put together back-to-back 6-5 seasons the last two years at Clemson.

Their offense is the spread option, but they will have some wishbone, run-and-shoot and one-back formations as well.

K-State coach Bill Snyder said the Owls' attack is tough to defend.

"Rice has the type of offense that will spread you out, very similar to Iowa State," Snyder said. "Everyone on defense will have a role they need to carry out or else it will be a long game."

After sitting out last season because of a shoulder injury he suffered against Duke in 1992, LaRocca is back, and he is expected to be operating at 100 percent.

LaRocca completed 106 of 202 attempts for 1,263 yards and six touchdowns in 1992.

"LaRocca is a very confident thrower and has ability to throw well in the play action pass situation," Snyder said.

When the Owls are trying to pass, LaRocca could have some trouble, because the Owls' roster is lacking in depth. They also show much inexperience on the line as Rice returns only starter on the offensive line from last season, guard Bobby Gray, is the only returner.

The Owls placed last year's top running back Yoncy Edmonds in a reserve role after two off-season ankle injuries.

Edmond's rushed for 941 yards last season, along with seven touchdowns for the Owls last season.

In his place, Byron Coston and Spencer George will be the two starting backs in Saturday's game.

Last season Coston picked up 437 yards on 87 attempts, while George had 65 yards in 27 rushes.

Snyder said he still sees Rice's running game as a threat.

"LaRocca will enhance the running game with anyone in the backfield," he said.

Receivers Johnny Lee and Emerson Allen could also be a threat. Lee was the Owls' top receiver last season, snagging 36 catches for 365 yards, while Allen grabbed 25 passes for 293 yards.

Rice's defense and special teams could give the Cats a tough challenge because they return many starters.

Leading the group is senior linebacker Emmett Waldron, a pre-season all-SWC pick who is only 117 tackles away from breaking the school record.

K-State will also have to deal with the experience of defensive ends Deric Rutherford, who weighs 240 pounds this season, and tackle Brynton Goynes.

Rutherford has started 21 straight games, while Goynes has appeared in 11 games.

Walk-on nose-guard Larry Thompson has earned the right to step on the field first, and the other end, Ndukwe Kalu led the Owl defensive linemen in pass deflections last year.

The secondary also has two solid returnees in safety Jeff Sowells and cornerback Bobby Dixon.

"They have balance in their defense we'll have to overcome," Snyder said.

Punter Tucker Phillips and kicker Johnny Bagwell will keep the kicking team strong again this year for Rice.

Phillips received all-SWC mention in the preseason, and he averaged 36 yards on punts last year.

COLLEGIAN STAFF

The K-State football team hit another off-field road block at 12:43 a.m. Thursday morning.

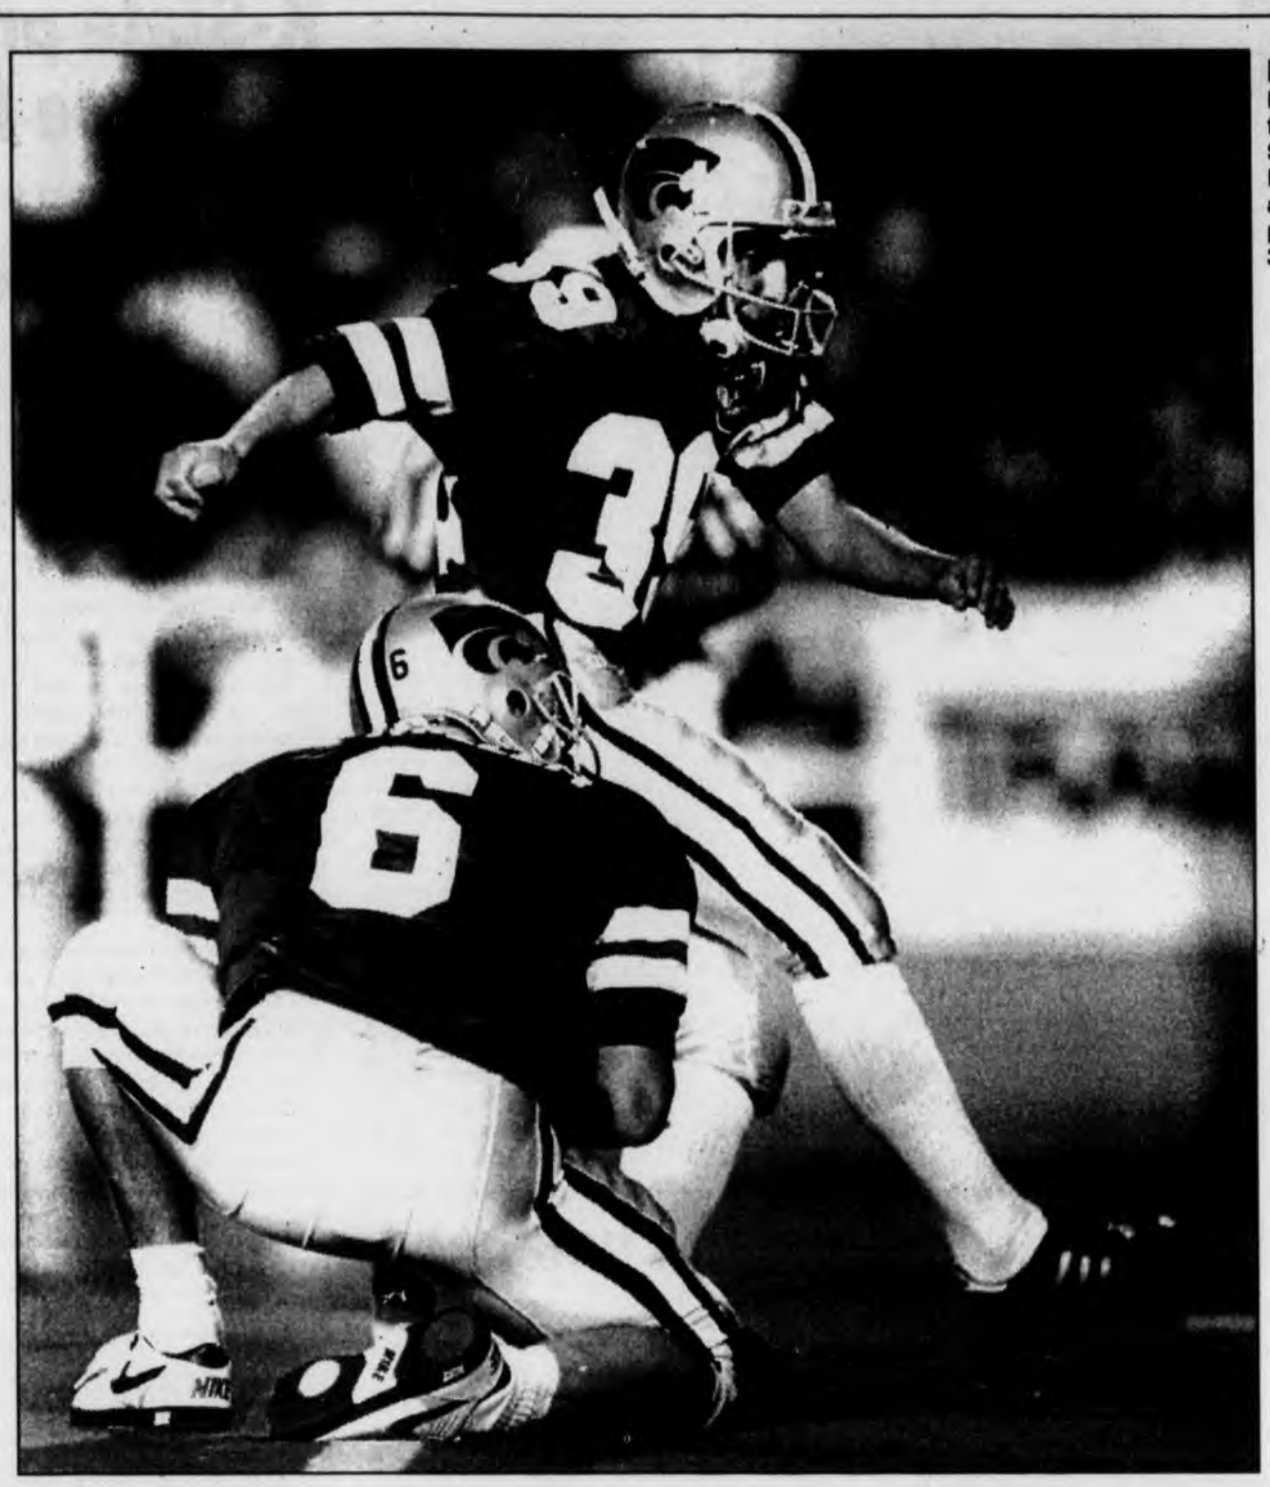
Hanks was arrested after he was involved in a one-car accident at 1515 Leavenworth St.

According to the police report, Hanks' car suffered major damage, and he refused treatment for knee pain.

He was later released on $500 bond.



Hanks is scheduled to appear for arraignment at 8:15 a.m. Thursday.

Bernard Irvine will prosecute the case.

He is the same prosecutor that tried the Chad May case last summer.

Coach Bill Snyder was unavailable for comment.

Hanks, originally from Manhattan, saw considerable playing time last season. He also started at free safety in the Wildcats' first game against Southwestern Louisiana.

Gramatica has immediate effect

DEREK SIMMONS
Collegian

K-State placekicker Martin Gramatica's celebration might have seemed a bit bizzare in the Wildcats opening game.

The 5-foot-9, 160-pound freshman, who was born in Argentina, was elated after kicking a 23-yard field goal to boost K-State to a 10-0 lead against Southwestern Louisiana in the first quarter.

But the field goal was Gramatica's first as a collegian, and after all, this is only his second year of playing football.

"I was just pleased that our holder caught him when he jumped off the ground. I was afraid he was going to get hurt," Coach Bill Snyder said, whose Cats posted a 34-6 victory in front of an opening-game record 38,216 fans.

"I was pleased for him — he's a cute little guy," Snyder said.

"He hit the ball well and through the uprights. We've had times when we have struggled with that."

Gramatica said he spent most of his life playing soccer. It wasn't until his senior year at LaBelle (Fla.) High School that he gave kicking a football a chance.

Snyder had expressed concern for the kicking game before the season, considering the kickers' lack of experience.

"The first game, you never know how anybody will respond — especially a true freshman," Snyder said. "I thought he handled the pressure of the whole thing very well."

Gramatica kicked two field goals and four extra points without a miss. His second field goal, a 25-yarder, finished the Cats' scoring in the fourth quarter.

Gramatica said he never imagined playing football at a Division I school.

"I thought it was going to be worse than it really was," Gramatica said. "It really didn't bother me much. Just the thought of kicking at a Division I school, I really couldn't believe where I was."

Gramatica said his first field-goal attempt, which took place midway through the first stanza, was when he tensed up.

"The first kick was the hardest one," he said.

"After I got through that one, I got real relaxed, and I didn't even see the crowd."

Schools like Notre Dame, Michigan State and West Virginia had developed an interest in Gramatica.

However he said he was attracted to the atmosphere at K-State, even though some people in Florida didn't understand it.

"For me, it was mainly the coaches and the players that I met on my visit," he said. "It was just so nice, and I had a great time."

"A lot of people asked me, 'How can you do that?' I just said I was going to be there for four years, and I wanted to go somewhere that I liked. When I told people I was going to Kansas, they thought I was going to be a Jayhawk. So not many people know about Kansas State."

Snyder said Gramatica still approaches a football like a soccer ball because he has spent so much of his life playing soccer.

"He's very much soccer oriented," Snyder said.

"Here's a guy who has played soccer and hasn't really played football. For all practical purposes, it's still a black and white ball, and it is round."

K-State will play host to Rice on Saturday at 1:10 p.m. The Cats have moved to No. 21 in the USA Today/CNN Coaches' Poll.

"I was just pleased that our holder caught him when he jumped off the ground. I was afraid he was going to get hurt."

THE MATCH-UP

DEFENSE

POSITION		K-State	Rice
LINE	The K-State defensive line rates as one of the best in the Big Eight Conference. Returners Tim Colston and Darrell Harbert anchor the tackle positions for the Wildcats. Rice is led by defensive end Deric Rutherford.	☑	☐
LINEBACKERS	K-State's Percell Gaskins is one of the best linebackers in the league. Emmett Waldron is the Owls' top linebacker.	☑	☐
SECONDARY	Rice has two solid returners with Jeff Sowells and Bobby Dixon. The K-State secondary is young, but they performed well against USL.	☐	☑

INTANGIBLES

AREA		K-State	Rice
MOMENTUM	The Cats have the momentum as they defeated Southwestern Louisiana 34-6, but Rice lost to Tulane last week. K-State is still riding high after last season, and Rice is trying to get back at .500.	☑	☐
COACHING	Both coaches in this match-up have proven they can turn around a program. K-State coach Bill Snyder has a .500 record. Rice coach Ken Hatfield is in his first season, but he has also turned around two programs.	☑	☐
THE EDGE	The Cats will have the advantage in this game for several reasons. The first is the Cats are at home, and K-State has too much depth and speed for the Owls to compete with.	☑	☐

OFFENSE

POSITION		K-State	Rice
LINE	Tackles Barrett Brooks and Jim Hmielewski are considered to be one of the best tackle duos in the league. Rice has only one returning starter in Bobby Gray.	☑	☐
WIDE RECEIVERS/ TIGHT ENDS	K-State receivers didn't skip a beat in their first game as Tyson Schwieger and Ron Brown combined for 10 catches and over 140 yards receiving. K-State also has Kevin Lockett as a deep threat. Rice receivers Johnny Lee and Emerson Allen are the Owls' top threats.	☑	☐
RUNNING BACKS	J.J. Smith was unable to get on track against Southwestern Louisiana, but he has the potential to break loose at anytime. Rice features a run-orientated attack, but the Owls lost its top rusher from last season.	☑	☐
QUARTERBACKS	Chad May led the Cats to their 14th-straight home victory two weeks ago.He is considered to be one of the top quarterbacks in the Big Eight. Rice quarterback Josh LaRocca passed for 1,263 yards in 1992, but he missed last season due to an injury.	☑	☐

SPECIAL TEAMS

POSITION		K-State	Rice
PUNTING	Rice punter Tucker Phillips earned all-SWC honors last season, averaging 36 yards a punt. There still is competition for K-State's starting punting position. The competition is between Chad Romano and Eric Hardy. Romano started last season, but Hardy started in the Cats' first game.	☐	☑
PLACE KICKING	K-State has seemed to have found the perfect replacement for Tate Wright. Martin Gramatica stepped in the first game and kicked two field goals and four extra points. The Owls are led by Johnny Bagewell, who started last season.	☑	☐

▶ TENNIS UPDATE

Tennis team finally gets to practice

NICOLE POELL
Collegian

After waiting all summer, the moment K-State tennis coach Steve Bietau was waiting for finally arrived last week.

He got to watch his players practice.

Sept. 7 was the first day Bietau's team could start organized practice in preparation for its first meet of the year, the K-State Travelers' Express Invitational on Sept. 24 and 25.

While Wednesday's practice was mainly for testing purposes, Bietau said he was excited to watch his players.

"I'm anxious to get started," he said. "I know that there's been more work going on outside with our players than we've ever had before, in both the weight room and getting time in on the court."

The players weren't actually on the court very much in the first initial workouts, but that should change in upcoming weeks.

"We do a lot of testing these first few practices, doing things like running, strength testing and agilities," Bietau said.

"This is just to measure where everybody's at after the summer. We get out on the track for awhile, hit the weight room for awhile, then go out on the court after that's all taken care of.

"We'll eventually spend 12-13 hours a week in on-court practice hitting tennis balls, then the rest of it will be a combination of lifting and running," he said.

While Bietau will be evaluating all of his players at this time, he said he's especially interested in how his new members perform.

"I'm anxious to get started. I know there's been more work going on outside with our players than we've ever had before."

STEVE BIETAU
K-State tennis coach

"We've got a couple newcomers this year — Chris Schulte from Salina and Dinah Watson from England," Bietau said.

"Chris didn't have all the advantages, all the access to the training and good competition every day that she's going to have here, so I think that's going to be a real benefit for her."

Bietau said Schulte has worked hard.

"She has some steps to take herself as a competitive player," Bietau said. "But all the personal characteristics, I think, are in place that would indicate that she's going to do that. Her enthusiasm level is very high, and she really wants to be a good player."

With Schulte living so close, Bietau said he knew a lot about her even before he started recruiting. That wasn't the case, however, with Watson.

"I know a little less about Dinah, since she's coming to us from England," he said. "With the international players, you don't get the entire picture until you get on the court and start working."

"I heard about her through some contacts I had, from coaches I know in Europe and from a former player who's from England. We know Dinah's a good player, and I think she'll challenge for one of our top three positions."

Bietau is also keeping an eye on one of his proven players, junior Karina Kuregian, who still faces an uncertain future after having back surgery this summer.

"I think when you consider that it's just been three months since her back surgery, she's doing pretty well," he said. "She looks good on the court right now, but about the only thing we could do wrong is try to go too fast, so we're going to have to be careful about that."

"She's still untested in a match situation, but we're getting closer to doing that. She's getting stronger every day, and she's working hard."

K-State prepares for Great Plains Lacrosse League competition

Team will host the Donnie Tiller Lacrosse Classic on Oct. 8-9

TRACEY STINSON
Collegian

K-State's lacrosse team began practicing last week for its fall season.

The Wildcats have been practicing four times a week to prepare for this season's games.

"Not everyone has the same schedule, but we usually have around 30 or 35 guys at practice," Coach Kurt Thurman said.

The team practices and plays most of its home games at Memorial Stadium, Thurman said.

The league comprises some Big Eight Conference schools, including K-State, Kansas, Nebraska, Oklahoma State and Missouri.

The Great Plains Lacrosse League plays its regular season during the spring, but there will be some games this fall, Thurman said.

The team's first game is scheduled for mid-September.

Brian Frownfelter, senior in landscape architecture, said he is ready for the season.

"I think that if our practices keep going good, that with the skill and dedication we have, we will be winning," Frownfelter said.

The Cats will be competing in several tournaments this fall.

In addition to playing in area tournaments, they will travel to St. Louis and College Station, Texas, for tournaments.

K-State will play host to the second annual Donnie Tillar Lacrosse Classic on Oct. 8-9.

The tournament is named in honor of the first K-State lacrosse coach, who was killed during the Gulf War.

Thurman said Tillar was very motivating to the players.

"The team does not want his influence on K-State lacrosse to be forgotten," Thurman said.

Last spring the Cats captured third place in the Final Four tournament, which is held at the end of the regular season.

With the third place finish the Cats ended their season with a 7-2 recornd, and 6-1 record league play.

"I'm happy with the 7-2 record last year," Thurman said.

"That along with our 6-1 league record made the season a succesful one."

K-State's season highlights included several blowout victories, and a few narrow victories.

The Cats' largest margin of victory came against Nebraka, when they defeated the Cornhuskers 14-1.

K-State also had a big victory against Kansas in Lawrence.

The Cats won the game 8-5, but the game was closer than the final indicated.

Also, the game brought tempers between the two teams.

"Tempers always flare in the KU-K-State game," Thurman said. "They've always been a bunch of hot heads."

Other highlights for the lacrosse team during the spring season included a two victory trip to Oklahoma.

During the trip, the Cats defeated Tusla 15-8, and then they beat Oklahoma State 8-4.

The Cats only league loss came against Kansas City. K-State lost 7-5, in a close game.

"We would get the shots, but they just wouldn't go in," Thurman said.

"It was a tough game."

percent cutback in our operations within the athletic department to help meet the shortfall and to meet our budget projections for the coming years."

To help meet these needs Urick said the athletic department will have to operate within their own means.

"While the rest of the campus took a three-percent-plus raise this year, we went with a minimal raise of one and a half percent," he said. "Because we operate on generated money and not allocated money, we have no choice but to live within our means.

"While I'd like to give everyone in our department a 7-percent raise, we just don't have the money to do that this year."

What Urick and other members of the athletic department will be doing throughout the course of the year is continually analyzing the different variables that affect the budget.

"We're kind of on a six-month plan," Urick said.

"Come January, we'll know how one of our most significant streams of revenue turned out, which is football. We'll know then how we came out on attendance on that."

Urick said Big Eight television revenue could help the athletic deparment's budget.

"We'll also know our Big Eight revenues on football based on how many conference teams are on TV, how many teams are in post-season bowls and the revenues from those, which we all get a share of."

While Urick said he and the entire department understand the tremendous task ahead of them, he said they try to keep their goals in perspective.

"So much of whether we do well depends on other people," Urick said.

"But there are just certain things that are out of your control. You just have to do the best you can, knowing full well that there is going to be something that happens and you don't know what or when that's going to be."

Urick said there is still some hope for the athletic department.

"I'm cautiously optimistic," Urick said.

"Sure, there's pressure to do this, but that's our job, so we'll do our very best to get it done."

Fire-fighting soldiers return

Soldiers accomplish mission; permission for early leave granted

JENNIFER PETERSON
Collegian

After battling forest fires in Idaho for 21 days, Fort Riley soldiers returned home Wednesday.

Although they were scheduled to be in Idaho for 30 days, the soldiers accomplished their mission on two fires and were given permission to leave, Col. Thomas Bastick, task force commander, said.

The 536 soldiers fought a fire in Idaho City, Idaho, called the Rabbit Creek fire, for 14 days and a fire in McCall, Idaho, the Corral Blackwell fire, for a week, Bastick said.

"The fires were fought almost exclusively on the ground," Bastick said.

The soldiers wore fire-proof suits similar to what helicopter pilots wear, he said.

In addition, Bastick said, the soldiers were provided with new mountain boots.

"There was some concern that the heels of the regular issue boots would melt and fall apart because of the intense heat and the rough terrain," Bastick said.

Sgt. Carl Curtis said the soldiers worked hard.

"We had to work 12-hour days, but everyone seemed to cope real well," Curtis said.

"There is always danger involved with fighting fires," Bastick said, even though the soldiers were never in any type of serious danger.

The soldiers built safe lines around the fires with hand tools, but there was a chance hot embers could blow over the safe lines, Bastick said.

Civilian professional firefighters accompanied the troops on all of their missions, Bastick said.

"They (the firefighters) showed us the way," Pfc. Eric Tharpe said.

The fires weren't as bad as they thought they would be, Staff Sgt. Michael Hurd said.

"It wasn't total devastation. It was more spotty," Hurd said.

The fires seemed to be contained when the soldiers left Idaho, Bastick said.

"There was a good amount of rain the day we were leaving, but I don't know if it's enough to have a significant impact," Bastick said.

"The town didn't seem to sense a problem with the fire," Bastick said.

"They've been through these fires before, and I didn't notice any anxiety," he said.

The people in the town were very appreciative of the soldiers, Bastick said.

On one of their days off, a couple of soldiers from the Engineering Brigade ran into professional basketball star Karl Malone at a sports store in town, Bastick said.

Malone said to the soldiers they could buy whatever they wanted, and it was on him, Bastick said.

The soldiers bought $1,300 of softball and football equipment and a volleyball net, Bastick said.

Specialist Travis Guyne is welcomed home to Fort Riley by his 19-month-old daughter, Brittany. Members of the First Infantry Division Engineer Brigade returned from fighting forest fires in Idaho Wednesday afternoon.

Invasion rings in Haiti's ears

ASSOCIATED PRESS

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti — Tension mounted Wednesday as low-flying planes dropped American propaganda leaflets on the Haitian capital and a U.S. warship steamed within sight of the port.

Capital Police Chief, Michel Francois, was heard on the police band ordering soldiers to shoot at the aircraft as they flew over at 2:45 a.m., according to a resident who spoke to the Associated Press on condition of anonymity.

"The United States is putting pressure on the army. In return, the (Haitian) army is putting pressure on us," said Merizier Merilus, 35, president of the neighborhood association of Bel Air, a stronghold of exiled President Jean-Bertrand Aristide. "Our lives are in danger."

Ultranationalist politician, Vladimir Jeanty, who heard the planes fly over his roof in the Delmas section of the capital, said Wednesday, "The sound of invasion is already in our ears."

The United States has intensified its psychological warfare against Haiti's military rulers in recent weeks, warning military action could come soon.

Fifteen U.S. warships are patrolling offshore, and Pentagon officials are sending two aircraft carriers to join them. A dozen reserve U.S. ships have been activated to send material to Haiti if needed.

Two Army Blackhawk helicopters flew over the capital Wednesday.

In response to the escalation, both the army high command and the Cabinet of the de facto government of

TERRY SCRUTON
Collegian

Making policies is not the hard part of dealing with sexual violence, Judy Davis, Women's Resource Center director, said at an informal question-and-answer session Wednesday afternoon.

The session was offered to address K-State's sexual-violence policy at 4:30 p.m. at the Women's Resource Center.

Davis, Diane Urban, students' attorney, Jennifer Kassebaum, assistant university attorney and Susan Scott, associate dean of student life were present at the session.

"The hardest part is what we do as community members with the attitudes we portray toward women and sexual violence," Davis said.

The four women fielded questions from an audience of two.

Scott cited a study among males who had committed what the law defines as rape. According to the study, one in 12 of these males did not consider what they did as rape.

"If one in 12 men are not recognizing the fact that what they did was rape," she said, "then something is wrong."

Scott said that we, as a community, must take responsibility for changing the social climate.

Davis said she agreed with her.

"We live in a society that encourages and sometimes glorifies sexual violence," Davis said. "There are things we can do every day to change this. We all have the capacity for influence among our peers."

Davis said one thing that can be done is for people in the community to volunteer their time with groups such as the Women's Resource Center and PEERS, a rape education program sponsored by the center.

Davis said she wants to encourage anyone to volunteer.

"We're looking for more than a few good men," she said.

Issues discussed specifically regarding the sexual-violence policy were jurisdiction of the University and where the K-State Police fit in to the policy.

The question was posed as to whether the University had jurisdiction over a rape that occurred off campus.

Kassebaum said it was a matter of legal and practical questions.

"I think, legally, the University could take action (if a complaint were filed by a victim) in such a case," she said, "but it's a question of whether or not it would be practical to try to police what students do off campus."

According the policy, the University has control over what happens off campus if it occurs at a University function.

As far as the role of the campus police, they only investigate if criminal charges are filed.

CU students wield control of rape policy

ANNETTE RIEDL

This is the final part in the series on the sexual-assault policies at Big Eight schools.

Victim of sexual assaults maintain a great deal of control at the University of Colorado.

Catherine Marquis, director of the office of student conduct, said victims have the option of reporting the crime, but asking the office not to pursue it.

If the victim does pursue it, Marquis said, then the defendant goes through the criminal process as well as the university's process.

She said charges are filed against the student by the office of student conduct, not the accuser.

The accused student is notified in writing on what the charges are, Marquis said.

The office of student conduct will begin an investigation, she said.

If the investigation indicates the student violated a code, there is a hearing.

If the defendant accepts the university's ruling, the case is closed. If the student rejects it, the student has a new hearing in front of the Administrative Board of Student Conduct, Marquis said. The defendant can accept the ruling or appeal it.

sexual VIOLENCE policy

City and state statutes dictate the actions taken by Colorado's campus police, Geneal Watts, campus police assistant, said.

She said when a sexual violence crime is reported, a report is made and an investigation started.

An all-University Career Fair will bring more than 140 companies to campus Thursday, Sept. 29, Karen Pence, assistant dean of the College of Human Ecology, said.

Career and Employment Services is offering students the opportunity to register on a computer disc before the career fair, James Akin, director of Career and Employment Services, said.

"The importance of the disc is that it provides profiles of the students to the companies. The company representatives will receive the profiles as they arrive," Akin said.

The disc sells for $7 and can be purchased in Holtz Hall, Akin said. The deadline for completing the disc is Friday, Sept. 16 by 5 p.m.

For students interested in participating in the fair, Career and Employment Services is also offering several workshops, Tracey Fraser, assistant director of Career and Employment Services, said.

A workshop, titled "How to Work a Career Fair," will take place at 2:30 p.m. Thursday, Sept. 22 in Denison 224, and at 6:30 p.m. Monday, Sept. 26 in Union 213, Fraser said.

▶ MASS BECOMES A WEIGHTY SUBJECT FOR HUMOROUS NOBEL PRIZE WINNER

Let there be mass.

Leon Lederman, professor of physics at Illinois Institute of Technology, will speak on "The God Particle" at the first in the series of Convocations Lectures at 10:30 a.m. Friday in McCain Auditorium.

"We all have mass. When we stand on a scale, sometimes we wish we had less," Bill Reay, professor of physics, said.

"No one knows where it comes from. If people discover this particle, we would understand where our mass comes from," Reay said.

Lederman's speech will focus on his discovery of the muon neutrino, a very small particle, for which he won the 1988 Nobel Prize.

"Mass comes in a certain way. The same theory involves this particle," Reay said.

The lecture is not geared for physicists only, James Legg, physics professor, said. High school students will be coming from 300 miles away to listen to Lederman.

"He is aware that he will have a bunch of high school students in the audience," Legg said. "So if he's speaking to make these students understand, then K-State students should be able to understand."

This does not mean his speech will not be intellectual, Legg said.

"He thinks things through very well," he said.

"He does not talk down to his audience. That's what makes him a good speaker, an understandable speaker."

Lederman is flying to K-State from Europe, where he was speaking about this particle on France's equivalent of "60 Minutes," Reay said.

He said Lederman has the ability and personality to make physics interesting.

"Everyone has a card file of some kind, whether it's recipes or phone numbers. Leon Lederman has a card file of jokes," Reay said. "He can probably work and be just as at home on 'Saturday Night Live.'"

Following the lecture, Lederman will attend a luncheon for the high school students.

"He has a broad range of interests," Reay said. "Right now, his range includes how to bring science to everybody."

Sigma Phi Epsilon honors first student body president

SERA L. TANK
Collegian

K-State's first student body president visited the Sigma Phi Epsilon fraternity Wednesday.

Judge Earle Wesley Frost, class of 1920 alumnus and former member of Sigma Phi Epsilon, came to see the Frost Room, the room that Sig Eps dedicated to Judge Frost.

"The fraternity has named their chapter room the Frost Room. It's really a great honor," Frost said.

Danny Chiles, alumni coordinator for the Sig Eps and sophomore in business administration, said the room was dedicated to Frost because he served as grand national president for the fraternity.

"We thought we would dedicate this room to him because of all the hard work he did for the fraternity," Chiles said.

Since Frost is unable to travel very much, Chiles said the fraternity was happy he got to see the room.

"Now that he's getting older, he only gets to see the alumni newsletter, so we just wanted him to come by and see the house one more time," Chiles said.

Frost stopped by the fraternity house on way to his family home in Marshall County.

"My son and my sister are going to see the old Frost farm right near Blue Rapids that was built by my grandfather in 1870," Frost said.

Frost was elected to be the first student body president in 1919 and served until 1920.

"There had been no student governing body before that, so we got together and worked very strenuously in working out a constitution and by-laws."

Frost's year as student body president was easy, he said.

"I didn't have to really do very much work because I had good committee chairmen," Frost said. The biggest problem he and his committee members had to deal with in 1919 was discipline, he said.

"Near a park, there were some soldiers from Fort Riley, and they liked to indulge in gambling. One student was there at the time, and he had to be disciplined by being suspended for two weeks."

After leaving K-State, Frost went to law school at Columbia University School of Law.

"My father had put me through K-State, and I couldn't ask him to put me through law school. He was a state senator, and he didn't like lawyers because he didn't like to compromise," Frost said.

After he graduated from law school, Frost said he got a job in Kansas City, Mo., working for $60 per month.

"It wasn't long until I was appointed assistant prosecuting attorney in Kansas City."

Frost said he opened his own practice for a while and then was appointed municipal judge of Kansas City.

"I was a judge for 27 years," he said. "That's the longest tenure of any elected official of Kansas City, Mo."

Judge Earl Wesley Frost, class of 1920, visited Sigma Phi Epsilon Wednesday as the fraternity dedicated its chapter room to him. Frost was K-State's first student boy president and a member of the fraternity.

Art students are paying for poor planning

You can get an A, but it'll cost you.

They are being charged $10 per tape to review slides for the tests during the semester.

In past semesters, the slide review was available on the fifth floor of Farrell Library for students enrolled in the class to view for free at their leisure.

Now, not only are students having to purchase approximately $100 worth of text books, but also, they are asked to purchase three tapes and pay a total of $30 plus tax for a semester's worth of tapes to review for tests.

The charge of $10 per tape translates into $6,000 for the semester, provided that each of the approximate 200 students in the class purchases the three tapes.

With the closing of the audio/visual floor of Farrell, it would seem someone would have had enough forethought to establish an alternative location for the viewing of slides and films required for certain classes.

The lack of planning has resulted in students having to come up with a few more extra dollars to finance their attendance at K-State.

Max Pfrang, staff assistant in education instruction support, said the reason for the charge is to cover costs involved in producing the tapes.

Granted, not every person in the class will purchase the tapes.

More than likely, one out of every three will, which would bring the total down to $2,000 for the semester — more than enough to cover any production costs.

A single $10 fee for each student wanting the tapes would be a little more reasonable.

Kansas space is limited; recycle your stuff

SCOTT ALLEN MILLER

Here in the rolling and open expanses of Kansas, the idea that garbage landfill space is dwindling seems absurd at first.

However, Kansas does indeed have the makings of a landfill space problem.

Manhattan already sends its garbage to the Perry landfill site because its own landfill is full. Exporting the trash has caused garbage-removal costs to jump dramatically.

Carol Shanklin, waste management expert and professor in hotel, restaurant, institutional management and dietetics, said waste-disposal costs have doubled in the past two years.

One way to keep garbage-collection costs down and to look out for the environment is recycling.

The myth persists that Kansas can continue to dump all of its garbage in landfills indefinitely.

Kansas is not desperate for landfill space yet, and garbage-collection bills aren't outrageously high yet.

However, people in more densely-populated states like New Jersey, where recycling is mandatory, have learned by high garbage-collection fees just how limited landfill space really is.

Residents, businesses and institutions there gladly sort out recyclables, put them in designated receptacles or dumpsters and have them picked up as conveniently as any other kind of trash.

Recycling is convenient and inexpensive there.

In Kansas, most people don't recycle because it isn't prioritized, it's not the law, and it isn't as convenient as throwing all garbage out together.

Students living on campus have access to recycling bins, but recycling hasn't been so simple for people off campus. For them, recycling has meant driving to the southeast side of town to Howie's Recycling. It's not a daunting task, but it's not as easy as tossing that pop can in with the other garbage and forgetting about it.

Now, thanks to the entrepreneurship of a K-State student, recycling is easier than it has ever been before in Manhattan.

Randy Harris, junior in physical education, has started a curb-side recycling business. For $5 a month, Randy's Recycling Pick-up Service will haul away recyclable garbage in much the same way other garbage is collected. Recycling in Manhattan is now as convenient as paying a reasonable fee, sorting it out, and setting it out.

Randy's Recycling Pick-up Service operates with no burdensome subsidies, bureaucracies or mandates from the government. This business is yet more proof that the needs of capitalism and environmentalism are mutual, not mutually exclusive.

Excuses for not recycling are getting rarer.

If you live in a residence hall, use those recycling bins. If you're off campus, consider using Harris' service. If you can't afford it, go to Howie's and recycle for free. There are also recycling dumpsters in the parking lot of Hypermart USA in Topeka. Finally, the green Wal-Mart in Lawrence recycles nearly anything made of glass, paper, plastic, or metal cans.

Whatever your circumstances, please do something. If you don't, there will be less landfill space for unrecyclable garbage and, therefore, higher garbage-collection bills to pay every month.

Hopefully, Kansas won't have to be in a landfill-space crisis like the Northeastern states are before implementing more recycling programs. Kansas is now headed for such a crisis.

It may not seem like it makes much difference whether you recycle, but when thousands and even millions of you recycle, the effect is immeasurably and enormously positive.

Beware encyclopedia merchants: underwear isn't in your books

BRAD SEABOURN

People quite frequently come to my house intent upon selling me something. These people are what we commonly refer to as con artists — OOPS, sorry, that's next week's topic — I mean door-to-door salesmen (or saleswomen, as the case may be, although I have yet to meet one.)

Nothing (with the possible exception of religion) is sold in a store that hasn't already been tried door-to-door, although I believe very soon, you will see religious conversion kits at a discount store near you, the Christian version complete with a genuine piece of Noah's Ark, a few authentic threads from the Shroud Of Turin, and easy-to-use monthly donation reminders.

A salesman recently knocked upon my door, which sent our two ferocious guard dogs, Sidney (the large four-footed eating/pooping machine) and Keeshan (the medium-sized unidentified flying fur-ball) into a frenzied fit of barking, with plenty of mouth froth and shredded furniture for added effect.

Of course, had this person forcibly entered my house with the intent to steal or do bodily harm, these two magnificent examples of canine courage would have broken the sound barrier as they shot around the interior of our living room, building enough momentum bouncing off walls and furniture like furry pin-balls until they finally found a weak spot in the sheetrock to make dog emergency exits where we now have none.

As I wondered how this fortunate individual made it past the 4 million land mines that I have strategically placed around my house for just this event (and for kids who like to ring door bells and then run), I peeked through the fish-eye security hole in the door (if this is how we look to fish, then I think I would probably spend the rest of my life at the bottom of a pond eating worms, too).

However, mindlessly following this precaution makes me feel more secure, even though it rarely lends much useful information, because all I ever see is this HUGE head on a little bitty body.

Me: Ha, did I! He had this gigantic head, with this even bigger nose, lots of nose hair I might add, and, let me see, oh yes, a tiny body about three feet high with these little arms that looked like sticks.

Officer: I see. (turning to his partner) JUMP HIM RALPH BEFORE HE GETS AWAY, HE'S A MENTAL INSTITUTION ESCAPEE!

After clearly identifying the knock on my door as a head, I greeted the visitor with the traditional American salutation, "What the HELL do you want?"

Salesman: Hello! My name is Blah Blah, and yours is?

Me: Mr. Harry. Dirty Harry (I always like to maintain a fear-factor in these situations).

Salesman: Well, Mr. Harry, I represent the Blah Blah Encyclopedia company. We are offering, for a limited time, I might add, a once-in-a-life-time opportunity to buy our world-renowned, comprehensive educational reference material — a complete set of 52 hardbound encyclopedias with matching hardwood carrying case for easy, on the road travel — at the low, low price of $49,673, which includes shipping, handling and destination tax.

Me: Hey, that's pretty cheap considering the tax and all. Come on in. Just let me find a safe place for my .357 magnum ... oh, and try not to startle the dogs.

I usually like to use encyclopedia thumpers, as I call them, as an opportunity to test my intellectual prowess. I have over the years developed this into a fine skill.

Salesman: Just to show you how comprehensive our encyclopedias are, I have brought an entire set with me. So please, pick a subject, any subject, and I will show you the extensive information we have bound here in these magnificent books. Go ahead, pick a topic.

Me: (Now I have him) Well, let me see, oh, I don't know, how about underwear?

I have learned after years of extensive and exhaustive research as a hormone-crazed teen-ager that there is not an encyclopedia on the planet that has ANYTHING about underwear (particularly under the sub-heading Female).

All encyclopedia salesmen know this. In fact, the mere mention of underwear will make an encyclopedia salesman break out in a cold sweat.

Salesman: Well, I, I ... am not sure we have much under that subject. Wouldn't you like another topic, such as Zoroastrianism or Culdesacs?

Me: No, thank you. My subject today is underwear.

At this point, nearly all encyclopedia salesmen will concede defeat and wander out the door into the land mines. For those few who linger, Sidney and Keeshan show them a quick way out.

Court action is not necessary

Dear Editor,

I'm writing in reference to the article in the Sept. 9 edition of the Collegian titled "Student not satisfied, seeks legal action." Let's not forget the letter so wisely written by B.C. Camp II.

First, it should be known that I do not have a grade point average of 4.0 and, as he so bluntly put it, I am an "... amateur journalist majoring in criminology... and a ... wanna-be-cop ..." I haven't much use for people in the television/broadcasting field.

However, I do have respect for human beings in general, and my mother taught me to use my mind, rather than run my mouth. So, if you can't stand the glare, get out of the light.

Publicity is a real bitch, isn't it?

Now that I've dropped my two cents in on Camp's pathetic letter, I would like to discuss his pursuit of legal actions against the University.

On what grounds does Camp feel the officer should be dismissed for his actions? Did Camp receive medical treatment for the injuries supposedly inflicted by the officer?

These are questions to which I admittedly do not have answers, but for the sake of argument, let's assume Camp's story is completely correct, and the officer was out of line.

First of all, police officers are human beings just like the rest of us, including Camp, and as we all know, human beings are not perfect.

I will admit police officers are expected to conduct themselves and their business in a professional manner.

However, the badge does not take away one's emotions, nor does it shield them from the effects of dealing with idiots on a day-to-day basis.

But then, what the hell, we're all college students.

There are many more serious problems facing the world today than riding your bicycle on some damn sidewalk.

If the officer is found to have acted poorly to the given situation, I believe restitution should be made.

Let the punishment fit the crime. So, if the officer should lose his professional position over this relatively minor infraction, then Camp, who committed a similarly minor infraction, should lose his academic position as well.

Camp said, "Nothing came to my satisfaction, so I'm pursuing other legal action." OK, Camp, they dropped the charges of obstructing the legal process and disobeying a police officer, as well as suspending the bicycle patrol.

What precisely does it take to satisfy your scratched wrists and bruised ego?

SOARING WITH THE BAND

The 100-degree heat blistered down on the player who wore five pounds of clothing.

He tried to shut out the 40,000 screaming fans in the background, all of whom expected him to perform flawlessly.

He had practiced for 17 hours this week, and it all came down to this minute.

He lifted the horn and blew a note.

Like the football team, the K-State Marching Band practices hard for the games, Frank Tracz, director of bands, said.

"Nobody's hitting us in the head and making us do pushups, but it's strenuous," Tracz said.

The students in the marching band practice two hours a day Tuesday through Friday and spend eight to nine hours at the stadium on game days, he said.

Although it's a lot of work, the band members said they like the idea of challenging themselves.

"If it's not an intense practice, we look like crap at the game," Nathan Parr, drummer and freshman in theater, said.

"The marching band needs to look sharp. If one person is off, it could throw the whole thing out of step," Shirley Robinson, color guard member and a freshman in computer science, said.

K-State's band and several regional high school marching bands will participate in Band Day this Saturday.

Band Day, which is led by K-State's marching band, is an annual event that honors marching bands.

The event is kicked off by a parade down Poyntz Avenue and ends with a mass-band halftime show.

This helps K-State to be noticed by prospective new students and band members, Tracz said.

"We dress up in purple pants and a feathered cap — how much more noticeable can you get?" he said.

Most big colleges have band days, and they are good for recruiting new students, he said.

"The students come in and see a great-spirited school. How we treat them is important," Tracz said.

In a process that Tracz calls "organized chaos," 3,800 high school students will move from the stands onto the field in three minutes before halftime.

Coordinating the move is always difficult, Parr said.

"There are 64 bands out there, and it's almost impossible to get them perfectly coordinated, but we'll pull it off somehow — we always do," Parr said.

Each year, the marching band ends its show by playing the 1812 Overture while Fort Riley soldiers set off artillery barrages.

"It's a long day, but it's a fun day," Tracz said.

He said the band program has room to grow.

"This program has a ton of potential," he said.

This year, there are 227 students in the marching band, 100 more than last year.

The first test for the new members was during the first game of the season between K-State and Southwestern Louisiana.

"When they all came out on the field, they looked twice as big and they played twice as big," he said.

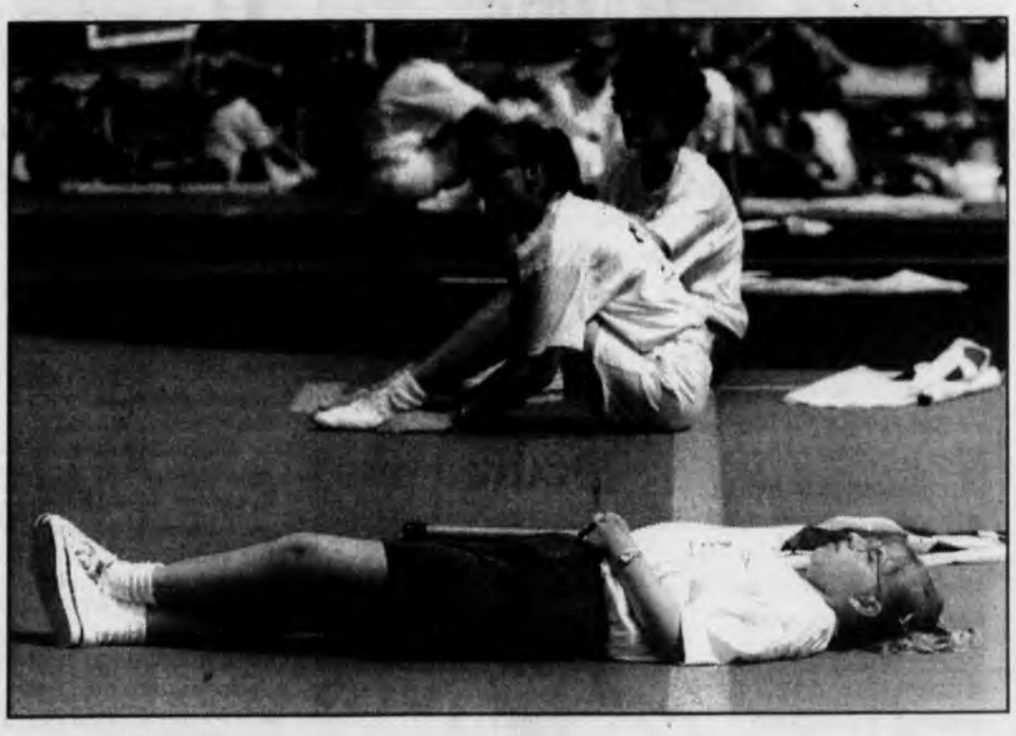
When the Big Eight turns into the Big Twelve in 1996, there will be more competition from other marching bands, and K-State has the potential to be on top, he said.

The quality of all of K-State's music ensembles will go up to national levels, he said. There will also be close to 300 students by next year, Tracz said.

One reason for K-State's highly ranked band is the support from the fans at the games, he said.

"The students here are just incredible. There is a great energy in the stands," he said.

However, when the team loses and the fans are quiet, things can get stressful, he said.



"In this business, you can be higher than a kite one minute and depressed the next minute," he said.

"You just have to say to yourself, 'Well, there's another game next week.'"

They will always be back the next week because the work ethic is excellent, and the students really enjoy what they're doing, Tracz said.

Enjoyment is the reason students spend so much time with the marching band, members said.

"It's a fever. It's addicting," Rob Genter, drum section leader and senior in interior architecture, said.

Swim meet passes preliminaries

DEBBIE PILANT

Many of those participating in the preliminaries of the intramurals swim meet Tuesday at the Natatorium were out to defend themselves.

She won the final with a time of 1:11.2 seconds, but couldn't quite break her record.

"I wanted to win, but I knew I wouldn't be in shape to break the record now," she said.

West also qualified for the finals in the 100-yard individual medley. She hadn't competed in that event for some time but was pleased with her performance.

"It felt better than I thought," she said.

In the women's 50-yard butterfly final, Nancy Miller, Pi Beta Phi swimmer, defended herself by winning at least one event for the past four years.

Competition is what drives her, Miller said.

"That's why I take this so seriously. It's my only outlet for the competitor in me," Miller said.

Miller also qualified for the finals in the 50-yard freestyle and the 50-yard backstroke events. She said her times make her feel she has a chance at the top three in each of them.

Finals took place in the residence-hall division of the 50-yard freestyle. Ryan Haggerty, of the Marlatt Six team, won the event with a time of 24.9 seconds.

He said he felt a lot of pressure to defend these titles, mostly from within.

"I usually compete with myself," he said.

Training for the meet wasn't easy for him Lashley said.

"I wasn't sure if I could get the workout to get my endurance back up," he said.

Lashley started training when he came back to school and helped the Lambda Chi's fraternity 200-yard medley relay team qualify for the finals, while winning the 100-yard individual medley and the 100-yard breast stroke preliminary heats.

Lashley is well on his way to defending his titles, but he said he doesn't take anything for granted.

"My main competition is gone, but there might be freshmen coming up," he said.

The top eight swimmers in each event will compete in the finals at 8 p.m. Thursday at the Natatorium. All three will be on hand to see if they can keep their successes alive.

Coach has right to handle situation

Bill Snyder is a parent, and he is also a football coach.

In both situations, a fair decision can only be made when all of the circumstances surrounding the incident have been evaluated and discussed.

And in both situations, using one encompassing punishment, no matter what the situation, would be considered to be very unfair.

But that is what the media appear to want Snyder to do as he attempts to handle two separate incidents involving members of his football team, Chad May and Steve Hanks.

Both of these players were arrested for DUIs — May received his this summer, while Hanks got his just last week.

While the charge was the same for both players, the circumstances were not.

May's DUI came in the summertime, before practices had even begun.

If the incident would have occurred at his home in California instead of Manhattan, there's a possibility no one would have even heard about it.

While I'm not condoning what May did, at least he didn't allow it to happen during the actual season, when he has a job to do.

Hanks, however, was caught one week after the football season had already started. He also had two others in the car with him at the time, endangering their lives as well.

The problem stemming from the two incidents — May was never suspended for a game, as Hanks was — leading to the allegations that Snyder is not being fair.

Not being fair? I beg to differ.

First off, after seeing what happened to May this summer, all members of the football team, including Hanks, should have taken extra precautions to keep the same thing from happening to them.

NICOLE POELL

Secondly, once the football season gets underway, there should be one thing on every player's mind, and one thing only — football.

Was football Hanks' top priority the night he received his DUI? Apparently not.

Finally, any decision a coach makes concerning a player who has violated the rules should be between that coach and the individual.

Athletes should not be tried by the media — let their coach be the judge.

So let's let Snyder do his job, and trust in his judgment to make the right decision for both the individual and the team.

Sanders ready to sign deal with San Francisco

ASSOCIATED PRESS

ATLANTA — All-Pro corner-back Deion Sanders told an Atlanta television station today that he would play for the San Francisco 49ers.

"An announcement will definitely be made today about me playing with the 49ers," Sanders told WAGA-TV from an airplane heading to California.

"I'm really in a bad mood about the whole thing with the Falcons ... I loved that team and wish I could have been on it."

Earlier, The Atlanta Journal reported Sanders would sign a one-year deal with the 49ers after cancellation of the baseball season, which was announced later. Sanders also plays center field for the Cincinnati Reds.

The one-year football contract would pay Sanders between $1.2 million and $1.3 million, the Journal said. It said Sanders is likely to be in uniform for Sunday's 49ers' game against the Los Angeles Rams at Anaheim.

Sanders' agent, Eugene Parker, had told the newspaper the contract had not been consummated.

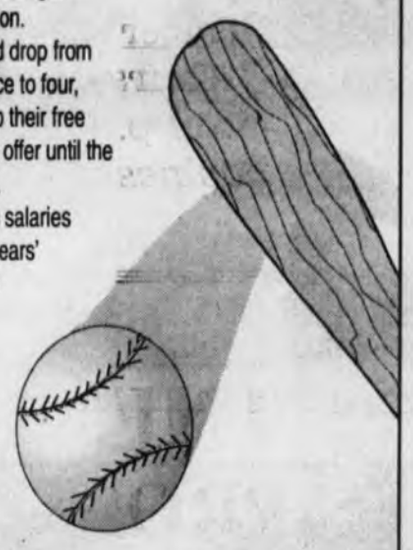
Should Sanders finalize the deal with San Francisco, he would face his former-Atlanta Falcons teammates twice this season. The first time would be Oct. 16 at the Georgia Dome.

Sanders had been seeking a long-term, $4 million-a-year deal, but apparently has conceded the NFL's $34.6 million salary cap makes that impossible.

"As always, it's Deion's call," Parker said Tuesday.

"I think he knows what he wants to do. I think he knows where he wants to be and how to get there," he said.

The 49ers freed $1.3 million by restructuring the contracts of three veterans — linebackers Ken Norton and Gary Plummer and strong safety Tim McDonald.



Agent Leigh Steinberg, who represents McDonald and Plummer, agreed the restructuring was done for the purpose of creating funds for Sanders.

"That's what we were told," he said.

STRIKE DEMANDS

WHAT THE OWNERS WANT

- Revenue sharing on a 50-50 basis, with a $1 billion total guaranteed to the players over seven years if revenues don't decrease. Salaries and benefits for players currently amount to 58 percent of revenues.
- After a four-year phase-in period in the seven-year agreement, clubs couldn't have payrolls more than 110 percent of the major league average or less than 84 percent of the average.
- Elimination of salary arbitration.
- Free agency threshold would drop from six years of major league service to four, but clubs would be able to keep their free agents by matching the highest offer until the players have six years' service.
- Escalating scale of minimum salaries for players with less than four years' major league service, although they could sign for more than the minimum.
- Implementation of the agreement clubs made with each other in January to increase revenue that is shared among teams.

WHAT THE PLAYERS WANT

First proposal

- Eliminate the restriction on repeat free agency within a five-year span if a player's club offers salary arbitration at the end of his contract.
- Reduce the threshold for salary arbitration to two years of major league service, which was its level in 1974-86. It currently is three years plus the top 17 percent of the players with between two and three years of major league service.
- Increase minimum salary from $109,000 to $175,000-$200,000.
- Increase pension levels for players who played before 1970.

Second proposal

- A "tax" of 1 1/2 percent of revenue on the top 16 clubs by revenue and a "tax" of 1 1/2 percent of payrolls on the top 16 clubs by payroll. The money would be redistributed to the bottom 10 clubs in each category.
- Home teams share 25 percent of ticket money with visiting teams. American League home teams currently share 20 percent and National League home teams share 43 cents per ticket over $1, about 4 percent.

Remainder of season scrapped

ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Bud Selig's announcement that there will be no World Series wiped out an event that for so long has caused people across the country to rearrange their October schedules.

There were the fathers and sons who sat in the late-afternoon sunshine to watch Don Larsen pitch his perfect game in 1956, and the mothers and daughters who stayed up on a cool California night to see Kirk Gibson hit his improbable home run in 1988.

"This is a sad day, a disappointing day, and a terrible day," Los Angeles Dodgers manager Tom Lasorda said by telephone from his home in nearby Fullerton, Cal.

"When you don't have the playoffs and World Series, this is unbelievable. Who would have ever thought it would come to this?"

Players, meanwhile, have said they are willing to continue contract talks and say an agreement by Sept. 26 would save the postseason, but the issue of a salary cap, which owners say they need to control salaries that now average nearly $1.2 million per player, remains the sticking point in the negotiations.

No negotiating sessions were scheduled between union head Donald Fehr and owners' representative Richard Ravitch. The two sides have met only three times since the strike started, and not at all in the final five days.

Selig's declaration follows more than 25 years of labor strife between the players and owners. In December 1975, players won the right to free agency and owners have never completely come to grips with it, leading to a series of strikes and lockouts — eight in all — without precedent in American sport.

In the past, though, there was always a commissioner to help steer if not negotiate a settlement, but owners forced out Fay Vincent on Sept. 7, 1992, and said they would not hire a successor until a new collective bargaining agreement was in place.

While this strike has wrecked the season, it is not yet the longest in history. A 50-day strike in the middle of 1981 led to skewed, split-season playoffs. There was still a World Series, however.

The World Series started in 1903 but was not played in 1904 because New York Giants manager John McGraw thought his team was too good to face the Boston Pilgrims, forerunners of the Red Sox. The Series resumed in 1905 and had been played every year since, although there were some close calls.

In 1918, President Woodrow Wilson's administration ordered an abrupt end to the season because of World War I. As a result, the World Series started the first week of September.

During World War II, baseball executives asked President Franklin D. Roosevelt whether games should continue. Roosevelt responded America needed baseball and said to play on.

▶DISTANCE OF 3-POINT LINE CONSIDERED

BASKETBALL

CHICAGO (AP) — The NBA's competition committee recommended shortening the three-point shot by making the line a uniform 22 feet from the basket.

The line is currently 22 feet in the corners and extends to 23 feet, nine inches at the top of the key.

The committee also recommended that a shooter fouled on a three-point shot be awarded three free throws instead of two. The changes must be approved by a two-thirds vote of the NBA's Board of Governors at a meeting next month.

Cassie gets mountain of letters; quit sniveling, yours will be answered soon

Write to Cassandra: 116 Kedzie Hall, Manhattan, KS 66506.

Dear Cassie,
Instead of sitting around and waiting for people to write you, why don't you print some old letters from last year? Then, maybe you'll start getting a response after people realize what to expect.

Signed,
Move On

Dear Move On,
Why should I dig out old letters from last year when I have tons of fresh, problematic letters to choose from this year? I can hardly see the top of my desk because of the mountain of letters sitting on top of it, and that's just the way I like it.

If you're still waiting around for a reply from a letter written in last year, resubmit it and I guarantee it will run this semester.

Congo lines root of the problem

Rusted Root
"When I Woke"
Mercury

CASEY MILLER
Collegian

"When I Woke," the debut compact disc by the Pittsburgh band Rusted Root, is an eclectic mix of world music and flowing acoustical rhythms.

Unfortunately, it is also repetitious and hard to listen to.

Those who appreciate diversity may find themselves to be Rusted Root fans after listening to this album.

They use enough different incitements to confuse even the most experienced orchestra conductor. Guitars, basses, bongos, banjos — anything goes on this record.

Rusted Root is very percussion heavy, as every band member except lead singer and songwriter Michael Glabicki is listed as a drummer.

The speedier tracks, "Assets" and "Martyr," are Latino-influenced.

It's perfect for congo lines at parties.

If you really like congo lines.

It should have a warning label that says, "BEWARE — SOME TRACKS MAY INDUCE SPONTANEOUS CONGO LINES!"

The more interesting songs are slow and trippy.

Most notable is the fourth track, "Cruel Sun,"which clocks in at an almost exhausting eight minutes.

Lyrically, the songs are mysterious as any good new band's lyrics should be. Glabicki, sounding a lot like Talking Heads lead singer David Byrne, gives us puzzlers like, "See the bloody faces lifted to the sky, do you want to run with a future left behind?" Make your own interpretation.

Every band member contributes with background vocals that make the songs even more hypnotic and sometimes kind of creepy.

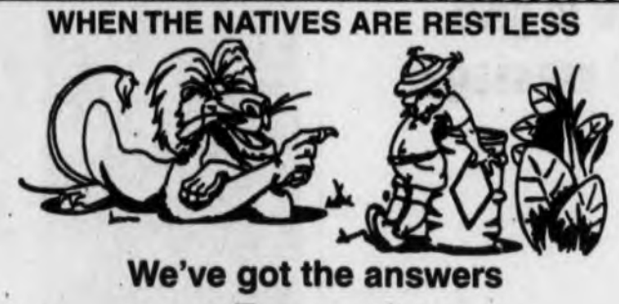
The opening percussion showcase, appropriately titled "Drum Trip", is a good example of one of the bands many songs that go on and on with the same beat. Soon you find yourself skipping to the next song. This will happen many times while listening to "When I Woke."

But if your consider yourself a very patient person, give Rusted Root a try.

Put it into your stereo and relax to it, preferably under the influence of a mild hallucinogenic.

When you wake up, if you decide you don't like it, take it back.



That's what receipts are for.

System tracks students

MIKE HIND
Collegian

The joint committee on governance met in Topeka Wednesday to discuss student tracking and future class requirements for Kansas colleges and universities.

The committee, which is made up of members from the State Board of Education and the Kansas Board of Regents, listened to a presentation on a proposed interinstitutional tracking system for state community colleges and universities.

John Welsh, associate director of academic affairs for the regents, gave the presentation and said the tracking system would give the committee an easier way to monitor students that move from one college to another.

Welsh said the tracking system would be especially helpful for the large amount of Kansas students who transfer from community colleges to regents schools.

The system would also allow for the electronic transfer of transcripts from institution to institution, Welsh said.

The committee discussed a plan called performance outcomes, which would stress more in-depth courses in the area of science and math rather than the general ones currently offered to most high school students.

Lee Droegemueller, commissioner of education for the Kansas Board of Education, said he wanted more applied courses in Kansas high schools.

"We are going to applied courses so kids are ready for college," Droegemueller said.

Fliers ignored in downtown Bel Air

President Emile Jonassaint called meetings.

The check-sized leaflets dropped by the U.S. planes feature a photograph of Aristide standing in a suit next to a Haitian flag, palm extended. On the back, the text reads in the Creole language of Haiti's masses, "The sun of democracy, the light of justice, the warmth of reconciliation, with the return of President Aristide."

No leaflets were seen in pro-Aristide Cite Soleil, where 200,000 people live in poverty, or the Carrefour slum, home to 100,000.

Mindful of uniformed and plainclothes soldiers and auxiliaries, nervous people intentionally ignored fliers dropped downtown within blocks of the National Palace, seat of the government installed by the army in May, and Haitian army headquarters.

Merilus said soldiers picked up the fliers that fell on Bel Air before the people could even read them.

The leaders of Merilus's neighborhood group have been in hiding since last month when the army came recruiting for brigades to defend against an invasion.

Since then, truckloads of civilian militia and police patrol Bel Air's streets every night at 7, beating and sometimes arresting residents. Merilus said the recruiters told him there is a plan to wipe out Aristide strongholds if there is an invasion.

"The people are not afraid of the U.S. invaders," he said.

"They're afraid of the (Haitian) army taking reprisals."

In the northern port of Cap-Haitien last month, a warship drew a crowd of anti-invasion protesters to the pier. Warships were also sighted Saturday along the coast north of Port-au-Prince.

On Sunday, a warship and two patrol boats moved within two miles of shore, U.S. flags waving as several helicopters zipped around. An unidentified airplane flew over Port-au-Prince on Monday night.

Along the 240-mile land border with the Dominican Republic, 2,000 Dominican soldiers are enforcing the U.N. trade sanctions. Argentina, Canada and the United States have sent the first 50 observers for a multinational group that will include 88 monitors and 50 U.S. soldiers.

If there is enough evidence, Watts said, a summons is issued. If it is a felony, the crime is turned over to the district attorney.

"Sexual violence is a big issue on campus," Didi Dingwell, Courage student coordinator, said.

"Many assaults go unreported, so the problem is more prevalent than statistics show," Dingwell said.

Courage is a program that provides education through presentations, Dingwell said.

Colorado also has a victim-assistance office.

"When a victim contacts the office, we first make sure the victim is safe," Amy Robertson, program coordinator, said. "Then, we see if they need any medical attention. After we know that they are out of danger, we offer emotional support."

Robertson said the office advises victims on their options. They also help them by giving them counseling referrals and legal information.

"Our campus police have full arrest powers. As a third party, I can report the crime on behalf of the victim," Robertson said. "So if the offender assaults someone else, the police will know his or her history."

Courage, the night walk or ride program and community student aids were established to prevent sexual crimes at Colorado.

"Our campus has a night walk or ride program," Watts said. "The service can take students anywhere on campus."

Watts said usually a van picks the students up and transports them wherever they need to go.

Community-service student aids are students hired to work at night, Watts said.

The student aids walk the campus on foot carrying hand radios to assist late walkers and keep an eye on the parking lots and sidewalks, she said.

Watts said there were five attempted rapes in 1993.

Students favor bike patrol

As of Thursday night, the bike patrol will be in service from 2:30 p.m. until 12:30 a.m.

LISA ELLIOTT
Collegian

K-State Police reinstated the bike patrol Wednesday in response to student support.

"We've had several requests to have it reinstated," Capt. Robert Mellgren, acting director of campus police, said.

Officers began patrolling on bicycles again Thursday night, Mellgren said.

The bike patrol was suspended two weeks ago after an incident in which a student filed a complaint against an officer on the bike patrol.

Students called in to support the program following its suspension, said John Lambert, director of public safety.

"They thought it was a good idea, and they didn't think the incident should get it canceled," he said.

The bike patrol was not intended to monitor bike riding on the sidewalks, Lambert said.

He said he had hoped a couple of weeks off would dispel the idea that the bike patrol was targeting sidewalk bike riders, but there are still some negative feelings toward the patrol on campus.

"The original intent was for them to be visible and provide a relationship with students," Mellgren said.

The bike patrol was a public-relations effort to make the officers more accessible. Students wouldn't have to try and flag down an officer in a car, he said.

Officers and students can interact on a more personal basis with the bike patrol than they could with officers in cars, Lambert said.

"They have stopped several times and talked to the students while patrolling the dormitory areas," he said.

The bike patrol is much better than waving from a car, Lambert said.

The bike patrol will be on duty from 2:30 p.m. until 12:30 a.m.

Mellgren said the bike-patrol shift would be changed as the department felt necessary.

Officers Bob Fenton and David Springer will continue to work the bike patrol.

The officer involved in the incident that led to the suspension of the patrol was counseled on his actions and what he did wrong, Lambert said.

He said he didn't think there would be any more problems with the patrol.

Clinton warns of invasion

ASSOCIATED PRESS

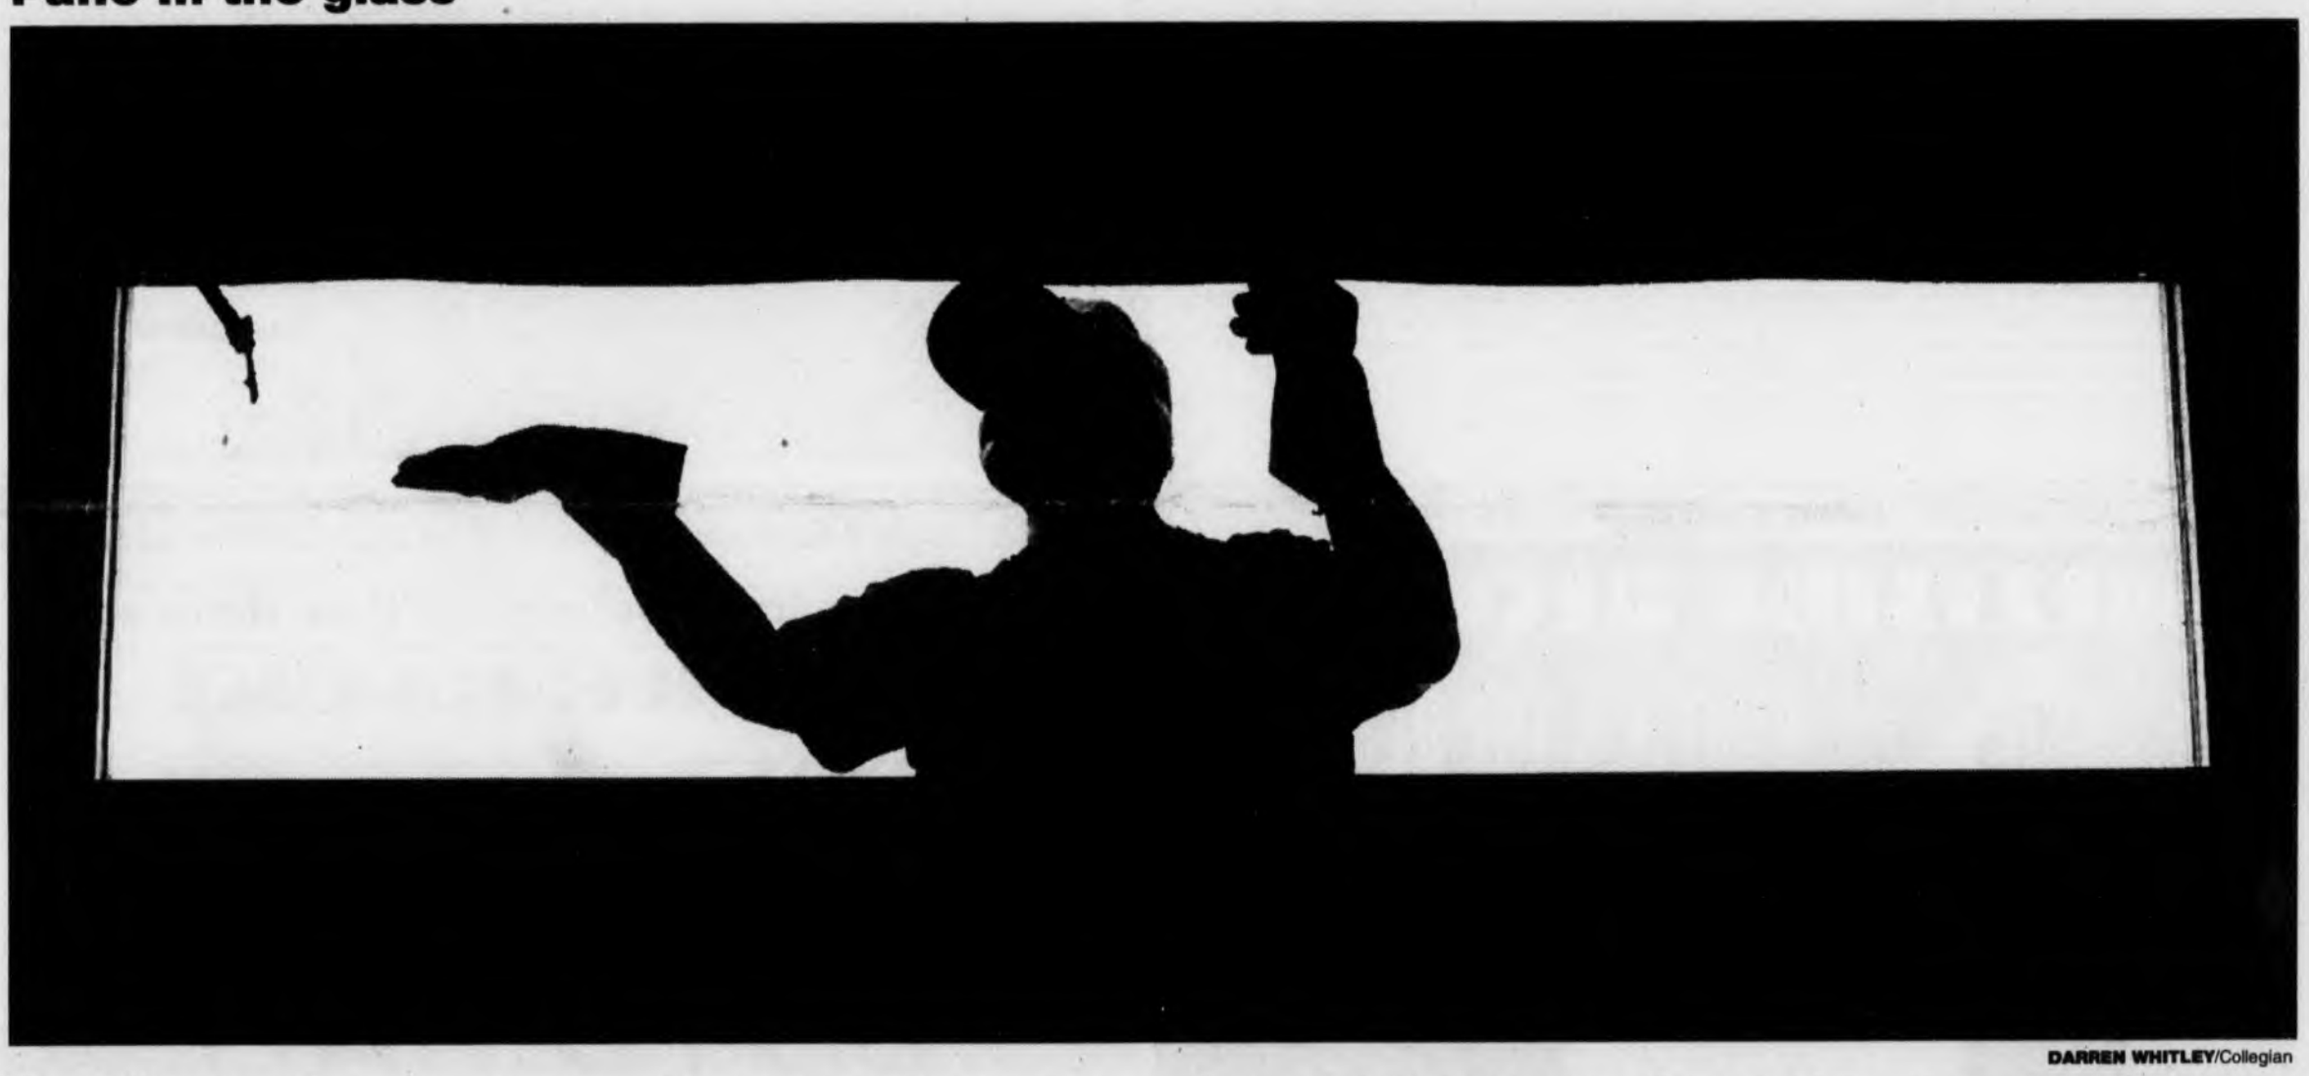
PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti — Threatened with U.S. invasion and menaced by planes dropping propaganda leaflets, Haiti's military rulers were standing their ground and refused to give up power.

"The government will continue to fulfill its mission and will not fail to fully pursue defense of the republic," army-installed president, Emile Jonassaint, said at a news conference Wednesday night.

Haiti's leaders were unmoved by President Clinton's warning that the United States will soon invade to restore the democratically elected president, Jean-Bertrand Aristide.

A crippling trade blockade and intensifying psychological warfare has failed to dislodge the military.

With 15 U.S. warships looming offshore, two aircraft carriers on the way and troops staging mock landings in Puerto Rico, Clinton planned to address the American public Thursday to try and build support for an invasion.



"It is time for them to get out of there," Clinton said Wednesday in an interview with The Associated Press and other news agencies.

He said the United States has "exhausted every available alternative" to invasion to oust Haiti's military leaders.

Aristide, Haiti's first freely elected leader, was overthrown three years ago this month.

The United States and other nations have tried, so far in vain, to restore him to power by imposing an increasingly restrictive series of trade and travel embargoes.

Pane in the glass

DARREN WHITLEY/Collegian

Atop a ladder, Larry McCarthy, of Harding Glass, secures a pane of glass to its frame Thursday afternoon at the new business taking shape where Kite's Bar and Grille and the Futon Store were located. The space formerly occupied by the two businesseswill be a new clothing store, construction workers said. Another building in Aggieville, owned by the same developer, is intended to become a coffee shop.

SGA votes to place money in new account

AMY SIMON
Collegian

Student Governing Association decided to place extra money collected at fee payment into an account to be spent by students.

Student Senate created the Student Life Enrichment Account by voting 43-7 at its meeting Thursday night. This is a $17,000 account, formed from an overcharge in the activity fee this year.

Dan Lewerenz, arts and sciences senator, said setting up an account and spending the money was the most fair way to return money to students.

"I issue a challenge to all of you," Lewerenz said. "If we can't find a way to spend the money that would benefit a majority of students, we don't deserve to be in this room."

Lewerenz said he has heard a wide range of suggestions from students on how to spend the money. A student had suggested to him that the money should go to setting up more study spaces on campus.

"Spending the money now would not only benefit the students that paid it, but it will also be a long-term investment," Lewerenz said.

Brenda Halinski, graduate senator, also voted in favor of spending the $17,000. She said the bill will be fair to those leaving the campus next year, because the bill requires that funds will be spent next year.

"A lot of seniors and graduate students who are leaving want to know that their money is going toward a specific purpose," Halinski said.

Halinski said one option for allocating the funds was to donate it to an endowment fund for Farrell Library.

She said the library plans to raise $1 million, and buy new books and periodicals each year with the interest.

The Student Affairs and Social Services Committee will set up guidelines for how this money should be spent. Requests for funds from the account will then be sent to the Allocations Committee.

A vote on forming the Student Life Enrichment Account was postponed last week.

However, senators voted to spend the money before debating on a bill to reduce student fees. Senators then took the activity-fee decrease bill off the ballot before debating it.

Trent LeDoux, agriculture senator, said a decrease in student fees should still be considered, because student organizations did not spend more than $20,000 in allocated money last year.

Bramlage parking is limited

BOB MACHA
Collegian

The man who handles football parking says he's got a parking problem.

But Bramlage Coliseum director Charlie Thomas said his parking problem is a good one: There are more people coming to football games than there are parking spaces.

Thomas said he's trying to do something about it. The gates will open at 9 a.m. Saturday for the 1:10 p.m. football game against Rice. Thomas said the gates would normally open three hours before game time.

"We'll open at 9 for Rice," Thomas said. "People usually don't come as early for afternoon games."

Thomas said the point where people pay for parking at Bramlage has been moved farther from the street. This helps traffic flow, he said.

Bramlage staff members also are trying to manage the lot more actively by directing traffic more, he said, so there will be fewer gaps.

"People may get into the lot later, and there will be spaces, but they can't find them," Thomas said.

This is the first year that Bramlage staff has handled parking at KSU Stadium. Parking Services handled it in the past.

Thomas said there are fewer spaces this year for people to just pull up, pay $3 and park because of the increase in reserved spots for donors after last year's Copper Bowl win.

There are also fewer spaces left because of construction on the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex, Thomas said.

Thomas said there was a crowd of 38,216 for the opening game, and the stadium parking lot was full. KSU Stadium has a capacity of 42,000.

There are alternatives to parking at KSU Stadium.

College Avenue United Methodist Church offers parking for games, youth director Kail Katzenmeier said.

The lot, which has space for 130 cars, opens at 11:30 a.m., and it costs $3 to park there. The lot filled 30 minutes before the Southwestern Louisiana game Sept. 3, Katzenmeier said.

Rusty's Last Chance Restaurant & Saloon offers a free shuttle to Bramlage, assistant manager Jeff Fellows said. The shuttle will leave at noon from Last Chance. No registration is required.

Parking gates at Bramlage Coliseum will open at 9 a.m. Saturday for the K-State vs. Rice game.

KU professor dismissed despite his appeal

NOLAN SCHRAMM
Collegian

Professor Emil A. Tonkovich will be dismissed from the University of Kansas despite his appeal to the Kansas Board of Regents to override KU's decision.

The professor was fired on March 11, 1992, after three sexual harassment allegations were brought against him by KU students in Sept. 1991.

"This is the end of the road for Professor Tonkovich, but not the end of the judicial process," T.P. Srinivasan, faculty senate president at KU, said.

Tonkovich is still entitled to full protection from the law, and all possible avenues are being explored, he said.

Among other items discussed at the meeting was a request by the Student Advisory Committee to redefine the role of fees and tuition in the universities.

"We feel like we don't always know what the money is being used for," Audrey Nagle, SAC member, said.

Students need to be on their toes, because tuition could be hiked without warning, she said.

SAC also asked the regents to promote legislature, which will increase financial aid to students and support grant programs.

Another motion approved K-State to grant access to the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers.

Within the next two years, the Corps will remove abandoned underground storage tanks and piping from the campus of K-State-Salina.

The lighter side of the meeting focused on the movement of the speech pathology program from the College of Arts and Sciences to the College of Human Ecology.

It will be transferred into the Department of Human Development and Family Studies.

NEWS BRIEFS

▶ DEPARTMENTS HAVE GARAGE SALES TO CLEAN OUT STORAGE SPACE

The Foods and Nutrition and Clothing and Textiles departments are doing some early spring cleaning.

The departments are having a garage sale today and Saturday.

The sale will be from 3:30 to 6:30 p.m. today and from 9 a.m. to noon on Saturday in Justin 146 and 115.

Jane Bowers, head of the foods and nutrition department, said the main reason for the sale is because of lack of storage space.

"Space has become a critical issue," she said.

Bowers said the departments' curricula have evolved over a period of years, and many stored items are no longer needed.

She said no definite plan is in the works as to how money raised from the garage sale will be spent.

Part of the money will probably be used to buy essentials, such as office supplies, she said.

There has been discussion about remodeling Justin Hall, but there are no definite plans for remodeling, and no money has been set aside for remodeling, she said.

Among the items that will be for sale are linens, cookbooks, kitchen utensils, antique glass jars, oak book cases, a wood file cabinet, chairs on rollers, typewriters, sewing machines and cabinets.

The 15th annual Lou Douglas Lecture Series will kick off with a political science professor from the City University of New York speaking on "Race, Drugs, and the Dangerous Classes."

The lecture will be at 7:30 p.m. Monday in the K-State Union Forum Hall.

"Gordon wants to change policies and get tough. We could change our situation," Gloria Rumsey, coordinator of the Lou Douglas Lecture Series, said.

Gordon

"Our world is politically driven. It affects how we live," she said.

Gordon has received several honors, including the Karl Menninger Award in 1983 and the Freedoms Foundation Prize in 1983.

Gordon was the editor for the Justice Watch, a newsletter on national justice policy published by the Committee for Public Justice.

She served as president for the National Council on Crime and Delinquency in 1982.

She has written articles and another book, "The Justice Juggernaut: Fighting Street Crime, Controlling Citizens," Rumsey said.

▶ PARENTS SHOULD TAKE MORE RESPONSIBILITY FOR CHILDREN'S EDUCATION

The state must not be allowed to become the parent, Jim McDavitt, noted analyst of educational systems, said.

McDavitt spoke to about 20 people at the Manhattan Training Fire Station on Thursday at 7 p.m.

He began with a prayer, and then said society was more interested in doing what was politically correct instead of what was right.

There were two points he said he wanted to make clear. One was that he did not intend to bash educators. The second was that everyone is a spiritual being.

McDavitt then put education into eras. The early '60s were affective learning. Then, he said, came the age of double speech.

Today, the government gives education four criteria.

These are to distribute National Assessment Tests, nationally link school's computers, redesign the school community and make a national curriculum.

"Only people named Chelsea in $10,000 private schools would be prepared for six-digit jobs," McDavitt said.

"Can tax payers afford to expand the school's roles? Parents, not schools, should be responsible for raising and educating children," he said.

The mission for Kansas education, McDavitt said, is to prepare each person with living, learning, working skills and values necessary for caring, productive and fulfilling participation in our evolving global society.

He challenged the audience to define those vague terms. The definition of integrated curriculum has no singular answer. It can mean anything you want it to, he said.

▶ MISS KANSAS WINS TALENT CONTEST; FINAL PRELIMINARIES ON THURSDAY

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. (AP) — Miss Kansas, Trisha Schaffer, won in talent Wednesday and Miss Alabama, Heather Whitestone, captured swimsuit honors, as preliminary competition continued in the Miss America Pageant.

Whitestone, 21, of Birmingham, a junior at Jacksonville State University, beat out 15 other women in the second night of preliminary competition. On the first night, Tuesday, Miss Virginia, Cullen Johnson, won in swimsuit, and Miss Montana, Yvonne Dehner, won the talent competition.

The last preliminaries were Thursday.

POLICE REPORTS

These reports are taken directly from the daily logs of the K-State and Riley County Police departments. Because of space constraints, not all crimes are listed.

K-STATE POLICE

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 14

At 6:40 a.m., Charles Bibbs requested security to let him in Umberger 28.

At 8:30 a.m., Renee Gates reported the theft of two keys from the second floor of Farrell Library. Loss was $10.

At 1:30 p.m., David Onli, 2542 Candle Crest Circle, reported a lost wallet and contents.

At 4:15 p.m., Nita Illian, 14517 Grandview Drive, Randolph, had her cat at the Veterinary Clinical Sciences Building to be examined. The cat bit her during the examination. The cat was quarantined because it was late on having its rabies shot.

At 7:10 p.m., Joey Schriner locked his keys in his car. When the officer arrived and checked his driver's license, it was expired.

RILEY COUNTY POLICE

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 15

At 12:18 a.m., Jerry A. King, 2421 Buttonwood Lane, was arrested for driving under the influence. Bond was $1,000.

At 12:58 a.m., an officer spoke with the management of Rusty's Last Chance Restaurant & Saloon about the theft of a chair. No report was filed.

At 1:54 a.m., a male was holding a gun to a female's head at 1100 Colorado St. Officers checked the residence and found everyone to be all right.

At 2:30 a.m., a fireworks complaint was reported at 221 Westwood Road. Seth A. Joyce, 2912 James Ave.; and Ken T. Snook, Anthony M. Zafran and Jack G. Rowlett, all of 221 Westwood Road; were issued notices to appear for discharging fireworks within city limits.

At 2:53 a.m., a noise complaint was filed in the north alley of 1114 Fremont St. The loud subjects ran inside when an officer arrived. They were advised through the door of the consequences of a return visit.

At 2:57 a.m., suspicious activity was reported at 525 N. Manhattan Ave. where two male subjects were loitering. The subjects were riding mountain bikes with saddlebags. The subjects were identified as having long hair and wearing jeans and no shirts. An officer spoke with both subjects.

Local bands open for Chris LeDoux at Tuttle Creek

COLLEGIAN STAFF

Singer Chris LeDoux heard something on the radio that almost made him wreck his car.

LeDoux was driving in his pickup truck in Wyoming and almost wrecked when he heard a song by an unknown singer from Oklahoma. It mentioned him, and he was shocked.

That singer was Garth Brooks.

Now a regular on the country charts, LeDoux will be performing Sunday in an outdoor concert at the Tuttle Creek River Pond Area.

He had released 22 independent recordings before getting his big break in 1989, when Brooks mentioned him in his first hit,. "Much Too Young (To Feel This Damn Old)."

It went to No. 5 on the Billboard Country Chart and earned them a Grammy nomination.

It has one song Brooks help write, called "Slow Down." Bruce Springsteen also wrote a song called "Tougher Than the Rest" for "Haywire."

Two local bands, Rio and Shootin' Blanks, will open the show.

Rio drummer Brent Barrett said the band's sound is a mix of old- and new-style country music. The band opened for Lee Roy Parnell when he was in town and for Steve Wariner in Great Bend.

Barrett said the band has been playing together for 3-1/2 years.

Joel Stone, drummer for Shootin' Blanks, said the band members have been together about a year. He described the band's sound as young country.

The concert will start at 6 p.m. In the event of rain, it will be on campus at Weber Arena.

CHRIS LEDOUX

with Rio and Shootin' Blanks are performing at 6 p.m. Sept. 18 at the Tuttle Creek River Pond Area. Tickets are $12 in advance and $15 at the gate and are available at S Bar J, T.W. Longhorns and Streetside Records.

Rare tufted deer born at Sunset Zoo

Rejected by mother, baby raised by zoo

SERA L. TANK
Collegian

The birth of a rare male western tufted deer caused a bit of excitement at the Sunset Zoo on Saturday.

The birth was interesting because western tufted deer can only be found at six zoos outside of China, the deer's country of origin, said Don Wixom, director of the Sunset Zoo.

"We were all very happy that the two deer bred in their exhibit. It surprised us that they settled in so quickly," Wixom said.

"Most animals, when they are raised by humans, tend to believe that they are humans."

RYAN GULKER
assistant general curator at Sunset Zoo

The deer is in excellent condition, but has not been given a name yet, he said.

"We've been looking for a Chinese name, because we always like to name the animals according to where they are from," Wixom said.

Unfortunately, the deer's mother rejected it, and it will have to be raised by human surrogate parents.

Wixom said a mother rejecting her baby is not unusual in the wild and is very common with the first baby.

"The birth process is a painful and stressful process for an animal. When they turn around and see the baby, they don't always know what it is, and they are frightened by it," he said.

Ryan Gulker, assistant general curator at Sunset Zoo, said after the baby was born, he watched the mother and the baby for a while to see what would happen when the two interacted.

"Initially, she didn't pay any attention to him, and then she became frightened. She started to make weird noises and push him around with her nose," Gulker said.

After the birth, Wixom said he found out that western tufted deer are often rough with their babies.

"It pressures the babies into being quiet and still. It helps them to avoid being preyed upon," he said.

It was a judgment call whether to take the baby away from the mother, Gulker said.

"We just decided it was better for the safety of the baby not to take any chances," he said.

Wixom said once the deer is ready, he will put it back in the exhibit with the zoo's other western tufted deer.

"Once he is sexually mature, he will hopefully go on to breed and become a normal adult deer," Wixom said.

Gulker said deer integrate easier than most other species.

"Most animals, when they are raised by humans, tend to believe that they are humans. Deers integrate very well, though," he said.

J. KYLE WYATT/Collegian

Sunset Zoo became one of only six zoos outside of China to have a western tufted deer born into captivity at noon on Saturday. The deer, which will reach an adult weight of about 50 pounds, are native to China and do not do well in captivity.

IN OUR OPINION

By the Collegian Editorial Board

Graffiti adds sparkle to plywood wall

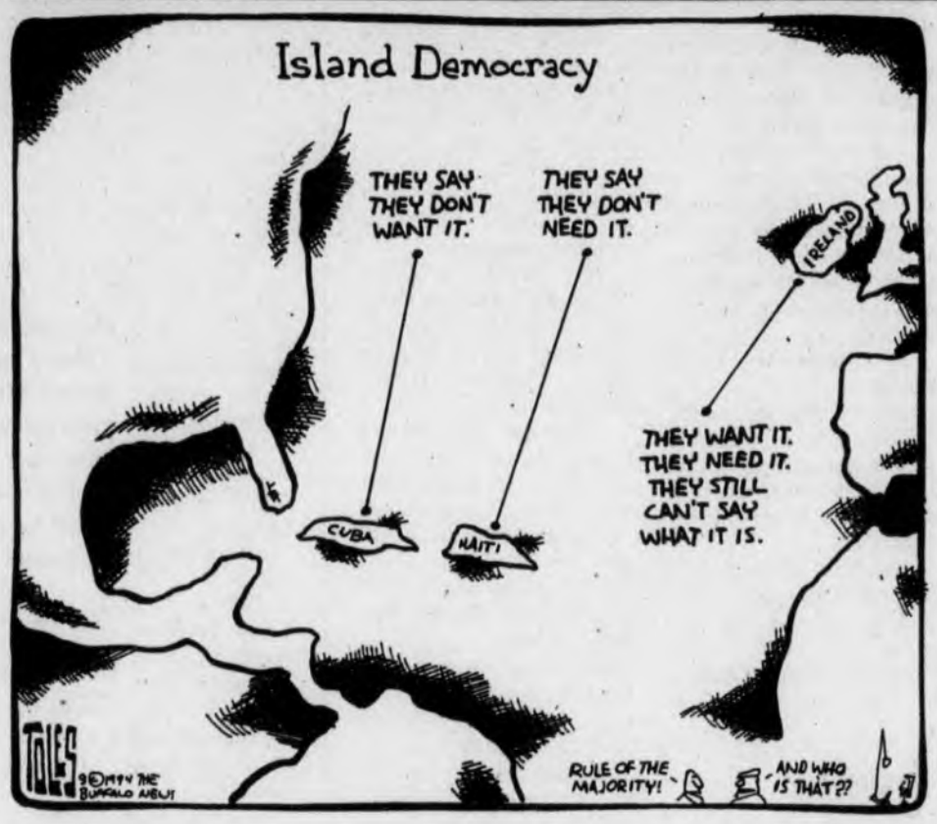
Graffiti can be a good thing.

The campus construction by Farrell Library squeezes the flow of students through a narrow passageway with what used to be a plain plywood wall on one side. It's not plain anymore.

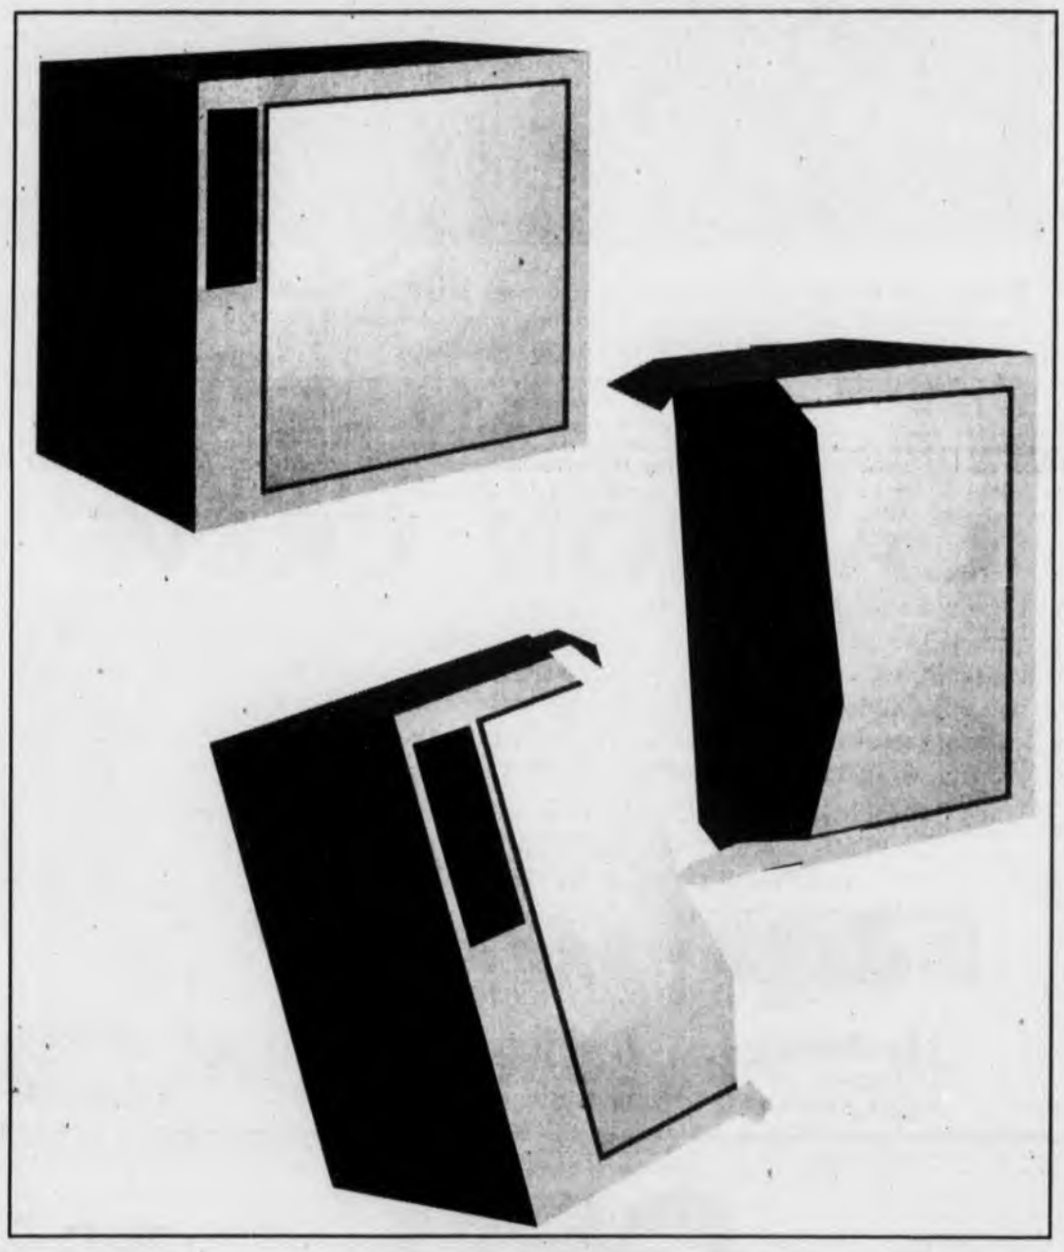
Every day there is some new piece of art or political statement plastered across the wall. Some of it is funny, some of it is political, and some of it is art. Some of it even implies a fascination with Pink Floyd.

There are a few cheesy declarations of love on there, which is too bad, because they break the developing theme of healthy rebellion and random expression on the wall.

What makes the graffiti on the wall so special is that it's not hurting or defacing anything permanent or all that important. It is a credit to the renegade artists on campus that they chose to decorate the construction wall and not the side of Bluemont Hall.



As a matter of fact, the wall will probably be thrown away when construction is completed. By then it should be a huge collage of all the colors of the rainbow in spray paint and chalk, sort of like the buses driven around in the 60s.



The wall shouldn't be thrown away. It should be disassembled when the construction is completed, and we should display it in the Union Art Gallery as a tribute to everyone who put something interesting or beautiful on it.

As funny as it might sound, most of the graffiti on that wall is a credit to K-State.

The wall is a giant canvas for students to express themselves. We should appreciate it while it's here.

Shows on new Fox station suck

I want my "Star Trek!"

I'm going through serious "Animaniacs" withdrawal with complications from sudden removal of "Deep Space 9."

If I wanted to see talk shows, I would watch the network programming that is the reason Fox broadcasting has become so popular.

But I don't. That's why Fox is so good. All the shows I like are on Fox — "Animaniacs," "Star Trek," (which is going to have a female captain in the next series) and "Deep Space 9."

Does the term multiple-system operators mean anything to you?

Multiple-system operators own a large number of local cable systems.

According to the Broadcast Education Association's spring 1994 report, Tele-Communications Incorporated is the largest MSO.

According to the same report, many MSOs have acquired ownership positions in the stations they broadcast.

TCI owns a 23-percent interest in Turner Communications and a 24-percent interest in Discovery.

TNT, TBS, CNN, Headline News and the Weather Channel are all on TCI of Kansas.

Some of the programming on Liberty Media is QVC (22-percent TCI interest), Home Shopping Network, Black Entertainment Television (17-percent TCI interest).

Courtroom Television (33-percent TCI interest), Encore (90-percent TCI interest) and International Family Entertainment (18-percent TCI interest). International Family Entertainment is controlled by Pat Robertson's CBN organization and operates the Family Channel.

Does any of this programming sound familiar?

This is why when people call TCI and ask for the Comedy Channel or the Sci-Fi Channel, they are told that there's no more room.

And there won't be until 1997.

So, in order to keep a Fox station, TCI of Kansas decided to switch to the new Fox station in Kansas City.

Instead, it is carrying news, followed by talk shows, followed by news. Then, from 7 to 9 p.m., the station has Fox programming, which is followed by more news.

So, why not get the Fox station out of Wichita? It has basically the same programming that Kansas City had.

Ron Frazier, general manager of TCI of Manhattan, said the Kansas City station has better technical quality.

Technical quality doesn't matter if programming isn't interesting. Just ask the BBC. Great technical quality is great if you like watching the history of seaweed.

In the mass-buying spree that Fox went on in order to grab up more channels and be more accessible, the network has fallen victim to the same corporate greed that brings us QVC instead of the Comedy Channel.

With the idea that bigger is better in their minds, the owners of Fox have jeopardized their position as leaders.

And I'm sure they don't want that.

Mr. Camp, the lawsuit really isn't necessary

Dear Mr. Camp,

I applaud you for having the courage to follow up on the incident in which you were involved. Most would likely be intimidated and let it drop.

We all know that you share in fault in what happened. Your smartass nature got you in trouble. What sets you apart is that you admit it. In doing so, you have shown a level of maturity that you probably won't find in the average college student or the average American.

But now you need to go the next step. Courage is followed by maturity, and maturity is followed by wisdom. And so I ask you to do the wise thing, the right thing, and not sue K-State. A lawsuit probably wouldn't surprise anybody. If the officer seriously misbehaved, then you would probably win. And though you don't seem to be in this for the money (another sign of maturity), you need to ask yourself what would really be gained by such a lawsuit.

Officer Bob Fenton likely won't be affected. Either he or the K-State Police is likely to have malpractice insurance. While a lawsuit might threaten his employment status, I would bet there is an investigation under way now. Apparently, you are not the only student who feels that Officer Fenton can overreact.

The K-State Police, the University and the state of Kansas will bear the brunt of any financial consequences. That means we, the students and the taxpayers, will be the piggy bank.

Certainly a successful lawsuit will increase the insurance rates for the K-State Police. Anything not covered by insurance would have to come from KSU Police Department reserves, University funds and state accounts. Your winnings will compromise our future capital improvements.

But I don't run the zoo. All I can do is make a suggestion. And I suggest that you choose a course of action other than the lawsuit.

I know what it is like to have a run-in with an officer who has seen one too many "Lethal Weapon" movies. And I know what it's like to feel powerless against the bureaucracy. But revenge will not make the frustration go away. Nor will enriching some attorney.

Only justice can do that.

Maybe nothing will happen. Maybe there will be an investigation, and Fenton will be exonerated. Maybe such an investigation will lead to radical changes in department procedure and hiring practices.

All I can do is make a suggestion. And I suggest that you choose a course of action other than a lawsuit.

The average Joe would probably call me insane. "I'll teach them all a lesson," he'd scream, while preparing witnesses with his lawyers. And Lord knows you'd have no trouble finding representation for a high-profile case with a large potential payoff.

But you're not the average Joe. You've already shown a tendency toward maturity, and I would bet you can see how pointless a lawsuit would be.

So, good luck in dealing with the powers that be. I hope a solution can be found that will enable everyone to benefit. And I am confident that, with patience and perseverance, you will be able to find that solution.

Dan Lewerenz is a senior in philosophy.

▶ FOOTBALL

Snyder calls the shots

Dear Editor,

Will you people get a life? I hate to burst your bubble, but you don't have all the answers. How Coach Snyder chooses to run his football program is his business, not yours. "We" don't include mechanisms to punish players (as your editorial said); he does.

And he is not responsible for his players' actions any more than Marty Schottenheimer is for the Chiefs or Dean Rathbone is for mine.

As for your asinine statement about K-State football players being role models who need to be held to higher standards, Charles Barkley was right when he said, "Just because I dunk a basketball doesn't mean I should raise your kids ... if the only qualification for being a role model is that you have dunked a basketball, then I know millions of people who can be role models ... I know drug dealers who can dunk. So, can drug dealers be role models, too?"

Despite what Robert Kirk says, K-State football players are adults and should be treated as such. The Riley County court will do plenty of punishing to DUI offenders — much worse than a one-game suspension. So, if Coach Snyder decides to do any additional punishing, that's his business.

And considering how successful he's been, I'd say he doesn't need your help in running his team.

Please spare me the argument of "We pay his salary, we should have input," because a successful football program will generate more revenue for the Manhattan economy and more alumni donations to the University than Coach Snyder is being paid. (Need proof? Read "Bootlegger's Boy" by Barry Switzer — page 170.)

Finally, you say we need a higher scale to judge K-State football players (because they serve as an example of K-State excellence), and we should have a higher scale to penalize them by. First, is that saying players from the 1993 team should be punished more severely than the ones from the 1989 team because they served as a better example of K-State excellence? If so, you need to get your priorities straight.

Also, if the punishment to a K-State student for riding his bike on the sidewalk without an ID is a $25 fine, handcuffing and detainment, then what is your proposed mechanism to punish Chad May if he chooses to ride a bike on a sidewalk without an ID?

Workshop to discuss sexuality

JENNIFER PETERSON
Collegian

K-State students will have the opportunity to talk about sexuality at a 10-week workshop sponsored by University Counseling Services.

"We're taught in many ways not to talk about sex," said Marcia McCoy, pre-doctoral psychology intern at University Counseling Services.

She said there are myths that sex should be spontaneous and that a person is promiscuous if they talk about it.

The workshops are designed to teach people to feel comfortable talking about sex, especially communicating with a sexual partner, McCoy said.

Anyone may attend the workshops, but space is limited, and there is a screening process, so those interested should register in advance, Mary O'Donnell, therapist at Counseling Services, said.

"Sexuality is a really important topic," O'Donnell said. "It affects our lives every day until the day we die."

"Sexuality is more than just body parts and plumbing. It's everything about sex," she said.

O'Donnell said sexuality has to do with being male or female. It has to do with gender roles, relating, parenting skills, feelings, values, love and like.

"Sexuality is the acts, facts and the feelings — all of it," she said.

She said people might think they have better information about sexuality because of the media's bombardment of the topic.

However, she said people are just getting more confused, and they are still embarrassed to talk about sexuality.

"We might think we have better information, but from working with people, I know that is not true," O'Donnell said.

McCoy said the workshop is designed to reach people they are not typically used to seeing.

She said people don't necessarily need to feel like they have a problem to come to the sessions.

McCoy said the basic format of the workshop will be to do some interactive presentations, small-group discussions and some different exercises on how to gain communication skills.

"It's a chance to learn and a chance to practice communication skills," McCoy said.

O'Donnell said the session is also going to address issues such as working through interpersonal skills and managing dating.

MEETING TIMES

The sexuality workshops begin Tuesday and will run through Nov. 22. The sessions will be from 7:30 to 9:30 p.m. Tuesdays in the conference room at University Counseling Services in Lafene Health Center.

3 issues to dominate Carlin campaign

LEIGH BELLINGER
Collegian

John Carlin, 2nd congressional district candidate, said he is running a non-partisan campaign.

Carlin said that during his time out of the political limelight, he has noticed a disturbing trend in politics.

"I think it's tragic what has been taking place for some time, where partisanship dominates almost every day of the year, year after year," Carlin said on a campaign stop Wednesday in Manhattan.

This division along party lines is something he would like to change, he said, if he wins the Nov. 8 election against his Republican opponent, Sam Brownback.

As a Democratic governor who presided over a Republican legislature, he was still able to accomplish things during his time in office, he said.

It has been four years since he ran unsuccessfully for the Democratic nomination for governor and seven years since he last held public office.

The 1962 K-State graduate said he considers himself an agent of change who is willing to step across party lines to get something accomplished.

"I intend to work very, very hard to see to it that I make my contribution in taking us back to true debate, true dialogue to resolve differences," he said.

Three issues will dominate the agenda when the U.S. House of Representatives meets for the new session in January, Carlin said.

These are health care, welfare reform and the deficit.

Leading up to November, Carlin said, those three issues will not necessarily have an effect on the election. He said the biggest concern he has found among voters is crime, even though the crime bill became a reality this week.

"There's a much bigger universe out here on the issue of crime than that portion that was dealt with by the Congress and the signature of the president," Carlin said.

To deal with the issue of crime, he said, he would like to see new prevention programs emerge.

The government can play a limited role in this, but communities need to get involved if programs are to succeed, he said.

Another concern for voters is politicians who spend most of their time away from their districts.

Carlin said he would continue to live in the 2nd district and commute to Washington, D.C., to do his job.

IMPORTANT NOTICE OF PROPOSED SETTLEMENT OF CLASS ACTION AND FAIRNESS HEARING

IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF ALABAMA SOUTHERN DIVISION

NO. 94-0647-CB-S

U.S. WORKERS WITH ON-THE-JOB EXPOSURE TO GALECRON®

and Their Spouses, Children, Other Relatives and Legal Representatives:

GALECRON® WAS A COMMERCIAL AGRICULTURAL PESTICIDE WHICH WAS MARKETED IN THE U.S. BY CIBA-GEIGY CORPORATION. IT WAS NOT MARKETED FOR RESIDENTIAL OR HOME GARDENING USE.

U.S. WORKERS WITH ON-THE-JOB EXPOSURE TO GALECRON® MAY BE ELIGIBLE FOR FREE MEDICAL MONITORING AND/OR CASH PAYMENTS UNDER A PROPOSED LEGAL SETTLEMENT.

You may belong to a class of people covered by a proposed settlement of a legal action ("Settlement"), and you may be entitled to receive the benefits of the Settlement. This Notice tells who is covered by the Settlement, and describes the litigation, the benefits of the proposed Settlement, and your legal rights. All Settlement Class members who do not timely exclude themselves from the lawsuit will be bound by the Settlement if it is approved.

PLEASE READ THIS NOTICE CAREFULLY - IT MAY AFFECT YOUR LEGAL RIGHTS - FOR MORE INFORMATION CALL 1-800-565-3126

By Order of the United States District Court for the Southern District of Alabama, a class action has been conditionally certified for settlement purposes on behalf of Settlement Class Members (as defined below) who may now or later have claims against Ciba-Geigy Corporation arising out of work-related exposure to Galecron®. On January 30, 1995, a fairness hearing will be held at the Courthouse, United States District Court, Southern District of Alabama, 113 St. Joseph St., Mobile, Alabama, 36602, at 9:00 a.m. Central Time, so the Court can determine if the class action should be finally certified and if the Settlement summarized in the Notice should be approved as fair, reasonable and adequate. This hearing may be continued without further notice.

I. DEFINITION OF CLASS

Under the Settlement, Galecron® is defined as chlordimeform or any chlordimeform-containing product, either manufactured, formulated, packaged, distributed or sold by or on behalf of Ciba-Geigy Corporation or related parties, regardless of the trade name of the product; or any metabolite of Galecron®, including the substance known as 4-COT or 5-CAT.

The Settlement Class is defined as:

(1) All persons who fall into one of the following categories, and who reside in the United States as of the date of filing of the Class Action Complaint, who have been exposed in the United States to Galecron® ("Exposed Persons")

a. Plant Workers: An individual (whether or not employed by Ciba-Geigy Corporation) who in the course of his or her employment at Ciba-Geigy Corporation's St. Gabriel, Louisiana or McIntosh, Alabama sites, was exposed to Galecron®, including, without limitation, individuals who worked in manufacturing, formulating or packaging Galecron® or in the waste disposal of Galecron®, or worked in the construction, demolition or maintenance of any facilities used for the foregoing activities at such St. Gabriel, Louisiana or McIntosh, Alabama sites; or

b. Formulators: An individual (whether or not employed by Ciba-Geigy Corporation) who in the course of his or her employment was exposed to Galecron® while at a plant or site which was involved in mixing, blending, packaging, handling or otherwise formulating pesticides which contained, in whole or in part, Galecron®; or

c. Applicators: An individual (whether or not employed by Ciba-Geigy Corporation) who in the course of his or her employment, was exposed to Galecron® while involved in the application of pesticides which contained, in whole or in part, Galecron®, including, without limitation, aerial and land applicators, flagmen, mixers, blenders, loaders and other individuals who handled such pesticide prior to or during the application process; and

d. Other Covered Workers: An individual (whether or not employed by Ciba-Geigy Corporation) who in the course of his or her employment was exposed to Galecron® at the Clean Land, Air, Water Corporation or Environmental Purification Advancement, Inc. disposal sites located near Bayou Sorrel, Louisiana; at Empak, Inc. in Deer Park, Texas; or in a testing or research laboratory, whether or not owned by Ciba-Geigy Corporation; or

(2) The spouses, parents, children or other relatives of the Exposed Persons described above.

(Collectively "Settlement Class Members"). Note: If you are an Exposed Person, you are a Settlement Class Member whether or not you have been diagnosed with an illness. Spouses, parents, children or other relatives are Settlement Class Members but the claims they are settling are limited to those arising from an Exposed Person's exposure.

Relevant Dates

Galecron® was registered for use from 1968-1989. Some Exposed Persons may have been exposed before or after those dates.

II. IMPORTANT MEDICAL NOTICE

To Plant Workers, Formulators, Applicators and Other Covered Workers (as defined above):

You may have an increased risk of developing bladder cancer if you had on-the-job exposure to Galecron®. Workers exposed to Galecron® should participate in a medical monitoring program because early detection of bladder cancer can result in more effective treatment. As part of the Settlement, Ciba-Geigy has agreed to establish a medical monitoring program for the detection of bladder cancer for those individuals who do not exclude themselves from the lawsuit. Within six months, this program should be available free of charge to all Exposed Persons who do not exclude themselves from the lawsuit.

If you had on-the-job exposure to Galecron®, it is recommended that you or your doctor call 1-800-565-3126 to learn how you can obtain further medical information or enroll in the medical monitoring program.

III. BRIEF SUMMARY OF LITIGATION

On February 8, 1994, a class action lawsuit was filed against defendant, Ciba-Geigy Corporation ("Ciba-Geigy"), in Alabama State Court, which lawsuit was later removed to the United States District Court for the Southern District of Alabama. The Complaint, as amended, alleges that the Settlement Class as defined above is entitled to damages for medical monitoring and other compensation as a result of Exposed Persons' exposure to Galecron®.

Ciba-Geigy has filed an Answer denying all essential allegations of the Complaint, and asserting affirmative legal defenses. The Court has decided that the case can proceed as a class action for purposes of settlement only. This does not mean that the Class Representatives would have been successful had the case gone to trial. The Court has made no such determination, and the proposed Settlement is not to be construed as an expression of any opinion by the Court as to the merits of any of the claims asserted against Ciba-Geigy.

IV. PROPOSED SETTLEMENT

A Settlement has been entered into between the Class Representatives, Class Counsel and Ciba-Geigy, which will resolve all past, present and future claims against Ciba-Geigy arising out of Exposed Persons' exposure to Galecron®. The Settlement provides for the establishment by Ciba-Geigy of two funds to provide medical benefits and compensation to Exposed Persons or their legal representatives.

(1) The Medical Monitoring and Treatment Fund ("The MMT Fund"). If the Settlement is approved, Ciba-Geigy will make an initial deposit of $5,000,000 into the MMT Fund, and will thereafter make additional deposits on an as-needed basis. There is no limit to the amount of money Ciba-Geigy can be required to contribute over the life of this Fund.

The MMT Fund will pay for a medical monitoring program designed to detect at an early stage the form of bladder cancer alleged to be associated with Galecron®: specifically, primary urothelial carcinoma of the urinary collecting system, i.e., renal pelvis, ureter, bladder and urethra. The MMT Fund also will pay for all medically necessary treatment not paid for by Medicare or Medicaid if the Exposed Person has been or in the future is diagnosed with such bladder cancer.

The MMT Fund will pay for medical monitoring to Exposed Persons for a period of 20 years, and will pay for medical treatment until one full year passes with no claims for treatment being filed but in no event less than 20 years. Ciba-Geigy will have no obligation to continue the medical monitoring and treatment program if the Settlement is not approved. Only Exposed Persons, i.e., eligible Plant Workers, Formulators, Applicators and Other Covered Workers, as defined in this Notice, will be entitled to medical monitoring and treatment.

(2) The Disease Compensation and Administration Fund ("The DCA Fund"). If the Settlement is approved, Ciba-Geigy will also make an initial deposit of $30,000,000 into the DCA Fund. In addition to medical treatment paid for by the MMT Fund, the DCA Fund will make cash payments of up to $410,000, as set forth in more detail below, on behalf of an Exposed Person who, after exposure to Galecron®, has developed or in the future develops the form of bladder cancer alleged to be associated with Galecron®: specifically, primary urothelial carcinoma of the urinary collecting system, i.e., renal pelvis, ureter, bladder and urethra. Cash payments will vary depending upon the Exposed Person's age, smoking status and participation in the health screening program. For Exposed Persons who are non-smokers and participants in the health screening program, the cash payments will be as follows: (a) $10,000 in the event of treatment involving an invasive procedure (this is a one-time payment regardless of the number of procedures); (b) up to $150,000 in the event of a radical cystectomy (bladder removal) with diversion of the urinary tract, which amount will decrease with a person's age to a minimum of $10,000 if the Exposed Person is 85 years or older; and (c) up to $250,000 in the event an Exposed Person's death is found to be caused by bladder cancer, which amount will decrease with age to a minimum of $17,500 if the Exposed Person is 85 years or older. An Exposed Person may collect separately for (a), (b) and (c) above, so that the maximum payment to an Exposed Person is $410,000. The cash payments described above will be reduced by 12.5% if the Exposed Person had smoked in the five years prior to diagnosis. A separate 12.5% reduction will be made if he or she had failed to participate in the health screening program in each of the three years prior to diagnosis (or in each year that the program was available, if less than three years). The DCA Fund also will pay $1,000 to any Exposed Person who was diagnosed with hemorrhagic cystitis within three months following exposure (this is a one-time payment regardless of the number of manifestations). In addition, the DCA Fund will pay for administrative costs, and class counsel's attorneys' fees, costs and expenses as determined by the Court. All cash payments from the DCA Fund are paid only on account of a compensable claim of an Exposed Person, i.e., an eligible Plant Worker, Formulator, Applicator or Other Covered Worker, as defined in this Notice. Cash payments to a spouse, parent, child or other relative will only be made if they are the legal representative of an Exposed Person.

The benefits of the DCA Fund will continue as long as the MMT Fund continues, or until the DCA Fund is exhausted as set forth below. Ciba-Geigy has agreed to pay up to a maximum of $45,000,000 for the benefits afforded by that Fund. If the DCA Fund is exhausted, Ciba-Geigy may continue paying for compensable claims. If Ciba-Geigy does not continue to pay, Settlement Class Members will be able to opt-out of the DCA Fund and will regain their right to pursue any legal claims they may have, except for claims for medical monitoring, medical treatment, fear of illness or cancer, or increased risk of illness or cancer, because medical monitoring and treatment will continue to be available.

(3) Other Conditions. The Stipulation of Settlement presently provides for medical monitoring, treatment and compensation payments for certain medical conditions set forth in this Notice. In the event, however, that a Court approved Epidemiology Panel determines to a reasonable medical certainty that any other medical condition is caused by Galecron® exposure, that condition will be deemed a compensable claim, and will be eligible for medical monitoring (if feasible); medical treatment; and cash payments. The cash payments will not exceed the maximum amounts payable for the covered medical conditions set forth above.

(4) Administrator. A nationally recognized entity or entities with substantial investment and medical claims administration experience will be appointed by the Court to administer the Settlement. The Administrator will determine whether a Settlement Class Member is eligible for benefits under the settlement. Any disputes concerning a Settlement Class Member's entitlement to benefits will be resolved by a Medical Advisory Panel or by a single arbitrator, depending upon the issue in dispute. The decision of the Medical Advisory Panel or arbitrator each have the effect of an arbitration decision and shall be binding upon all parties, including the Settlement Class Member.

(5) Release. Settlement Class Members who do not exclude themselves from the Class release all past, present and future claims: (i) relating to the covered medical conditions listed above; and (ii) relating to an Exposed Person's exposure to Galecron®, including all claims alleging that any other cancers, personal injuries or risks are caused by exposure to Galecron®. This means that claims that Galecron® exposure caused any condition other than those medical conditions listed above will be released, but will receive no compensation or treatment, unless the Court approved Epidemiology Panel finds that such other condition is caused by Galecron® exposure. The release is effective as against Ciba-Geigy and certain additional releasees as defined in the Stipulation of Settlement, including Ciba-Geigy, Ltd., the parent of Ciba-Geigy.

If you believe you are a member of the Settlement Class, and have any questions regarding any of the benefits set forth above, you are urged to call 1-800-565-3126 for further information.

V. CLASS REPRESENTATIVES AND CLASS COUNSEL

The Court has designated the following Settlement Class Members, Russell W. Price, Leslie E. Hoven, Grady W. Brown, Jennie Ropp Brown, Jack Harley Woodward, Alta Woodward, Joe H. Bowman and Martha Annie Bowman, as class representatives to represent all Settlement Class Members. The Court has also designated as Class Counsel the following individuals: Timothy E. Eble; J. Cecil Gardner; Joseph J. McKernan; S.C. Middlebrooks III; Charles W. Patrick, Jr.; and Patrick W. Pendley.

The Class Representatives and Class Counsel believe that the proposed Settlement is fair, reasonable and adequate. Class Representatives and Class Counsel have entered into the proposed Settlement after weighing the substantial benefits against the probabilities of success or failure, and the long delays that would be likely if the case proceeded to trial.

There has been no agreement between the parties regarding attorneys' fees. At the fairness hearing, Class Counsel will request the Court to award attorneys' fees and reimbursement of costs and expenses, to be paid from the DCA Fund. Class counsel will request a percentage fee award not to exceed 20% of the benefit conferred on the class, half of which will be requested to be paid over a 4-year period while legal work continues.

VI. RIGHTS AND OPTIONS OF SETTLEMENT CLASS MEMBERS

If you are a Settlement Class Member, you have the following options:

(1) You may do nothing and remain a Settlement Class Member. If you choose to take no action, your interests as a member of the Settlement Class will be represented by the Class Representatives and Class Counsel, at no cost to you individually. You will be bound by any judgment or final disposition of the litigation, and may participate in the benefits available as a member of the Settlement Class. It is important, however, to fill out the REQUEST FOR INFORMATION FORM in order to learn how to receive benefits.

(2) You may remain a Settlement Class Member and either represent yourself or hire your own attorney to represent you at your own cost. You or your attorney must file an Entry of Appearance with the Clerk of the Court and send a copy to Class Counsel and Ciba-Geigy, at the addresses set forth below. Such Entry of Appearance must be filed by December 16, 1994.

(3) You may remain a Settlement Class Member and object to the Settlement. Any Settlement Class Member who does not elect exclusion from the Settlement Class and who objects to the proposed Settlement must mail such objections and any supporting papers to the Clerk of Court, at the address set forth below, on or before December 16, 1994. If the person filing the objection intends to appear personally at the January 30, 1995 Fairness Hearing described above, he or she must file with the Clerk, on or before December 16, 1994, a Notice of Intent to Appear. Any Settlement Class Member who does not file objections in the time and manner described above is forever foreclosed from raising any objection to such matters. Any Settlement Class Member whose objection is overruled will still be bound by any judgment or final disposition of the litigation. Copies of all objections and Notices of Intent to Appear that are mailed to the Clerk of Court must also be mailed to Class Counsel and to counsel for Ciba-Geigy at the following addresses:

Class Counsel	Counsel for Ciba-Geigy
Galecron Class Action	Henry B. Alsobrook, Jr.
P. O. Box 974	Adams and Reese
Charleston, SC 29402	4500 One Shell Square
	New Orleans, LA 70139

(4) If you choose to remain a Settlement Class Member (under Options 1, 2 or 3 above), you may receive the benefits afforded by this Settlement within six months of the Court's Order directing this Notice. Ciba-Geigy has agreed to make all benefits afforded by this Settlement available to Settlement Class Members on an interim basis prior to final Court approval of the Settlement. The appropriate Proof of Claim forms will be required (see Section VII below), and an appropriate release will be required for any cash payments made. During this interim claims procedure, class counsel's fees and expenses will be paid upon approval of the Court and ultimately deducted from the DCA Fund initial deposit.

(5) You may request exclusion from the Settlement Class. If you elect to be excluded from the Settlement Class, you will not be bound by any judgment, disposition, or settlement of the class action, but you also will not be able to participate in the Settlement. You will retain and be free to pursue any claims you may have. If you wish to exclude yourself from the Settlement Class, you must mail a request for exclusion to the following:

Clerk of Court
United States District Court
For the Southern District of Alabama
113 St. Joseph Street
Mobile, Alabama 36602

Your exclusion request must set forth your full name and current address. Your written request for exclusion must be postmarked no later than December 16, 1994.

VII. PROOF OF CLAIM PROCEDURE

In order for an Exposed Person to receive medical monitoring, he or she will be required to submit proof of certain employment-related exposure to Galecron®. In order to receive medical treatment or the disease compensation outlined above, a Settlement Class Member will also be required to have been diagnosed, subsequent to exposure, with one of the covered medical conditions listed above. A Proof of Claim to participate in medical monitoring may be submitted at any time during the duration of the program. A Proof of Claim for a covered medical condition must be submitted within one year of diagnosis (or, if the condition has already been diagnosed, within one year after approval of the Settlement).

The Proof of Claim is designed so that you may complete it yourself. Class Counsel is available to answer questions you may have about claims procedures, without charge to you. If you desire legal assistance, you are free to retain an attorney of your choice.

To obtain a Proof of Claim Form for medical monitoring, medical treatment or disease compensation, please call 1-800-565-3126 or fill out the REQUEST FOR INFORMATION FORM below and mail it to Class Counsel at P.O. Box 974, Charleston, SC 29402. No benefits will be available to any member of the Settlement Class unless he or she submits the necessary Proof of Claim Form.

VIII. FOR FURTHER INFORMATION

THIS NOTICE IS ONLY A SUMMARY. The complete terms of the Settlement, and all other pleadings and relevant documents in this litigation, are on file and may be examined or copied during regular business hours at the offices of the Clerk of the Court, United States District Court, 113 St. Joseph Street, Mobile, Alabama 36602. DO NOT CALL THE CLERK OF COURT if you have any questions about this Notice or the Settlement. Address any questions regarding this Notice or Settlement in writing to the Class Counsel at P. O. Box 974, Charleston, SC 29402, or by calling 1-800-565-3126.

Any requests for additional information, like the Proof of Claims Forms or a complete copy of the Settlement, should be made by calling 1-800-565-3126, or by filling out the REQUEST FOR INFORMATION FORM below and mailing it to Class Counsel. It is recommended that all Settlement Class Members who do not wish to exclude themselves mail the REQUEST FOR INFORMATION FORM, as it will facilitate further communication if the Court approves the Settlement. If you do not mail the attached form, the Court may not be able to communicate with you directly and you may not learn how to receive your benefits.

Harriers test field at Lincoln

Coach splitting team to ease fatigue caused by too many races

DEBO ADEJUNMOBI
Collegian

The K-State cross country team will compete in its second meet of the season Saturday at the Woody Greeno Invitational in Lincoln, Neb., Saturday.

The field will include such notables as Drake and Colorado State.

However, the team's stiffest competition will come from defending Big Eight champion Nebraska.

"It's going to be good for me to get to see Nebraska," coach Terry Drake said of the Nebraska women's team. "They are defending Big Eight champions, so it's going to be good for me to see how we stack up, even though I'm not taking my best team."

His best team would include Jeanene Rugan, Irma Betancourt and Charity Swartz, the top three runners on the women's side, but Drake has elected to sit them down this week.

"The main reason behind that is we've got three meets in a row, three consecutive weekends," Drake said.

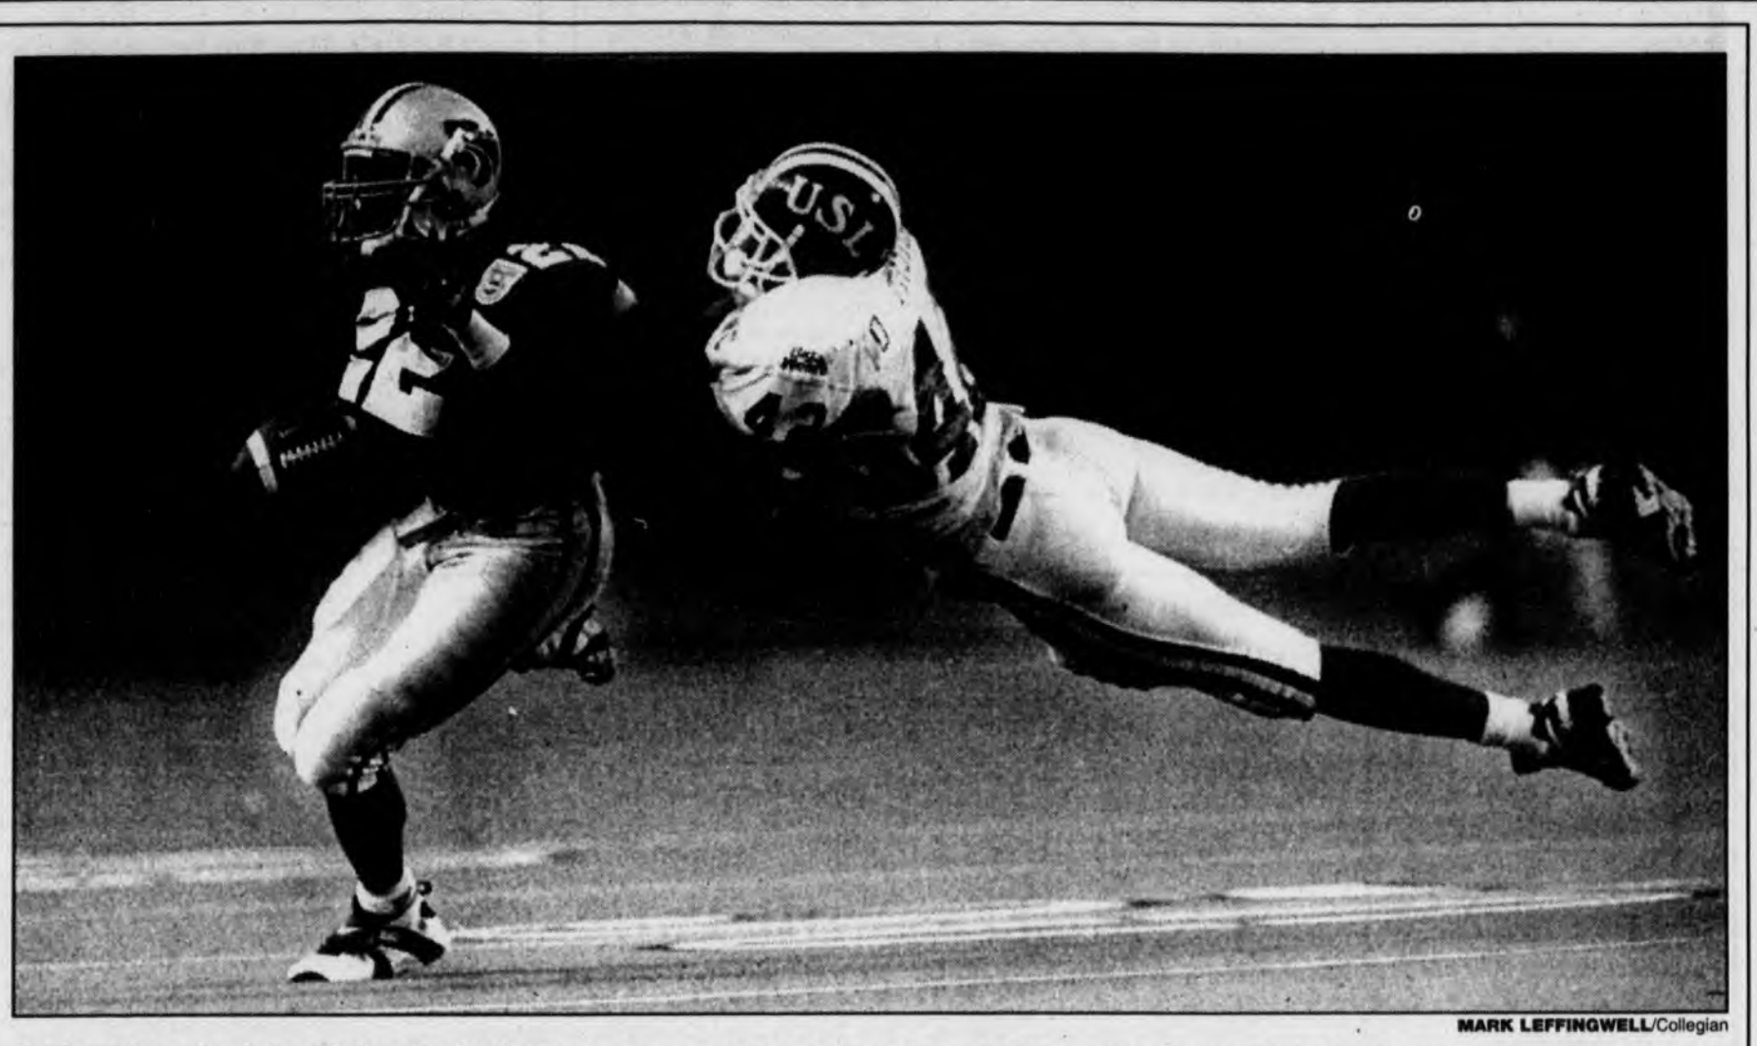
"That's just a lot of racing. Generally, I like to go every other weekend. So, I'm splitting the teams up over the next three meets so that it happens that they have a meet every other weekend. This one just happens to be the lesser of the three, so I'm holding out my good ones," he said.

Last weekend, the Wildcats ran in the Baker Wildcat Invitational at Baker University.

At that meet, Drake fielded a team made up of freshman and sophomores and was very impressed.

"My freshmen competed very well, something we didn't have last year," Drake said. "That was the most important thing to me, that I have some freshman that are willing to compete. It really adds to our depth."

Drake said the team overall is way ahead of where it was last year simply because of its training regimen. He was able to direct his athletes's training with more consistency this summer, which has led to better performance and attitude. Senior Billy Wuggazer said he agrees.



"Last summer, I really didn't start training until August. This year, I've been training since the middle of June," Wuggazer said. "So mileage-wise, I've gotten a lot more in this summer.

"I feel like I'm in a lot better shape this year than I was last year at this time."

Wuggazer is also optimistic about the men's team this year. He said they are much more focused as opposed to last year.

He is the only runner returning from last season's team with significant experience.

"We have more people this year, and they seem to have their heads on straighter than some people did last year," Wuggazer said.

Rice offense concerns Wildcats

WESS HUDELSON
Collegian

The results of K-State's extra practice during an extra week off will be on display when the Wildcats face the Rice Owls at 1:10 p.m. Saturday at KSU Stadium.

"We made some strides and improvements in several different areas," Coach Bill Snyder said.

Although the break came earlier than it usually does, Snyder said it was still beneficial.

"With this team, yes," Snyder said. "We want to give some of our young players every opportunity to play as well as they can. The week off gave us that chance."

GAME-DAY INFO
Date: Saturday, Sept.17
Kickoff: 1:10 p.m.
Place: KSU Stadium
The opponent: Rice Owls
This season's record: 0-1
Owls to watch:
#7 Josh LaRocca, QB
#2 Emerson Allen, split end
#24 Spencer George, FB
#56 Joe Davis, ILB
#26 Larry Izzo, ILB
#44 Deric Rutherford, DE

The week off was used to learn how to stop the Owls' offense.

Rice runs a spread-option offense in which several different formations are used.

The Owls ran wishbone, one-back and run-and-shoot formations against Tulane last Saturday, Snyder said. Rice lost 15-13.

While one of Rice's formations looks like the run and shoot, it is not. Snyder said it is just the Owls' own passing formation.

The offense was installed this season by new coach Ken Hatfield.

Snyder said the offense still appeared new to the Rice players early in the game, but they gained confidence as the contest progressed.

"Their execution was weak at the beginning of the game, but it got better and better as the game went along," Snyder said.

Statistics tend to back up his claim. The offense gathered 125 of its 272 total yards in the fourth quarter. The offensive surge included touchdown drives of 80 and 72 yards.

Josh LaRocca, Owls' quarterback, completed four of five passes, including a 47-yard touchdown strike to Ed Howard, during the two touchdown drives totaling 71 yards.

LaRocca suffered a shoulder injury against Duke in 1992 that forced him to sit out all of 1993.

"LaRocca is a very confident thrower and has the ability to throw well in play-action-pass situations," Snyder said.

Snyder said the Rice defense subscribes to a bend-but-don't-break philosophy.

"They play very hard and are a very sound defense at all positions," Snyder said. "His (Hatfield's) defenses have always have been known as solid."

Last Saturday, Rice allowed Tulane five field goals but managed to keep the Green Wave out of the end zone.

Rice's stinginess close to the end zone is cause for concern for the K-State offense, Snyder said.

"We have spent time working on red-zone offense, but that is something we always address," Snyder said.

Running was sidelined for the season-opening game against Southwestern Louisiana after undergoing surgery to repair ligaments in his thumb.

Hanks' lawyer makes plea

COLLEGIAN STAFF

Bob Pottroff, representing Steve Hanks in his charge of driving under the influence of alcohol or drugs, entered a plea of not guilty Thursday morning in Manhattan Municipal Court.

However, Pottroff expressed to Judge Patrick Caffey that he wanted to keep the option of diversion open to Hanks.

Pottroff has until Sept. 29 to file a motion for diversion.

The reason the motion for diversion has not been filed yet, Pottroff said, was that he hadn't received a full report of the incident from police.

A diversion hearing was scheduled for 2 p.m. Oct. 13 by Judge Caffey.

Hanks was not present for the hearing.

"The diversion hearing is really a conference between the judge, defense and the prosecution," Pottroff said.

Diversion does just what is says, Pottroff said. It diverts the case out of the judicial system.

If a diversion agreement is reached, Hanks could be required to perform community service, pay a fine and/or complete an alcohol-treatment program.

Royals clean house for young players

ASSOCIATED PRESS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Kansas City manager Hal McRae and all his coaches were fired Thursday as the Royals began a youth movement.

General manager Herk Robinson praised McRae and his efforts, but said the Royals would have a number of young players next year, and that change was needed.

Robinson said the club needed a manager who could work with young players.

"We want someone who can understand the young player when they come up and what they have to go through," Robinson said.

"We appreciate the contributions Hal has made in the past four years," Robinson said. "Our focus in the immediate future will be on transition of the young talent from our minor-league system on to the major-league club, and we believe a change in managers is necessary to make this step successful."

Robinson said he did not have a successor in mind.

Team vice president George Brett sat next to Robinson at a news conference but said he was not interested in the job.

"Because then," he said, turning to Robinson, "you'd have to sit up here one day and tell me I wasn't coming back."

Brian McRae, the manager's son and the Royals' center fielder, said he had talked with his father earlier in the day and that, "I think it's something he sort of expected.

"He said they told him they were going with a lot of young players next year. We're going to have a totally different team next year."

McRae

McRae was at his home Wednesday in Bradenton, Fla. A phone call to his home Thursday was not answered.

The Royals had floundered at the .500 mark for the first half of the season but put together a 14-game winning streak just before the players' strike to draw within four games of Chicago in the American League Central. They also were within three games of Cleveland for the wild-card spot in the expanded-playoffs format.

McRae, a .291 lifetime hitter with Cincinnati and Kansas City, succeeded John Wathan as manager in May 1991 and leaves with a 286-277 record.

He was offered the job following the death of Dick Howser in June 1987 but refused because the Royals would not guarantee him more than that season. He went to work as a batting coach for the Montreal Expos before returning to manage the team that he played on since he was traded from Cincinnati in 1972.

McRae has had two public outbursts that embarrassed the image-conscious Royals.

A question from a radio reporter last year threw him into a rage in which he trashed his office and threw objects, one of which struck a longtime beat reporter just below the eye and caused a cut.

He was booed earlier this year in Kauffman Stadium after he made a pitching change, and in his post-game news conference said Royals fans were "dumb" for not understanding the move.

There were hints of divisiveness in the Kansas City clubhouse last year as some players complained about playing time, but no player would comment publicly.

There also have been complaints about his handling of the pitching staff.

McRae refused to talk about being one of the five black managers in major-league baseball. At the batting cage during spring training two years ago, he made it clear it was not an issue to him.

The other black managers are Felipe Alou of Montreal, Don Baylor of Denver, Cito Gaston of Toronto and Dusty Baker of San Francisco.

McRae also refused to talk about managing his son, who is steadily developing into one of the stars of the American League.

The two, however, enjoyed a good relationship in the clubhouse after a rocky start.

McRae had a storied career in which he defined the role of the designated hitter.

He played 17 years and was in eight league championship series and four World Series.

McRae was a member of the 1985 Royals team that beat St. Louis in the 1985 I-70 World Series.

His hard slides out of the base path at second base prompted formation of the "McRae Rule," which requires runners to slide directly into the base.

Kangaroos challenge Wildcats' successful start

JULIE KUHLMAN
Collegian

The K-State volleyball team is enjoying its best start in six years.

Not since 1988 when the Cats' record stood at 8-0 at this point in the season have they recorded as many wins.

K-State will try to add another win to its 6-1 record this weekend when the team goes head-to-head with the UMKC Kangaroos from the Mid-Continent Conference at 2 p.m. Sunday in Ahearn Field House.

Last year, the Cats took care of the Kangaroos, beating them in three games, 15-13, 15-11 and 15-5.

"I don't know much about them except that they beat Missouri, and they went five games with Kansas," sophomore hitter Yolanda Young said.

Last week, K-State went 3-1 at the Sizzler Showcase Tournament in Corvallis, Ore.

Young and Kate DeClerk were both named to the all-tournament team.

"They were a very disciplined team, and they executed well," Coach Jim Moore said.

"My offense is high-risk anyway, and since we're still learning it, we're going to be error prone," he said.

Young said the Cats haven't been doing anything different in practice to prepare for UMKC.

Moore said before the season began, he wasn't concerned with other teams as much as getting his team ready to play.

Smatterings

Compiled from Collegian staff and Associated Press reports

"I will park there if I want to, Schmucko!"

Five Cleveland city employees were fired, and nine others were demoted or suspended for voiding their own parking tickets, Mayor Michael White said Wednesday.

Four of the city's 19 parking-enforcement officers and one clerk were dismissed for blatant misconduct, White said. Some had voided 20 or more of their own tickets this year.

The highest-ranking official to be disciplined, Parking Facilities Commissioner Greg Shumate, was transferred to a lower-paying job. Eight others, including four supervisors, were demoted or suspended or both.

White said Shumate and other supervisors were unaware of the ticket voiding and had been disciplined for lax management.

Parking-enforcement officers would give themselves a ticket — to discourage further ticketing by another officer — and then void it later, said Oliver Spellman, director of the city department that includes the parking-enforcement officers.

White said the matter remained under investigation and said police investigators were checking for criminal wrongdoing.

Spellman said his department was checking the handling of 1,500 tickets voided this year and 3,700 last year.

The city issues about 350,000 tickets a year.

White said that to avoid future abuses, voided tickets would be logged and reviewed daily by two supervisors.

Smatterings was unable to confirm rumors that the fired employees had already been offered positions with K-State's Parking Services.

"They can have my fur when they pry my cold, dead fingers from it."

An animal-rights group has agreed to change an anti-fur ad campaign featuring River Phoenix and Kurt Cobain.

The proposed ads featured photos of Phoenix and Cobain with the headlines: "I Wouldn't Be Caught Dead in Fur," and "You Need Fur Like You Need a Hole in Your Head."

Phoenix, star of "My Own Private Idaho," died last year of a drug overdose. Cobain, leader of the ground-breaking grunge group Nirvana, committed suicide in April with a shotgun blast to the head. Both were active animal-rights activists.

People for the Ethical Treatment of Animals said Wednesday that the families of the late celebrities did not approve but would discuss other ideas.

The campaign was conceived by two design students who were fans of Phoenix and Cobain, PETA representative Dan Mathews said.

"River and Kurt were both irreverent in life, and they thought they might have appreciated these offbeat tributes, especially since it was for the animals," Mathews said.

PETA officials would not release anything officially, but sources close to the organization say they are working with the executors of the Richard Nixon estate to start a campaign featuring the deceased president, with the caption reading, "I wouldn't be caught ordering the bombing of Cambodia in fur."

"When I was your age, I walked to school in the snow." No, really!

A man was sentenced to six months in jail for making his 7-year-old son walk to school in temperatures around zero.

In addition to the jail sentence, municipal judge Rikard Workman fined Huber $500 Tuesday.

Huber testified that he never intended to make his son, Brian, walk the entire way to school.

He said Brian had repeatedly missed the bus, so Huber decided to make him start walking.

Huber said he intended to check on him after a few minutes.

Huber said he couldn't find the boy when he went to check on him and thought he had arrived at school.

If only we had been born into this age of superfluous litigation, we could have had our parents thrown in jail for lima beans and those "when I was your age" stories.

Over-the-counter drugs dangerous when misused

The names of the two sources, identified as "Joe" and "John," have been changed because of the sensitive subject matter. The Collegian does not support or condone the misuse of legal drugs.

There is much concern these days about the abuse of illegal drugs, such as crack and heroin. But there are also legal, over-the-counter drugs that some people might not think of as dangerous.

Laxatives are commonly used as aids in weight loss, along with decongestants, Pam Spaulding, pharmacist at Lafene Health Center, said.

"Decongestants make them feel more fed up, so they don't want to eat," Spaulding said. "But they're not really effective, so that's why they are abused. They keep taking more and more."

Jeff Dumler, pharmacist at Lafene, said that inhalers like the ones asthma sufferers use and Vicks inhalers are also misused.

"The ones (inhalers) they could get high on have been removed from the shelves," Spaulding said.

Other stimulants, like Vivarin, are also misused, Spaulding said.

"We don't hear a lot about it," Spaulding said. "We have a limited stock of over-the-counter drugs."

"Joe" and "John" said that sleep aids such as Excedrin PM are often used as a relaxant, and cough medicines like Robitussin and NyQuil can get a person high.

"I've known people that slammed a whole bottle of NyQuil and saw hallucinations," Joe said.

Mini-thins or trucker speed is another upper that people use for weight loss, Joe said.

"Mini-thins wire you more than No-Doz because they're not just caffeine," Joe said. "They have some kind of ephedrine in them. They're like over-the-counter speed."

Another abused inhalant that most wouldn't think of as an over-the-counter drug is nitrous oxide, commonly known as laughing gas.

Nitrous is inhaled and gives the user a quick high, Joe said.

"It's real common to see tanks of nitrous at Dead shows," Joe said. "They sell it in balloons for about five bucks. I've been known to blow 20 or 30 bucks at one show."

"Nitrous is not illegal," John said. "All you need is a license or someone you know that has one."

"Anyone can buy those, like at catering-supply stores," John said.

"People who buy the cartridges usually clean out the shelf," Joe said. "It's hard for those stores to keep it in stock."

Industrial-grade nitrous is also available to anyone, John said.

"That industrial stuff has sulfur in it, though," John said. "If you're real desperate and don't mind a big headache, it does the trick, but it's pretty dangerous. That stuff can kill you if you're not careful."

"Medical grade is a whole new ball game," Joe said. "It's harder to get a hold of, but it's really good stuff."

Joe and John said that the effect nitrous has is just the opposite as when helium is inhaled.

"It has a sweet flavor," John said. "Instead of tightening your vocal chords, it loosens them and your voice becomes real low. Sometimes you hallucinate."

A nitrous high usually lasts about 10 minutes, Joe said.

"The funny thing about nitrous is they can't do anything about it. Even though people use it to get high, it's not illegal," Joe said.

Dr. Guy Smith, medical director and director of sports medicine at Lafene, said, "If you're stupid enough to inhale nitrous and block out any oxygen, it can kill you."

Smith said he had heard of a case where a dentist abused nitrous almost every day over a long period of time. The dentist soon developed neurological disorders and is now physically and mentally disabled.

Smith also commented on the effects of other abused over-the-counter drugs. He said laxatives can irritate the bowels and cause inflammation, which leads to vitamin deficiencies.

Stimulants such as diet pills and decongestants can cause a person to be irritable and jittery, Smith said.

"All stimulants cause an increase in blood pressure," Smith said. "Some people even experience withdrawal symptoms."

The easy access to quick and easy highs can lead to serious health hazards and difficult consequences in the long run.

Schools should focus on advanced students

CHRISTI WRIGHT
Collegian

America's high schools need to produce more well-rounded and motivated students, a speaker said Thursday.

Henry Helson, a faculty member in the math department at the University of California at Berkeley, spoke to a crowd in Cardwell Hall about his views on education.

"I think high school should provide two things for students," Helson said. "First of all, high school should civilize young people."

Students should learn things like math, science and foreign language and be prepared for life beyond high school, Helson said.

He said one problem high schools face is that they tend to focus on the students at lower learning levels and not the advanced ones.

"High school should also help those with exceptional talent," Helson said.

It is not good to be too involved in extra-curricular activities, but students must be focused on grades and being a well-rounded person as well, Helson said.

"Now students only want to dream about making money in the future," Helson said.

To qualify for an interview for a scholarship at Berkeley, students must have a 3.9 grade point average, he said.

Among the top students, Helson found many of the applicants to be well-rounded, but he questioned them academically.

"I found just a few computer nerds and a few people interested in foreign language," Helson said.

When he inquired about the students' training in math, most told him that their math classes had been easy and not challenging to students.

The interviews with the high-school students made Helson question their ability and whether they deserved straight A's in high school.

"Grades should be a reward to students. Students should work harder to get A's," Helson said. "This also makes me wonder if all the money thrown into schools is being misdirected."

Union Expo to showcase departments

DEBBIE GILL
Collegian

The K-State Union Courtyard has invited all campus organizations to participate in the first Union Expo.

The event will run from 4 to 8 p.m. on Sunday and will showcase the Union's different departments.

"Each department will have a table displaying samples and information about what services it offers. Union tours will also be available to those who are interested," Jack Connaughton, Union associate director, said.

Union Promotions and Marketing coordinator Lorinda Sultzer said invitations to the Expo were mailed to the president and adviser of every campus organization that is approved by the Union Activities Board.

"The purpose is to better educate our customers. We want the students to know the Union is more than just a bookstore or place to buy a Coke," Sultzer said.

Three door prizes worth $200 each in merchandise and gift certificates will be given away at the end of the evening, Peggy Busch, Union accountant and project coordinator, said.

Campus groups do not have to be present at the time of the drawing to win, she said.

"The prizes can be used by the entire group who wins them. There is everything from Copy Center certificates to free movie passes," she said.

The Expo isn't the only promotion the Union has done recently, Connaughton said. It mailed 1,200 packets to K-State faculty with information about what the Union offers.

Roommate's habit is a soggy problem

Dear Cassie,

Our roommate moved in two weeks ago. We three had been living together all summer, and we are all females. Our new roommate is of another species.

He tends to drink more than most.

He will pass out on the living-room floor or couch wearing his boxers.

That is when things hang out and the trouble begins. He will urinate all over the coffee table, couch and the floor.

He refuses to clean up his mess.

What should I do with this leaky faucet?

Signed,
All Wet

Dear All Wet,

You need to have a bit of chat with your new species of a roommate. You and your roommates probably don't appreciate the new sprinkler system that's been installed in your apartment. There's nothing wrong with having a little fun, but really, hosing down the living room on a daily basis is uncalled for.

Tell him you aren't amused by him passing out and hanging out in your humble abode. And if he does lose control of his bladder, he could at least be courteous and clean up his own mess.

If talking to him doesn't work, then call a plumber.

Cat Jam offers variety of music

AMY ZIEGLER

Football, blues and booths.

After watching the Wildcats crumple Rice on Saturday at KSU Stadium, fans can head down to Aggieville for an afternoon of live music entertainment.

The campus radio station, KSDB-FM 91.9, will be presenting the fifth annual Cat Jam from 3 to 7 p.m. Saturday at Triangle Park.

"It's an excellent opportunity for the new students to get out and see what else there is around town as far as the music scene," Steve Strong, band member of The Strength, said.

Joe Montgomery, station director for DB92, said the concert was designed to be in conjunction with game day.

"We get a lot of traffic through Aggieville on game days," he said. "People drive by, and some come over and listen and decide to stay."

The event will start while the game is still going on and will continue well after the end of the game.

"If we have a big enough lead, the fans will come to Aggieville before the game is over," he said.

Taylor said the planning of the event has been successful.

"I was excited to work on the promotions for this event. I've worked with people who were involved in the Cat Jam before, so it's been extremely smooth sailing," Stacey Taylor, promotions director for DB92, said.

Montgomery said the organization of the event has gotten better over the five years that the concert has taken place, but the Cat Jam still has the same basic format.

"We're fairly diverse in entertainment. We always have an alternative, rock, blues and reggae band and then usually invite some acoustic guitarists to play while the bands are setting up," he said.

This year, the live music event will feature Kansas City bands Cher UK, Az-One, and Manhattan blues band The Strength.

Acoustic guitarists Brother Jeb Bolan and Zerf will perform along with the three bands.

Montgomery said DB92 invited some campus and local organizations to set up booths at the Cat Jam this year.

Society for Creative Anachronism, Mothers Against Drunk Driving, the Manhattan AIDS project and Habitat for Humanity are a few of the organizations that will be handing out brochures and answering questions.

"It's a festive atmosphere. When someone is not performing, they can go over and look at the booths," he said. "It's a good way for the community to make good connections."

Former DEA agent: U.S. drug war a farce

MARK LEFFINGWELL/Collegian

Former Drug Enforcement Agency agent Michael Levine speaks to students about his years in the DEA and his new book about his experiences over the past two decades Thursday night in Union Forum Hall.

SUMMER RUCKMAN
Collegian

Michael Levine, a 25-year veteran of the Drug Enforcement Agency, said America's war on drugs is a farce, supported by groups that profit from the government's expenditures.

Levine spoke to an audience of 70 people last night at the K-State Union Forum Hall about his experiences as an undercover agent.

He delivered the two-hour speech in a stand-up comedy style, cracking jokes between making statements about serious issues.

He said drug dealers loved him because of his physical resemblance to a character from the movie "The Godfather."

"The drug dealers thought they were dealing with the mafia," he said. "They loved me."

Levine's investigations allowed the capture of several tons of various illegal substances, the most of any single officer in the United States.

On July 4, 1971, he said he had his first glimpse of reality.

He had penetrated a large Thailand drug-trafficking organization and set up an exchange for the largest heroin bust of the time.

The government pulled him off the case, saying they had other priorities, he said.

He said he later discovered the CIA was protecting the traffickers because they were also anti-communism agents in the Vietnam War.

"I couldn't believe our government was supporting these drug-dealers," he said.

In 1980, he again experienced problems with the government blocking a bust, this time in Bolivia.

"It's like the whole government tried to screw the case," he said. "We dragged the government kicking and screaming into the biggest drug case in history."

After the bust, the U.S. Attorney mysteriously dropped all charges, and the defendants walked away with $9 million in drug money.

"Our government supported what became the major cocaine producer of today," he said.

"I was told to keep my mouth shut, to stay out of it," he said.

"I was afraid of these people, but couldn't back down," he said. "I had to fight."

He was put on a three-year investigation, he said, and there was an attempt on his life.

"I found out I couldn't fight," he said. "I was alone."

Today, Levine travels, talking about his experiences, and has also written two books.

He said he feels his role is one of an informant to spread the word about the fallacies of the anti-drug campaign in America.

The anti-drug campaign generates money for many organizations connected with it, and has strayed from its original, honest purpose.

"It's unfortunate, but it's a phony war," he said.

Government-sponsored rehabilitation programs now act for their own interests to maintain the drug war, he said.

New York, for example, has a $1-billion drug program, which provides numerous jobs for the state, and U.S. banks have a huge interest in the $5-billion worldwide drug trade, he said.

"To this day, a U.S. bank has never been investigated for drug-money laundering," he said. "It spells out an incredible fraud, a treason on all of us.

"In over 11 years, the federal government spent $112 billion on the war on drugs," he said. "They cannot show they saved one child, or made a difference on one street in America."

Kevyn Jacobs, freshman in arts and sciences, summarized his feelings about the anti-drug campaign: "The reason that it is illegal for me to go out and smoke a joint is that there's an economic reason for the anti-drug campaign to exist."

Politicians also contribute to the vicious cycle, Levine said. They encourage the media to hype up drug busts so the war on drugs appears successful.

Levine said he feels his role is to provide this information and let the public do the rest.

He said it's up to citizens to write their representatives and complain about the wasted money on a sham program.

"People like you change it," he said. "Let politicians know that we don't want this."

"They expect me to shut up and go away," he said. "No way."

TODD FEEBACK/Collegian

Specialist Shane Eddy, Fort Riley, stands as firefighters make sure the fire has been extinguished in his engine. Eddy's carcaught on fire as he was driving on Kansas Highway 18 near Manhattan Municipal Airport. A police officer attempted to extinguish the blaze but called in Odgen Rural Fire to finish putting it out. According to firefighters, the fire was caused by a short in the engine compartment.

Public radio gets federal grants

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — Gov. Joan Finney's office announced Thursday that the state has received five federal grants to improve public broadcasting.

K-State will use $30,319 to replace a 25-year-old transmitter for public radio station KKSU-AM.

Wichita State University will receive $10,400 to acquire equipment to improve its public radio station, KMUW-FM.

Smokey Hills Public Television Corp., which operates KOOD-TV in Hays, will receive $114,000 to acquire a secondary audio-programming channel to provide a separate audio to the 22,000 Hispanics in the area.

Leaders relinquish power

15,000 U.S. forces will be in Haiti for the next month, even though Haiti's leaders have agreed to relinquish their power.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — President Clinton's high-risk decision to commit U.S. troops to combat in Haiti was the toughest call of his presidency. The gamble seems to have paid off with the capitulation of Haitian's military leaders.

A U.S. invasion — bringing near certain U.S. casualties — was just narrowly averted. Only the realization that U.S. warplanes were actually in the air persuaded Lt. Gen. Raoul Cedras and two other military leaders to relinquish their hold on power.

Even so, there will still be 15,000 U.S. forces in Haiti for the next month to police terms of the agreement — and they could be targets of guerrilla attacks in a nation where violence has long been the norm.

The operation is still not without risk, Clinton said.

Putting U.S. forces in harm is one of the most wrenching — and loneliest — decisions that a president can make.

A quarter-century after he helped organize protests against U.S. involvement in an unpopular war, Clinton found himself making such a tough decision.

Although no one suggested Haiti could have become another Vietnam, Clinton groped with some of the same problems that bedeviled Lyndon Johnson — whose military policies he protested as a college student at Oxford.

The issue was how to justify risking U.S. lives in what was essentially a civil war.

There was little support in the United States for an invasion of Haiti — either in Congress or among the general public.

And top military leaders had sought to steel Americans to the reality that any invasion would bring U.S. casualties.

As he made his solitary decision to order paratroopers into Haiti — they were recalled en route — Clinton must have been troubled by the specter of nearly certain violence against U.S. forces under any such invasion and occupation.

Drawn-out guerrilla warfare against forces loyal to the generals who would be ousted in an invasion loomed as likely before the breakthrough agreement.

And what about the possibility of bloodshed at the hands of angry mobs? Or U.S. prisoners being paraded through the streets of Port-au-Prince, as a downed U.S. pilot was displayed in Somalia?

And American troops could have been caught in the crossfire as Haitians battled each other.

Even now, American peace-enforcing troops are vulnerable to violence as they try to restore democracy to a nation that has never really known it.

"The risk of guerrilla activity has always been there, no matter how we looked at it," Defense Secretary William Perry told a White House briefing Sunday night.

By threatening force for months, he put himself in a box where failure to carry through on his threat would undermine U.S. credibility and hold Clinton up to worldwide ridicule.

Clinton was battered from all

Football player arrested for DUI Sunday morning

COLLEGIAN STAFF

Another K-State football player was arrested for driving under the influence of alcohol or drugs.

Kelly

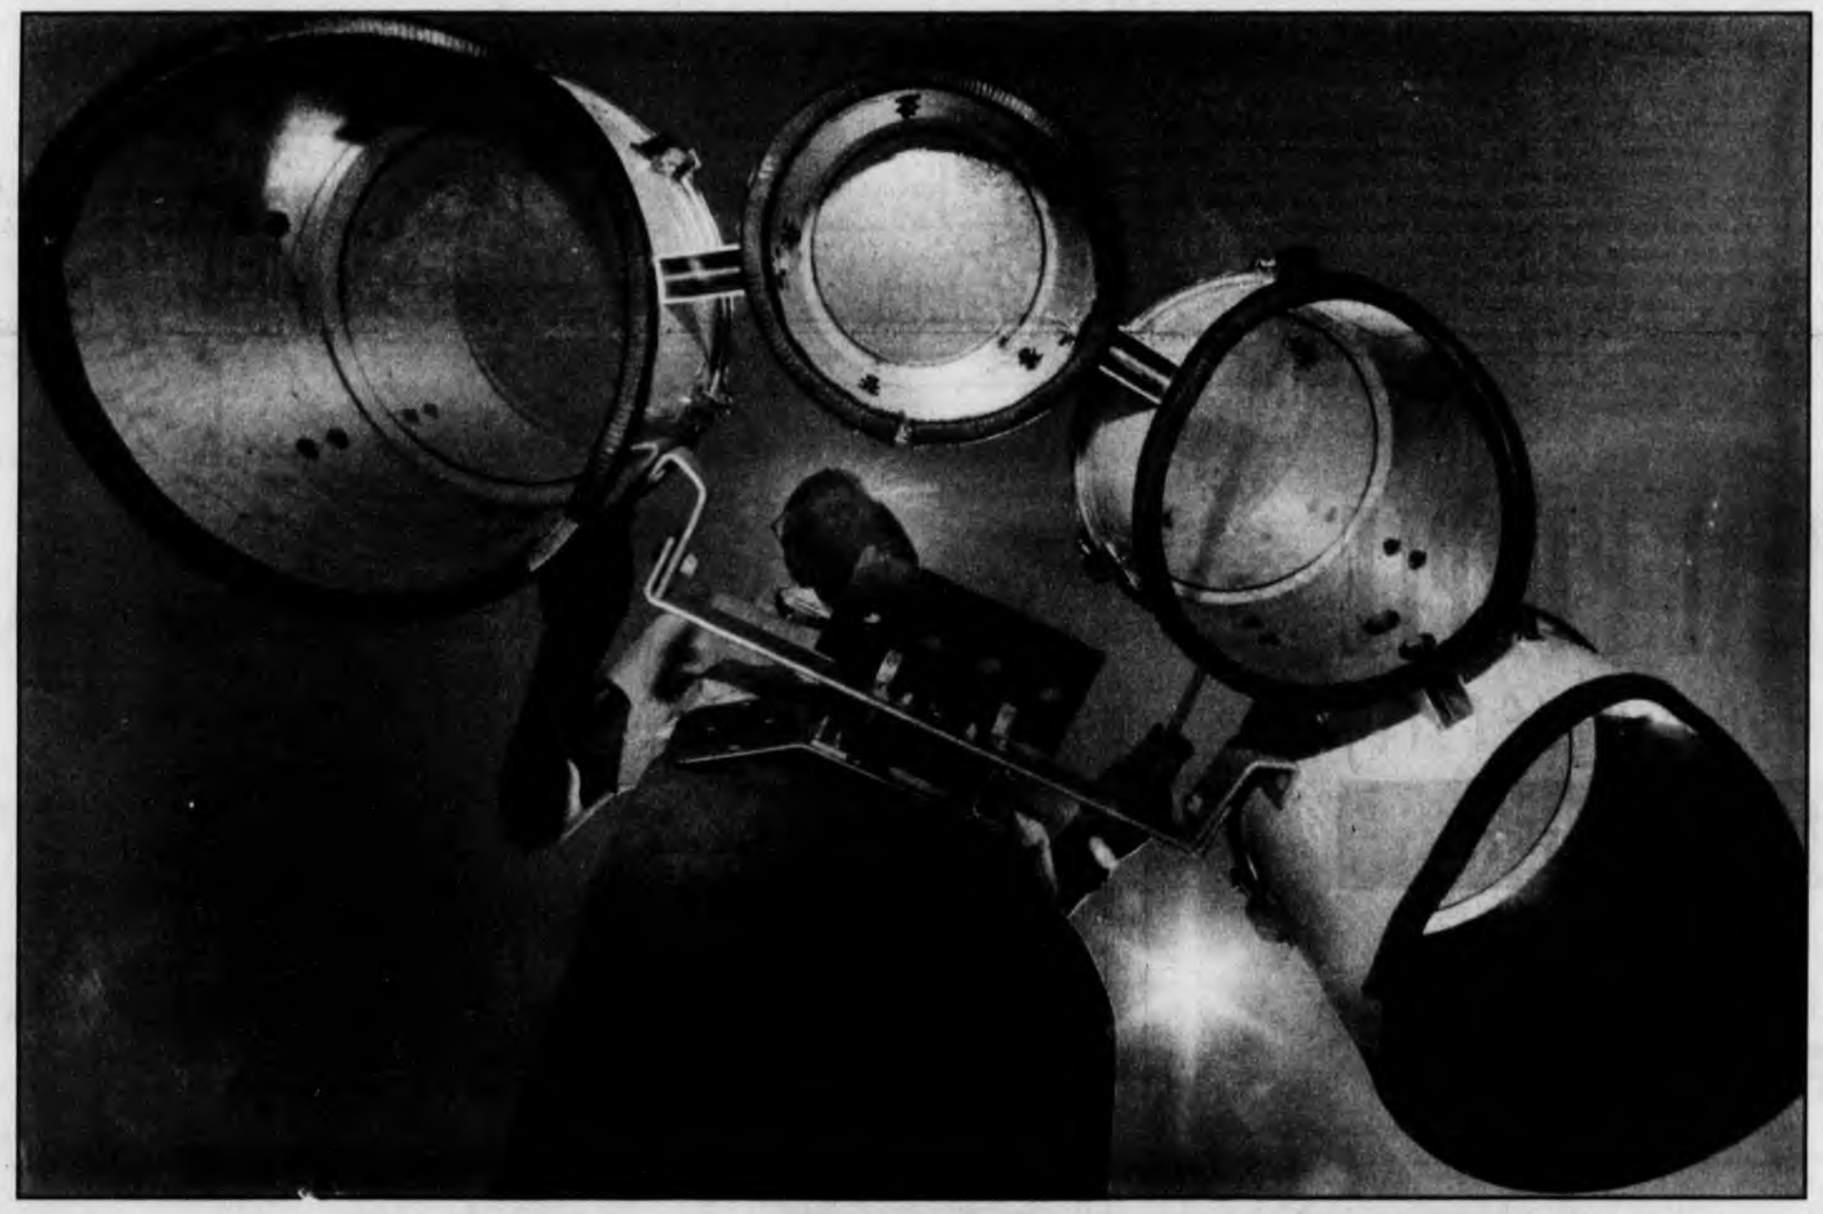
Dederick D. Kelly, a junior fullback, was arrested at 2:28 a.m. on Sunday for DUI. Kelly was arrested at the corner of Oak Street and Poyntz Avenue.

Coach Bill Snyder was unavailable for comment.



Kelly, who plays mainly as a blocking back in short-yardage situations, scored a touchdown for K-State against Southwestern Louisiana.

Last season, Kelly played in 10 games, and he gained 14 yards on two carries in the Copper Bowl. Against Nevada-Las Vegas, he gained 6 yards on two rushes.

However, this season Kelly was seeing more playing time since Rod Schiller injured his knee against Oklahoma State in the last regular season game of last season.

During Hanks' arraignment on Sept. 15, his lawyer Bob Pottroff entered a plea of not guilty, but wanted to keep the option of diversion open.

People sat on blankets, scraps of carpet, tail gates, curbs and lawn chairs Saturday morning on Poyntz Avenue.

The K-State Marching Band led the parade, followed by a Manhattan Fire Department truck, the Manhattan High School band, Little Apple Twirlers and 63 other Kansas high-school bands.

The parade, which lasted from 9 to 10:20 a.m., began at City Park, and the bands marched down Poyntz Ave. to Manhattan Town Center.

"The K-State band sounded exceptional at the parade," Frank Tracz, director of bands, said.

Ed Zechman, freshmen in civil engineering, said the K-State band warmed up by taking two laps around the track.

Chad Carlton, a student at Wamego High School, said they got ready for Band Day by playing at games around Wamego.

The halftime show ended with the K-State Marching Band and the 64 high-school bands playing the "1812 Overture" while Fort

▶ SEASON TICKETS

No seats for ticketholders at Rice game

ANNETTE RIEDL
Collegian

Growing pains caused seating havoc during the K-State-Rice football game Saturday at KSU Stadium.

About 50 students with season tickets were unable to find seating in the student sections, so they sat in open seats in reserved section 32.

When they stood up and yelled for K-State, fans sitting behind them became angry because they had to stand up to watch the game.

The reserved-seating patrons complained to security ushers, who asked the students to sit down.

A shouting match began between students who said the people sitting behind them should be cheering for the Cats, and fans in section 32 said the students should shut up and have some respect.

After both a student and a man from the reserved section were escorted out, the students were asked to stand in the aisle so patrons wanting to sit down could move in front of them.

At halftime, student section 33 became more open. Ushers checked all the tickets of fans in section 32 and asked student ticket holders to move to section 33.

Three ushers continued to monitor the empty bleachers in section 32 throughout the game.

This year, security personnel from Bramlage Coliseum began handling football seating, modeling it after basketball seating in Bramlage, Patrolman James Williamson of K-State Police said.

Campus police served as back-up to Bramlage personnel, Williamson said.

"It seems to be working pretty good," Williamson said.

The students who were asked to move around to find seats did not agree.

"They allow 25,000 students only 2,000 seats," Kaufman said.

He said it wasn't right that the security ushers made them move out of empty seats.

"We got tired of them (the ushers) because they kept making us move," Kaufman said.

"It's nothing against the Bramlage guys themselves," he said. "They're just doing their jobs. It's the people higher up we're angry with."

Casey Masters, senior in finance, said he agreed the student sections are too small.

"They try to squeeze students into too small of a section," Masters said. "Then, they use manpower to monitor empty seats."

Janel Junkersfeld, senior in chemical engineering, said students should have priority seating.

▶ FINANCIAL AID

Direct lending makes loans easier to get

AMY SIMON
Collegian

Borrowing money for college may soon become simpler.

K-State freshmen and sophomores will participate in a direct-lending program during the 1995-96 school year, Larry Moeder, director of student financial assistance, said.

Under the direct lending program, students will borrow funds directly from the federal government. This differs from the current system of borrowing through banks.

Moeder said this new system will be more efficient and less confusing for students. Students will receive a promissory note with their financial aid award letter.

"Right now, we have no control over the system," Moeder said. "The student may forget to sign the promissory note, or the bank may hold up the money, and we wouldn't know it.

"We will now be able to track the aid application through the process," he said.

This program will also simplify the process in another way. Students will receive only one financial aid check during fee payment, Moeder said.

Moeder said the first schools to try direct lending had 30 percent more funds available at fee payment. He said this is good for students because most deferments are for late loan checks.

K-State did not participate in the first year of direct lending.

"We decided not to apply this year precisely because it is a first-year program," Moeder said. "We wanted to wait for the bugs to get worked out."

Administrators will decide whether to expand the direct-lending program at K-State after they see how freshmen and sophomores fare next year, Moeder said

The direct-lending program was part of the reauthorization of the Higher Education Act, which was passed by Congress in 1992.

Direct lending may lead to even an easier form of paying tuition.

"This will eventually lead to fee payment by mail," Moeder said.

NEWS BRIEFS

▶ FIRST MISS AMERICA WITH DISABILITY CROWNED; MISS KANSAS FINALIST

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. (AP) — A deaf dancer from Alabama won the 68th annual Miss America Pageant on Saturday, becoming the first woman with a disability to wear the crown.

Heather Whitestone, a 21-year-old Birmingham native, was the only contestant to win two preliminary competitions, in the swimsuit and talent categories.

Whitestone's platform was, "Youth Motivation: Anything Is Possible."

Whitestone was born with hearing but lost most of it after a reaction to a diphtheria-tetanus shot when she was 18 months old.

She seemed not to realize she'd won when the first runner-up was announced.

"I turned around to (Miss) Virginia, and she said, 'You won,'" Whitestone said at a news conference.

Then she started crying and ducked her head to receive the crown from the outgoing Miss America, Kimberly Aiken.

As she returned to the stage after walking down the runway, she signed, "I love you."

The second runner-up was Miss New Jersey, Jennifer Makris; third runner-up was Miss Georgia, Andrea Krahn; and fourth runner-up was Miss Indiana, Tiffany Storm.

Other finalists were: Miss Montana, Yvonne Dehner; Miss Kansas, Trisha Schaffer; Miss Mississippi, Rebecca Blouin; Miss Ohio, Lea Mack; and Miss Texas, Arian Archer.

▶ FINANCIAL RESTITUTION FOR ASSUALT VICTIMS MAY BE UNCONSTITUTIONAL

BOSTON (AP) — Eight years ago, Kathy Tennihan was beaten so severely her eyes swelled shut.

For months afterward, she crawled because she was too terrified to stand.

Today, the attacker is free after serving 6-1/2 years for assault and battery with intent to murder.

But Tennihan, 46, still pays with mental anguish she said prevents her from even working full time, and she believes her attacker ought to be paying still, too.

She is pushing for a state law to make financial restitution a mandatory part of punishment for violent crimes.

At least two other states have laws requiring attackers to make recovery payments to their victims.

The new federal crime bill requires sex offenders and child molesters to compensate their victims for all losses, including the cost of psychological therapy.

Tennihan and others say victims often need money — not just apologies or stiff sentences for criminals — to recover.

Judges and victims' advocates say mandatory financial restitution can be unconstitutional and tricky to enforce.

But they also say it could help eliminate the disparity between the criminals who serve their time and forget, and the victims who bear scars for the rest of their lives.

▶ BIOSHPERE 2 PROGRAM CUT SHORT; NOW WORKING ON NEW RESEARCH PLAN

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) — Seven people moved out of the sealed Biosphere 2 ecological laboratory Saturday after a six-month stay, severing the project's last ties with a discredited management team.

The conclusion of their stay was a milestone in project backer Ed Bass' efforts to put aside Biosphere's image as a blend of fuzzy science and New Age philosophy and legitimize the glass dome as a research tool accepted by mainstream scientists.

"I think this mission will become known as the shakeup cruise," crew captain John Druitt, of England, said.

The project's first two-year mission, which ended last Sept. 26, was known as the shakedown cruise.

"We've shaken the Biosphere from top to bottom and all the loose ends have fallen out," Druitt said.

Biosphere's new administration has created a research consortium with scientists from Columbia University's Lamont-Doherty Earth Observatory. A team of top scientific consultants has begun writing a series of papers to be the basis of a new scientific research plan.

One problem Biosphere 2 is particularly well-suited to study is the effect that rising levels of atmospheric carbon dioxide will have on plants over the next century, said geology professor Wallace Broecker of Lamont-Doherty.

The crew members all appeared healthy and well-fed, in contrast to the haggard, gaunt appearance of the first crew when they left the domed, glass-and-steel structure 25 miles northeast of Tucson.

▶ HEAVY SHELLING ERUPTS IN SAREJEVO; UNITED NATIONS THREATENS ACTION

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina (AP) — The heaviest shelling and gunfire in more than six months erupted Sunday in Sarajevo, wounding eight people and raising the prospect of new NATO airstrikes.

The commander of U.N. forces in Bosnia, Lt. Gen. Sir Michael Rose, warned of unspecified measures against both the Muslim-led government and the Bosnian Serbs if the fighting did not stop. A U.N. spokesman said those measures could include NATO airstrikes.

Meanwhile, Serb nationalists pushed 1,300 exhausted, weeping Muslims from their homes and across front lines in northeastern Bosnia on Sunday in a defiant drive to finish their ethnic purges.

In the Bosnian capital, mortar shelling, machine-gun fire and anti-aircraft fire could all be heard Sunday.

The fighting shattered months of relative calm in Sarajevo, which has been under Serb siege for almost 2-1/2 years.

Rose said initial reports indicated that government forces started the fighting. That apparently touched off retaliatory fire from the Bosnian Serbs. Rose said the fighting was a clear violation of a NATO-enforced heavy-weapons exclusion zone around Sarajevo.

POLICE REPORTS

These reports are taken directly from the daily logs of the K-State and Riley County Police departments. Because of space constraints, not all crimes are listed.

K-STATE POLICE

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 16

At 1:55 a.m., Kevin L. Wiltse was arrested for driving under the influence of alcohol or drugs and transported to Riley County Jail.

At 1:20 a.m., a subject was issued a notice to appear for operating a vehicle with an expired license plate.

At 8:48 a.m., a subject reported the theft of a leather bag containing a compass, drawing set, triangles and colored pencils from Seaton Hall. Loss was $140.

At 1:03 p.m., a subject requested an ambulance for a male subject that had passed out in Denison Hall. Riley County Ambulance responded, but subject refused transport.

At 3:40 p.m., officers and Manhattan Fire Department responded to a vehicle fire at the intersection of Mid Campus Drive and Claflin Road.

RILEY COUNTY POLICE

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 17

At 10:32 p.m., police received a report of an injured animal on McCall Road. The subject ran over an opossum that was still alive in the middle of the roadway. The officer advised that the opossum was deceased.

At 10:42 p.m., a suspicious-activity report was filed from 2712 Brockman. The subject reported two motorcycles shining their headlights in her front window, revving their engines and having a keg of beer. An officer advised the subjects, and they complied.

SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 18

At 1:15 a.m., a possible auto theft was reported from Rusty's Last Chance Restaurant & Saloon. An intoxicated subject was unable to locate his car. Police advised him to keep checking the area.

At 2:21 a.m., police received a noise complaint from 1437 LeGore Lane. The subjects were having a howling contest. The subjects complied after officers contacted them.

At 2:28 a.m., Dederick D. Kelly, 122 Westwood, was arrested for driving under the influence of alcohol or drugs at the corner of Oak Street and Poyntz Avenue. Bond was set at $500.

STEVE HEBERT/Collegian

Chris LeDoux entertains a large crowd of country-music fans Sunday night at the Tuttle Creek River Pond Area. Rio and Shootin' Blanks opened the concert.

▶ REVIEW

LeDoux provides stellar performance

BOB MACHA
Collegian

The rumors about Chris LeDoux being good are true.

There were two worthwhile opening bands that played before he did.

The first was Rio, predominantly covering popular country and rock songs like "Margaritaville" by Jimmy Buffet and "That Summer" by Garth Brooks, as well as a few quality originals.

The next opening act was Manhattan's Shootin'Blanks.

They had entertaining instrumentation, but their vocals did not come out as clear as Rio's.

LeDoux opened his part of the show with an upbeat song about a cowboy who can't stop riding called "Hooked On An 8 Second Ride."

He then went through some of his other classics including "Cadillac Cowboy," "County Fair" and the ballad "When I Look at You Girl."

He kept the romantic theme with "Big Love," a song LeDoux told the crowd was a song about the kind of love every woman should expect from her man.

"Cadillac Ranch" was his next song. He said it was about what he thought would be a be a good idea if your farm was struggling, starting a bar on your farm.

He said the idea came from his background in agriculture.

LeDoux is definitely a real cowboy, winning the World Bareback Bronc Riding Champion in 1976 when he was struggling for notice in the country-music world.

He also pleased the crowd with the song that won him and Garth Brooks a Grammy nomination, "Whatcha Gonna Do With A Cowboy?"

He played a song about the cowboy's favorite pastime, dipping snuff with "Copenhagen" which he wrote in college.

"It was a joke then. It's still a joke," he told the audience.

LeDoux is very dynamic and yet still very at ease onstage.

He also seems to have an almost strange way of changing gears being calm for his ballads, yet very energetic for his more upbeat numbers.

Bewteen one song, he switched guitars and asked the roadie in a casual way to give him one that was in tune.

"Aw hell, I tuned this one myself," LeDoux said jokingly.

LeDoux seemed very into doing hand motions during this tune, acting as though he were driving and pointing to his rear.

He started his two-song encore with another up-tempo crowd pleaser called "Long-Haired Outlaw."

The outlaw in the song is rock music and how it's contrary to what LeDoux calls real country.

"Maybe I oughta apologize for that, but I ain't gonna," he said to the crowd at the end of the song.

He finished his performance with the more mellow "Western Skies" which is about why he doesn't live in Nashville, Tenn.

LeDoux sounds just as good live as he does in his studio albums.

The live performance is even better because of the interaction you get with him, making for a stellar concert experience.

Chris LeDoux, the main attraction at Sunday's concert at Tuttle Creek River Pond Area, was the World Bareback Bronc Riding Champion in 1976 when he was struggling for recognition in the country-music industry.

Seating problem needs to be corrected

The seating problem at KSU Stadium needs to be addressed before the problem gets worse.

KSU Stadium has a seating problem, and the problem will only get worse unless some changes are made.

On Saturday, a group of about 50 students sat in open seats that were in section 33 of KSU Stadium.

The student section was full, so the students spilled over into the reserved section.

As the game progressed, the students stood to watch the game. People in the reserved section became angry because the students were blocking their view of the game.

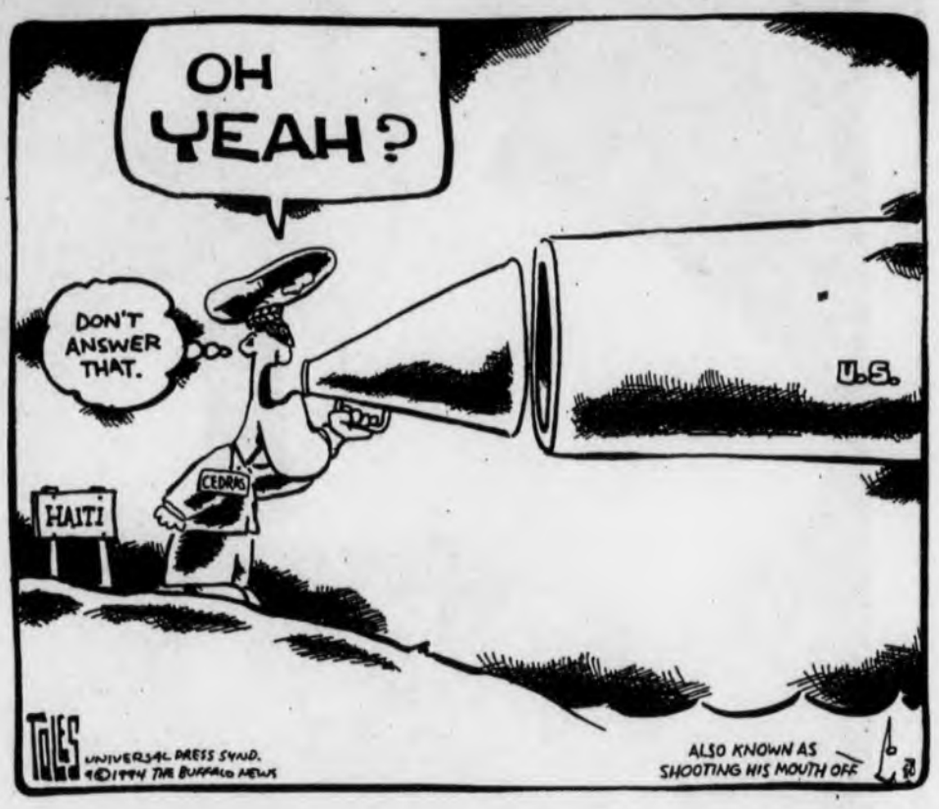
Something needs to be done.

If this problem happens against Rice, what's going to happen when we play Nebraska?



A possible solution could be to have more ushers in the student section. This would ensure only students with student tickets will be allowed into the section.

Another answer to the problem could be for all people to be more considerate of the people around them.

If you are blocking someone's view and they ask you to sit down, try to work the problem out.

Just use your common sense when you're at the game. We're all here for the same reason, and that's to cheer the Wildcats on to victory.

A victim of American injustice

There was no party. There were no mid-life jokes. Peltier had little to celebrate. He has spent more than 17 years in prison for a crime he didn't commit.

Pine Ridge Indian Reservation in South Dakota was the most dangerous place in the country in the mid-'70s. Tension between the traditional Lakota leaders and the oppressive tribal government of Dick Wilson lead to a climate of fear and violence unparalleled in the inner cities of Chicago and New York.

DAN LEWERENZ

The American Indian Movement came to the reservation to help revive the culture and protect the traditional. Peltier, a Sioux/Ojibwa, lived with several others in a camp near the house of Harry and Cecelia Jumping Bull, a respected elderly couple.

On June 26, 1975, FBI Agents Jack Coler and Ronald Williams came on to the Jumping Bull property following a red pickup they believed was being driven by AIM member Jimmy Eagle, a suspect in the theft of a pair of boots.

Someone started shooting.

We will probably never know how the fire fight started. The conflicting stories of AIM eyewitnesses and FBI agents listening over the radio leave little to go on. When the shooting ended, Coler, Williams and a young Indian named Joe Stuntz were dead.

What followed was the largest FBI manhunt ever mounted. Eagle, Peltier, and AIM leaders Darrelle Butler and Bob Robideau were named as suspects.

The resulting investigation and trials may be the greatest miscarriages of justice in the history of the American legal system.

Robideau and Butler were tried in the federal court in Cedar Rapids, Iowa. Eagle was listed as a witness for the prosecution, and Peltier was still at large.

After an extensive and highly publicized trial, Robideau and Butler were found not guilty.

None of the physical evidence was convincing, and none of the prosecution's eyewitnesses could be believed. Some even admitted they were lying.

Peltier, now in custody in Canada, was the only remaining suspect.

Amazingly, a new witness surfaced. Myrtle Poor Bear (who later admitted that she had never seen Peltier in her life) signed an affidavit claiming that she was Peltier's girlfriend, and she had been at the Jumping Bull residence and saw Peltier kill the agents. Additionally, ballistics reports were released confirming that the agents had been killed by a gun thought to belong to Peltier.

In light of this damning evidence, the Canadian courts agreed to release Peltier to American officials.

What the Canadians were not told was that Poor Bear had previously filed an affidavit saying that she was not at the Jumping Bull residence that day — that she was with relatives.

Nor was anyone made aware that ballistics tests could not be made because of damage to the weapon in question. In fact, the bullet serving as proof was reportedly discovered by two different agents in two different places on two different days.

So the trial went on, mysteriously moved from Cedar Rapids to Fargo, N.D. Judge Paul Benson refused to allow a self-defense theory or hear testimony of FBI misconduct.

Stripped of any defense, Peltier was found guilty and given two consecutive life sentences.

Since then, much of the evidence withheld by the FBI, including the original Poor Bear affidavit and the ballistics reports, have been obtained through the Freedom of Information Act. However, several thousand documents remain hidden because of national security.

In a recent appeal heard in the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals, prosecutors admitted they really didn't know who killed the officers, but they think Peltier may have been involved. The appeal was unsuccessful.

Amnesty International has called the trial a farce. Peltier has been awarded the International Human Rights Prize by the government of Spain.

He was nominated for the Nobel Peace Prize for his commitment to the preservation of Indian people and in recognition of his unjust imprisonment. However, he remains incarcerated in Leavenworth Federal Prison.

Happy birthday, Leonard. We can only hope that soon you will be able to celebrate with your family and friends.

Problems with bicycles rolling on

ROBERT KIRK

Theeey're baaack!

They may not have figured out what all those bicycle regulations add up to, but the K-State bike patrol is rolling again.

Even in shorts and T-shirts, remember, the bike patrol are cops. Their thankless job is to enforce the laws as they are written. But if you've got $25,000 to throw after a $25 ticket, go ahead and take your chance in court. If not, help change the law.

Which seems to say you can ride up the center of campus outside 7:30 a.m. to 5:30 p.m., except on University holidays, when you can ride anytime.

But not weekends or semester breaks when the hours hold even though you and the bike patrol may be the only ones moving on campus.

Except for all the other (often deserted) sidewalks, which aren't posted as dismount zones, and where you apparently can't ride any time. Note the first sidewalk bust reported at 8:55 p.m.

It's hardly surprising that an unsettled court case was never mentioned in the discussion of this past spring, but now that it's finally broken, it casts quite a different light on things.

One of the sole reasons for this sudden interest in sidewalk safety looks a lot like covering the Kansas State University's institutional ass.

It seems in May 1992, a former K-State student, who possibly never learned not to cross an edge at a sharp angle with any vehicle, crashed her bike on a garden hose that laid across the walk and hurt her arm.

Last May, K-State was found $23,000 negligent, not for laying the hose, but for failing to prevent her riding on the sidewalk.

What can I say?

Nothing is anyone's fault anymore if there's somebody else they can blame. If you're ever on a jury like this, in the name of sanity, vote to screw the plaintiff. Lady, I hope you choke on our money.

You want to know how much K-State cares about sidewalk safety in any real-world sense? Come sit on the bench in front of Derby Dining Center about 2:00 a.m. June 13, 1992.

Notice the lamp-pole stub on its concrete base below a 3-foot drop-off between West Hall and Derby — the stairs offset from the narrow passageway. See all this? You can now, I don't know if you could then.

It doesn't make any difference. If somebody tripped over that in the middle of a parade ground and sued, it would be fixed as fast as the foremen could swing their whips.

One of the sole reasons for this sudden interest in sidewalk safety looks a lot like covering the Kansas State University's institutional ass.

Now, hark the weary architecture student riding home. Too fast, no doubt. Maybe glanced in the window in case any unclad women were wandering the stairwell. Who knows?

He was almost certainly lost, else there's no reason to come that way, and headed straight for a low curb that a distracted pedestrian could miss. There are nasty surprises on the other side.

A good thing you're there, or else he might have died instead of lying in a coma for two days after bashing his brains on the 14-inch concrete and steel brain-basher below.

He didn't sue.

But bicyclists continued to ply the sidewalks doing infrequent violence to themselves, but virtually none to anyone else. And if you sit there tonight, you'll recognize every detail but the bloodstains.

Irreverence shown in graffiti

Dear Editor,

In reference to Friday's editorial, the graffiti certainly shows sparkle, but also a degree of disguised irreverence for our image-conscious University.

One may have noticed the neatly designed series of hands in various positions; the excellent graphics seem to belie a somewhat rude message when one deciphers what each one of those manual letters represents.

A quick reference to the international sign language alphabet confirms the suspicion of what those letters actually convey, a message that most junior high schoolers could probably guess.

Suffice to say that the message begins with the letter "F:" and ends with the sign for "YOU."

Awareness to prevent increase of STD cases

DEANA TESKE
Collegian

Gonorrhea is a sexually transmitted disease that is rapidly increasing in high-school and college students, the American Social Health Association said.

It is estimated that by age 21, one in five people will have come in contact with an STD, ASHA said.

"Young people, especially women, are at risk because their immune systems are not fully developed," Sharon Broom, director of public relations for ASHA, said.

Like any other STD, gonorrhea is transmitted during sexual contact and may not have symptoms. Because of slight symptoms, or none at all, the disease goes unnoticed and may lead to worse problems, Reita Currie, registered nurse for health education and promotion at Lafene Health Center, said.

Most people don't realize that oral sex is not a safe way out. The bacteria can also be transferred through the mouth and throat, Currie said.

Gonorrhea and other STDs, with the exception of HIV or AIDS, is fairly simple to treat with antibiotics. Follow-up exams are needed to make sure the treatment is effective, Currie said.

"People tend to not follow the instructions on the medication or don't finish the prescription, even if the symptoms go away," she said.

Then, the bacteria starts growing all over again.

It's possible to have more than one STD at a time, and people can get the same one over and over again, Currie said.

"The body doesn't build up an immunity to an STD, like it does to chicken pox," she said.

Untreated gonorrhea may result in sterility and infections that damage the heart, joints and tissue. Women can develop pelvic inflammatory disease that could cause death, Currie said.

STDs are spread because people don't realize they have one and continue to engage in sexual activity.

Women are relying on oral contraceptives to prevent pregnancy, but it doesn't stop an STD, Broom said.

ASHA's mission is to stop the spread of STDs by making people aware of what can happen to them if they engage in unprotected sex, she said.

Being tested regularly, especially when changing partners, is a good idea, Currie said. If a patient has an STD, he or she will talk with a disease intervention specialist who will contact all partners to make sure they are aware of what they may have.

Giving names is not allowed, and all information is kept confidential, she said.

Currie said the way to stop this epidemic is to increase awareness in everyone.

"It's hard to believe here in the Midwest that you can get an STD. It doesn't matter who you are or what social group you're from, an STD just doesn't care."

Program offers new degree

DEBBIE GILL
Collegian

A year ago, students in the Department of Speech Pathology and Audiology were picketing in the K-State Union Plaza to save their program.

Now, as of July 1, the program is intact in the College of Human Ecology as the Department of Communication Sciences and Disorders.

In fall 1992, the program was slated for discontinuance as part of a College of Arts and Sciences reorganization.

Speech pathology and audiology students and faculty said they were against the program's termination.

"We were fighting for the life of this program," Paula Sazpansky, graduate student in speech pathology and audiology, said.

Students and faculty had meetings with several arts and sciences officials to plead their case, she said.

They also launched a letter-writing campaign and gained television and newspaper coverage, Sazpansky said.

"We wrote to the Kansas Board of Regents, Bob Dole, Nancy Kassebaum and district representatives. We wanted to reach as many people as we could," Sazpansky said.

A compromise was reached when University Provost James Coffman initiated the movement of speech pathology and audiology to the College of Human Ecology, Ann Smit, program director of speech pathology and audiology, said.

A transfer document was signed March 11 at a University-wide hearing, and the process began, Smit said.

John Murray, head of the Department of Human Development and Family Studies, said whenever two programs merge, both must change.

"When this program consolidation is finished, we will operate out of both Justin and Leasure halls," Murray said.

"There are practical space problems yet to resolve, but we have plans to make them workable," he said.

Smit said the program has to rework its curriculum to meet the College of Human Ecology requirements.

"We are trying very hard to not put any undue burden on students, because there is the potential for that," Smit said.

Smit said students who enrolled in speech pathology and audiology prior to August will continue in the same program but will have the option to change to the new human ecology degree.

All new students will receive a degree in human development and family studies with an emphasis in communication sciences and disorders, she said.

A large fund-raising effort is underway for an expansion of the Hoeflin Stone House, a child-care facility used by the College of Human Ecology, Murray said.

The children's speech and hearing testings would be moved to new clinic rooms in Hoeflin Stone House, he said.

"With the expertise in speech pathology, we can develop a multidisciplinary child diagnostic center," Murray said.

"This will be an exciting collaboration and an important influence on children who can benefit from such a clinic," he said.

Sazpansky said most of the students were optimistic about the change.

"We treat the whole patient now. We can get the entire family involved in the treatment," she said.

"We wrote to the Kansas Board of Regents, Bob Dole, Nancy Kassebaum and district representatives. We wanted to reach as many people as we could."

Percell Gaskins sacks Rice quarterback Josh LaRocca during K-State's victory over Rice. Gaskins led the Cats' defense in tackles for the second straight game with 12.

Gaskins prepared to face Rice offense

Linebacker performs well in face of unsatisfying victory

WESS HUDELSON
Collegian

Even though several K-State players said they weren't mentally prepared for Rice, linebacker Percell Gaskins proved he was.

Gaskins led the Wildcats with 12 tackles, two tackles for a loss, one pass broken up, one quarterback sack and he forced a fumble.

"I think that I played pretty good," Gaskins said. "Still, there are a lot of things that I need to correct.

"What I want to do is dominate the whole game, and I don't think that I did that today. I tried to get up, but when guys around you aren't really emotionally high, it's hard to get up."

Someone could argue that point with Gaskins, since he made several key plays for the Cats.

His first big play came on Rice's first possession of the game.

Rice had just driven the ball to the K-State 10-yard line, and the Owls were faced with third down and seven.

Owl quarterback Josh LaRocca dropped back to pass, but he was pressured and forced to scramble.

As soon as LaRocca started to step forward, he was immediately sacked by Gaskins.

Then, Gaskins made another stop on defense that resulted in a loss early in the third quarter.

LaRocca again dropped back, and this time completed a pass to running back Byron Coston on a screen play.

Gaskins dodged the linemen and tackled Coston for a 4-yard loss.

"I was just reading it like we do in practice," Gaskins said.

"We prepared for those type of plays all week. It's just like what we do in everyday in practice," he said.

Since Rice ran the spread option, Gaskins played a vital role in stopping the Owl offense.

His responsibility was to flow from the linebacker position and make the stop on the quarterback if he didn't pitch the ball.

"It's the exact same offensive scheme that Iowa State runs," Gaskins said. "This was a great game for us to help prepare for Iowa State in the future. We'll have time to correct the mistakes.

"They started running a lot of dive plays right at us."

In addition to playing his regular linebacker position, Gaskins also saw considerable playing time lining up as a defensive end.

He said with him playing at defensive end, he can get in a three-point position and rush the passer.

"It definitely helps with my speed," Gaskins said. "Anybody that runs a 4.4 in the 40 that goes against a tackle is going to create some problems.

"Rice actually did a pretty good job blocking me when I was lined up like that."

Last week, he had 10 tackles against Southwestern Louisiana.

He also blocked an extra point against the Ragin' Cajuns in the season opener.

"Anybody that runs a 4.4 in the 40 that goes against a tackle is going to create some problems."

Cats' unhappy with effort

WESS HUDELSON
Collegian

K-State defeated the Rice Owls 27-18 Saturday at KSU Stadium, but little was celebrated.

"I really believe we played quite poorly," coach Bill Snyder said. "It's important that we won the ballgame, but I have real concerns on how we played in all phases of the game."

Two fumbles early in the contest put the Wildcats behind 10-3 early in the contest.

The first fumble came when Chris Canty mishandled a punt. Jeffery Mercer pounced on the loose ball giving the Owls possession on K-State's 13-yard line. The defense allowed Rice only 2 yards before kicker Johnny Bagwell put a 29-yard field goal through.

On K-State's next possession, quarterback Chad May coughed up the ball on the Cats' 48-yard line. Six plays later, quarterback Josh LaRocca scored on a 24-yard run.

Despite the early deficit, a win never seemed in doubt. K-State evened the score with 1:08 remaining in the first quarter on May's 5-yard run.

"It was sloppy overall. That's the best way to describe it," defensive back Chuck Marlowe said.

K-State added another touchdown in the second quarter as running back J.J. Smith dove over the top from 1 yard out and made the score 17-0.

Smith's performance provided a bright spot for the Cats with 301 all-purpose yards in the game — a K-State record. He gathered 141 yards on kickoff returns, 46 yards receiving and 114 yards rushing on 18 carries.

"We gave it away, and we were fortunate enough to come back and do some good things," Smith said.

The K-State offense drove to the Rice nine with less than a minute remaining in the half, but the drive stalled when running back Leon Edwards was stopped by linebacker Larry Izzo for no gain on third down and two.

Snyder said the audible May called was incorrect for the situation.

Place-kicker Martin Gramatica connected from 27 yards out for his second field goal of the game putting K-State ahead 20-10 at the half.

"I did not coach them well enough to get ready to play," Snyder said. "I need to put them on the field so they are mentally in tune with what is going on."

Rice came out in the second half and drove to K-State's 37 mostly on straight-ahead dives by running back Spencer George.

The Owls missed an opportunity when a wide-open Ed Howard dropped a pass in the end zone on third down and 14. The drive ended on another incomplete pass on fourth down.

Rice closed the gap to four points on its next possession when Jamey Whitlock plunged in from 1 yard out. After Bagwell missed the extra point, the score was 20-16 with 2:35 remaining in the third quarter.

"We knew coming up here, with their record and what they've done at home, that this was not going to be an easy ballgame," Rice coach Ken Hatfield said.

K-State answered early in the fourth quarter on a five-play, 41-yard drive capped off with a 30-yard strike from May to Tyson Schwieger. Schwieger sprinted down the sideline and dove into the end zone over two Rice defenders.

Schwieger said he was running a short-out route, but decided to go long during the play.

"Sometimes you have to improvise," Schwieger said. "I saw the open field and decided to go for it."

Men, women both race to 4th place finishes

DEBO ADEJUNMOBI
Collegian

The K-State men's and women's cross country teams picked up fourth-place finishes at the Woody Greeno/Nebraska Invitational Saturday in Lincoln, Neb.

Senior Billy Wuggazer led the men with a sixth-place finish. He covered the 8,000-meter course in a time of 25:42.

"Billy ran the best race I have seen him run since I came to K-State," coach Terry Drake said. "He showed the competitive leadership that I wanted him to show."

"It was Geoff's first 5-mile race ever," Drake said. "He was a little timid at first, but I think he did a really good job."

They finished the meet with 11 less points than second-place Lincoln TC, en route to an easy victory.

"I think they're a little better than we thought," Drake said of the Huskers. "We definitely have our work cut out for us."

Lesley Wells and Samantha McNamara finished 16th and 18th respectively. Although Drake was satisfied with the performance, he said there must be improvement.

"The women got a chance to see what it was going to take to win the Big Eight after competing against Nebraska today," Drake said.

▶ VOLLEYBALL

Netters collect 7th win of season over UMKC

JULIE KUHLMAN
Collegian

Their performance wasn't good Sunday, but their record still is.

The K-State volleyball team added another win to their record as the Wildcats beat UMKC, 15-4, 15-7, 15-10 and are now sitting at 7-1.

Despite having its best start since 1988, coach Jim Moore said the team looked sluggish.

"We played terrible," Moore said. "It was ratty for what they're capable of playing like."

The Cats pounced on the Kangaroos in the first game, putting them away 15-4.

The second game put the Cats on guard when UMKC found its momentum halfway through the game and took the lead, 7-6.

The Cats clawed their way back and scored nine straight points to win the game, 15-7.

"We just outserved them in the second set," Moore said.

The third game proved to be a battle, although it looked like an easy win.

The Cats took a 14-5 lead, needing only one more point to win the match, but they couldn't find the right play to get it.

UMKC fought back to make the score 14-10.

Finally a side out came for the Cats, followed by a kill from Gigi Ghattas, to get the win.

"They just lost their focus," Moore said. "Our weakness is our inability to stay focused."

Although Moore said the team played terrible, there was some improvement in the Cats' serving performance.

The Cats had a strong serving game with only six service errors and 10 aces in the match.

Relationships not working; give it time

Dear Cassandra,

I am a male in my early twenties, (I'm sure you've never heard that before) and I have a serious problem.

I don't like women to touch me.

I am not gay or anything, but the thought of having a woman touch me anywhere scares the living daylights out of me.

It's not as if I've never been with a woman before, it's just that I have always gotten into bad relationships as a result of mutual touching.

It always starts so innocent, a little hug or peck on the cheek, and next thing you know, I am in psycho-chick hell.

I would just like to meet a woman who is nice, intelligent and will keep her hands to herself.

Signed,
Look but no Touch

Dear Look but no Touch,

You have a strange problem, but I think your response is actually very intelligent.

You realize the attachment occurs when someone becomes physically involved, and that is just not right for you now. I believe you will meet someone soon who shares your views, and the physical part will come in time.

K-Staters relax, enjoy live music

AMY ZIEGLER
Collegian

The cars that were driving down Anderson Avenue on Saturday afternoon were treated to an interesting spectacle.

For a few brief minutes at the stoplight, they could witness a live music event and a charming festival in progress.

Triangle Park, a small grassy area in Aggieville, was home to three bands, two acoustic guitarists, student and local organizations' booths, and around 50 spectators for the fifth annual Cat Jam sponsored by KSDB-FM 91.9.

After K-State beat Rice, football fans trickled down to Aggieville to celebrate the victory and enjoy four hours of free music by Cher U.K., The Strength, Az-One, Brother Jeb and Zerf.

Stacey Taylor, promotions director for DB92, said she was pleased with the success of the event.

"Everything has gone real well. Cher U.K. drew a big crowd, and it's been growing ever since. It's a nice time for people to relax at the park and hear some great music," Taylor said.

Joe Montgomery, station director for DB92, said he was relieved the weather cooperated with the Cat Jam.

"It's been raining in previous years. I'm real happy about this one because I think it's as smooth as any of them have gone," Montgomery said. "We've had a pretty solid group of people who watched the whole show."

Mike Baker, Highland resident who drove two hours to see Az-One perform, said he was impressed by the atmosphere and crowd at the event.

"Everyone came here to listen to music," Baker said. "One thing I like about this is that you don't have to hear the same band all the time. There's a little something for everybody."

A woman with a snake wrapped around her neck relaxed on a blanket, a man sat down with a ferret peering over his shoulder, children of all ages were running around, and students in overalls and pigtails hung out on the park benches.

Cher U.K., a band from Kansas City which has two compact discs and another one titled, "Go, Go Fish" coming out Oct. 25, shined at the Cat Jam with its zany lyrics and care-free attitude.

The lead vocalist, Mike McCoy, played his red guitar and yelled out to the cars which were streaming by Triangle Park, and the female drummer poured every ounce of her energy into manipulating the drums.

McCoy said although most of the outdoor events he performs at fail, the Cat Jam was an exception.

"This is a good one and even though it's family oriented, it seemed loose," McCoy said. "I don't know what it is, but I didn't feel like I had to hold back at all with my lyrics. I especially liked all the cars going by. It's a free thing. They paid as much as everyone else."

Heather Grehan, guitar player, said she thought the Cat Jam was a good way to get college students and the community to support live music.

"It's always fun to have a free thing to do on a Saturday afternoon," Grehan said. "When you're in school, you take all the freebies you can get."

Press and visitors gather outside the limestone mansion of the Z-Bar Ranch near Strong City in Chase County. The ranch was recently purchased by the National Park Trust, strengthening efforts to maintain it as a tall-grass prairie preserve.

The front doors of the the Z-Bar Ranch in Chase County will soon swing open for public toors. Barbara and Scott Zurhellen, ranch historians, confer with Alice Rita (center), public affairs manager for the National Parks Conservation Association.

Mansion supporters preserve home; tours to open this winter

TAWNYA ERNST
Collegian

Deep in the Flint Hills, a limestone mansion stands out sharply against the clear sky.

Travelers who have wondered about the 112-year-old mansion, tucked into a hill on Kansas Highway 177, may not have to wait much longer to have their curiosity satisfied.

On Friday, supporters of efforts to preserve the home and its surrounding 11,000 acres, known as the Z-Bar Ranch, gathered to announce the mansion will soon be open to public tours.

Other structures on the property, the gigantic stone barn and a nearby 1880s one-room school house will be accessible to the public as well.

Scheduling for opening the home is still somewhat tentative, but it will be open to the public Dec. 3 as a part of the Chase County Christmas Open House tour.

"This is a gem in the Flint Hills. It's not just for Chase County or Kansas, but the U.S. and all the world. We have something here to offer that we want everyone to come here to see," Ted Livingston, Cottonwood Falls mayor, said.

The ranch is considered a gem from both historical and ecological standpoints. The house, barn and other buildings are listed on the National Register of Historic Places.

The tall-grass prairie ecosystem has been deemed the missing link in the national-park system.

Less than 2 percent of the nearly 140 million acres of tall-grass prairie remains in the United States.

The National Park Trust, a private nonprofit land conservancy organization affiliated with the National Parks and Conservation Association, purchased the ranch in June, strengthening efforts to maintain it as a tall-grass prairie preserve.

Turning the ranch into a preserve had been a sore point among some citizens in the area.

Area ranchers and farmers were concerned about increased government involvement.

The NPT has worked through the details of what has been planned with the ranchers and farmers in hopes of creating a better understanding.

There is still some resistance, Livingston said. However, the general opinion has begun to lean toward approval.

"I don't pick up any animosity. I think since (Sen. Nancy) Kassebaum really took charge, and she said she was for it, I think that changed things around a bit," he said.

Making the ranch a preserve would continue to bring change. Local economies could receive a boost from tourism, Livingston said, if legislation in progress passes to make the ranch a part of the park system.

The rapidly approaching adjournment and other hot issues could hold over a decision on the legislation until next session.

Paul Pritchard, chairman of the NPT, said he is still pushing for action, even though it's doubtful it will see approval before Congress adjourns.

"It would be landmark legislation if it made it through this year," Pritchard said.

Plans are being made to put together nature trails by next spring and to open the school house and barn for community events.

Barbara Zurhellen, K-State graduate, who was appointed as ranch caretaker by the NPT, has been taking the first steps in executing these plans. She and her husband, Scott, will live in the mansion, care for the property and provide visitor services at the ranch.

Not much is known about the ranch's history, Zurhellen said. Formerly called the Spring Hill Ranch, it was originally home to Stephen Jones, his wife and two daughters. The Joneses' family was one of the most prominent in the region. Their roots, though, were tied to the Eastern half of the United States.

Jones, a Tennessee native who was born in 1825, moved from Alabama to Texas and then to Colorado, before arriving in Chase County in 1878, Sharon Haun, curator at the Kaw Mission Museum in Council Grove, said.

He began the ranching operation, purchased a lumber and hardware business and became a banker.

The Joneses' left at some point, and several families occupied the house during the next decades.

Zurhellen, Haun and others are ready to delve into the mysteries of the ranch's past.

"We've just barely scratched the surface," Zurhellen said. "We're going to try to find out all we can about the history of the place and the people."

CATEGORIES

To help you find what you are looking for, the classified ads have been arranged by category and sub-category. All categories are marked by one of the large images, and sub-categories are preceded by a number designation.

TIPS FOR WRITING A CLASSIFIED AD

Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.

WE DO NOT USE PHONE NUMBERS OR LAST NAMES IN PERSONALS.

Phycisist goal: theory on a T-shirt

KIMBERLY WISHART
Collegian

Leon Lederman provided 45 minutes of laughter and learning about physics during his Convocation Lecture Series Friday in McCain Auditorium.

Lederman is a professor of physics at Illinois Institute of Technology.

He won the Nobel Prize for designing an experiment that produced the first laboratory-created neutrino beam, which can be used to study weak interactions that make up one of four primary forces in nature.

Lederman has made several other discoveries in physics and is working to educate high-school students, Provost James Coffman said in his introduction.

"Leon Lederman has made numerous landmark discoveries that have changed the course of science," Coffman said.

"He is leading a project to improve science in high school," he said.

"He is a communicator who brings the joy of science to the classroom."

About 300 high-school students and teachers came to K-State to hear Lederman's speech, Bill Reay, physics professor, said.

Added to the college students in attendance, McCain was packed.

Lederman used an overhead projector to display visual aids, which he had handwritten and illustrated with cartoon drawings and diagrams.

He began his speech with a definition of physics.

"Physics. A subject that induces fear and loathing in students and most of their teachers," Lederman said.

"Synonyms include incomprehensible, waste of money and mind numbing."

He then gave some historical points of physics.

Lederman said the discovery of the electron will be celebrating its 100th anniversary in three years.

Physics is dated back to Thales in 650 B.C., he said.

"That's when the world could be understood, instead of by mythology, but by logical reasoning."

He said during the last 300 years, physics has really changed.

The study of the atomic nucleus became serious after World War II. Lederman said the studies were based on new technologies and the availability of relatively huge funding.

The quark hypothesis evolved, which included the three objects that today we call up, down and strange, Lederman said.

Lederman said electrons, muons and neutrinos are leptons, which, along with quarks, were believed to make up all the matter in the world.

From 1910 to 1930, two new forces were identified in the nucleus of atoms.

Lederman said the matter we now know to make up the universe is composed of six quarks and six leptons, which are organized into three generations.

"These interact with four forces, which are carried by gauge particles. The attribute that makes these forces so different is the fact that they have different masses," he said.

"Our mission is to get a theory that fits on a T-shirt."

There is a quest for a simpler theory, and Lederman said complaints stem from the way physicists are looking at the problem.

Lederman said there is criticism that there must be a simpler way, like a kaleidoscope.

Besides relating physics to common ideas, Lederman ties physics to social issues.

Paul Rutherford, Shawnee Mission North High School physics teacher, brought his class to the lecture.

"I've done biographical research on him, and I see eye-to-eye on societal issues as well as technical aspects," Rutherford said.

"He has a real gift for relating social issues with physics."

Lederman attended a luncheon at Derby Food Center following the speech to answer high-school students' questions.

"We need to prepare kids for changes. Continuous change means continuous education," Lederman said.

"That's why when we graduate, it's called commencement.

"It's really a beginning," Lederman said.

Ross Perot said Clinton should not commit U.S. troops without first getting congressional approval because he was unwilling to risk death in Vietnam.

"I think Congress should make that decision, not a draft dodger," the 1992 independent presidential candidate told a rally in San Rafael, Calif.

Desert Storm commander Gen. Norman Schwarzkopf, now retired, also questioned Clinton's sabre-rattling.

"My personal position is that I don't know what the vital U.S. interests are in Haiti, therefore I hate to see the lives of Americans put at risk."

While giving it all she's got, Kappa Alpha Theta's Laura Durnell, freshman in engineering, competes in the tug-of-war against the Gamma Phi Betas Sunday afternoon during the Sigma Nu/Chi Omega Pledge Games at Memorial Stadium. The Thetas went on to win this particular heat.

Computer aids in organizing halftime band extravaganza

Riley soldiers set off artillery barrages.

To form the letters of KSU, Tracz said he charted it out on the computer and then made an outline on the field.

He said he coordinated where the bands went according to where they sat in the stands to make the transition easy.

Band Day was a lot of work, most of which was paperwork, Tracz said, but the band did a good job of organizing the day.

Tracz said the high point of Band Day was after halftime because he finally felt at ease.

The students in the high-school bands said they enjoyed Band Day for different reasons.

Rashelle Lindteigen and Natalie Heersche, Douglas High School students, said they liked to meet new people.

"My favorite part of Band Day is getting to go to the football game for free," Sanchez said.

Stephanie Padgett and Melissa Johnson, Manhattan High School students, said they had to practice the same baton routine, but it was worth it to participate.

The day wasn't all smooth sailing, however. Tracz said there was a small problem with buses.

The buses had to park at CiCo Park, and students were shuttled back and forth to Bramlage Coliseum, Tracz said.

Bramlage careful to not oversell student seats

"We're the students," she said. "We should get to sit wherever we want. There wouldn't be any University without us."

Brent Lorenz, senior in electrical engineering, said he felt the students were treated unfairly.

"Just because I can't take $100,000 out in student loans to pay for a box seat doesn't mean I don't deserve a place to sit," Lorenz said.

The students expressed anger that people would complain about them standing up to cheer the Cats.

"It's a football game," Kaufman said. "They can go home and sit in their Lazy Boys to watch football on TV if they want to sit down so badly."

Masters said the fans didn't come to the games before the football program got better.

"None of those complainers were here during K-State's losing streak," Masters said.

Chico Crichlow, Bramlage security usher, said the students sat in a reserved section, and the patrons had paid for the section seats and wanted them to sit down.

They wouldn't, Crichlow said, so they were asked to go to an open student section.

Ushers said they assisted people in the hunt for seats at the beginning of the game.

Bramlage is careful not to oversell student tickets, Jim Muller, assistant director of Bramlage Coliseum, said.

Sandy Bradley, a fan in the reserved section, said she appreciated the ushers' intervention.

"I couldn't see, so I was glad security made them move," Bradley said.

"I thought security did a good job," she said.

"They tried to get the students to cooperate and abide by the rules, but they wouldn't, so they took care of it," she said. "They did it politely, considering what they were dealing with."

Police investigate Smurthwaite rape

CRESTON KUENZI
Collegian

The Riley County and K-State police departments are investigating incidents of rape and theft at the Georgiana Smurthwaite Scholarship House.

A woman reported that between 5:30 a.m. and 6 a.m. Monday, an intruder entered her room and threatened her.

"The intruder was scared off by the response of the resident, who screamed," Judy Davis, director of the Women's Resource Center, said.

The resident's screams awakened her two roommates.

"The resident has been examined at the Saint Mary Hospital and appears to be coping with the situation," Capt. Robert Mellgren of the campus police said.

"It is being investigated as a rape," he said.

Police said there were no signs of forced entry to the building, but they are carefully evaluating potential evidence in the case.

Campus police used a new computerized composite system to obtain a composite drawing of the rape suspect.

He is about 5 feet 8 inches tall with a medium build, Mellgren said.

Campus police has contacted RCPD to try to determine if the incident at Smurthwaite has any connection to a rape on Vattier Street in August.

Mellgren said it was too early in the investigation to determine if there was any connection.

In another incident, a theft was reported at 7 a.m. on Saturday at the house. The thief apparently entered through a basement window, campus police said.

A resident reported a loss of $1,500, which included jewelry, a jewelry box and cassette tapes.

The Department of Housing and Dining Services sent staff members to make enhancements to the building security after the theft on Saturday. They adjusted all windows from the basement to the second floor so that they would only open a few inches.

Good-bye graffiti, hello purple paint

"Basically, it was taken down because there is some pretty nasty graffiti."

RANDY SLOVER
director of facilities maintenance

KIMBERLY HEFLING
Collegian

The graffiti-filled wall surrounding construction near Farrell Library has been painted over with purple paint, for the time being at least.

"Basically, it was taken down because there is some pretty nasty graffiti," Randy Slover, director of facilities maintenance, said. "There are racial slurs and sexually derogatory remarks. There's really no place for that in the campus community."

Slover said the decision to remove the graffiti was made by campus facilities Monday afternoon.

"I realize this will make a lot of people upset, but there's a lot of stuff on there that shouldn't be," Slover said.

The price of the 15 gallons of purple paint used to cover the graffiti was $320, Slover said. Four painters were used to paint over the graffiti, and each was making overtime at about $13.50 per hour. The estimated time to complete the project was two hours.

Slover said painters started painting over the graffiti at around 5:30 p.m. to prevent students from getting paint on the clothes and to make it possible for students to pass by Farrell Library.

The money used to pay for painting over the graffiti came from the Farrell Project, Slover said.

Darin Spivey, sophomore in computer science, said he thought the University should have just covered the bad parts with black paint.

"It's an inconvenience to walk through here anyway," Spivey said. "It's nice to have something to look at."

Spivey said he thought the clean, purple wall would only last a week at the most.

"They will do it again, so why are they doing this? It's a waste of money," Jamil Altiti, graduate student in mathematics, said. "It seems to me the people writing on the wall don't care much. If they did it in the first place, they will do it again. It's a childish act, and most of it doesn't even make sense."

Altiti said he does not approve of graffiti.

"Would they like people to do that to their own houses?" he said.

Slover said it was necessary to paint over everything because it was faster. Also, it's difficult to determine what is art and what is offensive to certain people.

Michael Darling, junior in graphic design, said people would be back to paint on the wall again.

"Now they have a clean canvas and can just do something better next time," Darling said.

Darling said by looking at the graffiti, it was not difficult to determine what things were done by junior high and high school

Doors to be locked 24 hours at Haymaker

CHARITY WOODSON
Collegian

Haymaker Hall's Hall Governing Board issued a memo last week informing residents that Haymaker doors would now be locked 24 hours.

The issue of safety and security has continually been a concern for both the residents living on campus and the Department of Housing and Dining Services, the memo said.

The memo was released to inform the residents that Haymaker's HGB passed a resolution making Haymaker a 24-hour secure building.

Despite much opposition to the new policy, Haymaker Hall director Kim Winkler said she believes that HGB acted in the best interests of the residents.

"We are being proactive instead of waiting around for something to happen and then taking action," Winkler said.

She also said the new policy makes residents more aware of their surroundings.

"You wouldn't leave the front door of your house unlocked, would you? We need to be more aware of safety and security and why it's important," Winkler said.

The housing department has given the hall support on this policy as well, Shah Hasan, assistant director of Housing, said.

"We like to see students take the responsibility for their own safety. The most positive aspect is that it begins to look like their home," Hasan said.

Many residents of Haymaker, however, see the new policy as an inconvenience for themselves and their guests.

"It's not effective," Jeremy Hogg, sophomore in history and philosophy, said.

"Half of the people I know simply wait outside the doors and then follow other people in. There is no way that they can enforce it," he said.

Hogg said the residents should have been notified of the possible policy change beforehand.

"I found out by a letter after the fact. We need to be considered and have a say," Hogg said.

Winkler and other members of the hall staff team said they have been working to try and make the residents understand the need for the change.

"Whenever there is change, there are people that are upset. They tend to look solely at the inconvenience, and not at the safety and security issue," Winkler said.

Another reason for the change is campus-wide safety and security, said Haymaker HGB president Paul Colwell, junior in secondary education.

"K-State as a University is trying to promote safety and security," Colwell said. "As a University, we lack this, so this policy will aid in promoting it."

Colwell also said that HGB is doing everything in its power to keep negative reactions under control.

"Our meetings are open to the residents. HGB is here to provide a better living and learning environment," he said.

"If a majority of the residents want a change, we'll consider that," he said.

Putting all the negativity aside, Winkler said the new policy is an important and vital one.

"When the HGB voted, it showed a commitment. One to not only the issue of safety and security, but also one to the residents. They did their job," she said.

Exiles demand Cedras leave

ASSOCIATED PRESS

MIAMI — Many Haitian exiles are angry that the agreement between the United States and Haiti does not force strong man Raoul Cedras out of power immediately.

A crowd of about 75 people blocked a downtown street late Sunday in front of the Haitian Refugee Center in Miami, which has more Haitian exiles than any other U.S. city.

More than 150 Haitians listened to President Clinton's announcement of an accord — negotiated in part by former President Carter — that allows Lt. Gen. Cedras and other key figures until Oct. 15 to relinquish power.

They sat expressionless in and outside the refugee center, many not understanding the broadcast in English. But when one man yelled "Oct. 15" in Creole, their expressions turned to shock and anger.

"They should force (the military leaders) into the trunk of a plane and dump them wherever they want," Samedi Floruil said. "They have to leave now. Now. Now. Now."

"It's not fair to leave them there, not even until tomorrow. They should leave now," Simon Ville yelled.

The agreement will pave the way for the eventual return to power of Haiti's democratically elected president, Jean-Bertrand Aristide, Clinton said.

At the Philadelphia Church of God, next to the refugee center, another group of more than 100 Haitians prayed in Creole.

Tania Vil said she prays every day that Aristide would be restored.

"I feel great," she said. "I am happy because God has helped me."

As cars passed through Little Haiti during Clinton's news conference, many drivers honked their horns and cheered and waved.

But the crowd grew larger and more disappointed as the news spread that Cedras would not be leaving immediately.

"Cedras kills people. Cedras will keep killing people," said Louis Dargent. "I want Cedras to leave right now."

U.S. Sen. Connie Mack, R-Fla., said he was pleased a military invasion had been averted. But, he said, he hoped the Haitian leaders would not go back on their agreement to step down.

"The Haitian military has broken agreements in the past," Mack said in a statement. "I hope this time they will step down for good and allow democracy to be re-established."

Mack said the threat of an immigration crisis would remain imminent for Florida until democracy is restored to Haiti.

Prioritization pays off — record number of minorities with jobs

SERA L. TANK

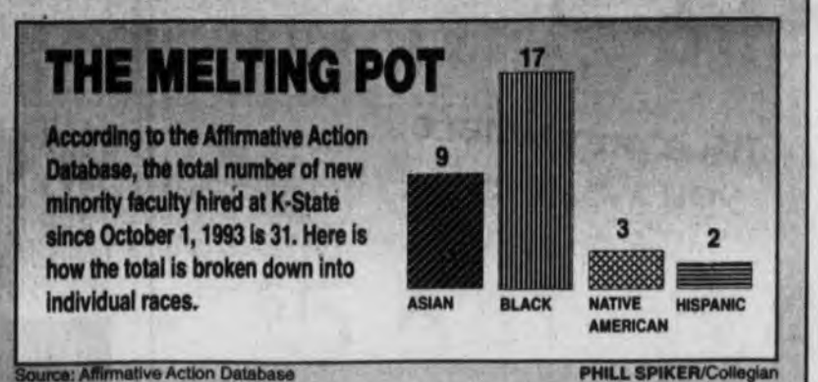
K-State hired a record number of minorities as faculty, staff and administrators this year.

Jim Coffman, University provost, said the increase is the result of an all-out effort by K-State to attract minorities to the University.



"We have been prioritizing increasing minorities and women in faculty and administrative positions, and it's finally beginning to pay off," Coffman said.

With help from the Office of Multicultural Affairs, the University has changed its way of trying to recruit minorities, he said.

"We've become more strategic. We are looking in better places and networking more," Coffman said.

▶ HARMFUL MICRO-ORGANISMS LIVING IN KANSANS' PRIVATE WATER WELLS

TOPEKA (AP) — Half of the state's 200,000 private water wells may be polluted, according to the preliminary results from a recent state Department of Health and Environment survey.

The department tested for coliform bacteria, nitrate, atrazine and lead in 1,000 wells, sampling water from all 105 counties.

Its study was financed by the federal Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta.

All of the pollutants for which the agency tested have the potential to cause health problems.

Forty-five percent of Kansas wells tested positive for total coliform and 15.3 percent for E. coli.

A positive total coliform bacteria means that disease-causing microorganisms may be present, the well having been exposed to animal or human waste, or the environment. Those organisms can cause diarrhea, abdominal cramps, fever, nausea, vomiting and other illnesses.

A person may have persistent flu-like symptoms which could be attributed to a polluted water supply.

"This is the piece that would affect people's quality of life," said James Steichen, professor of biological and agricultural engineering at K-State. "We would not accept that for public water supply."

Steichen stressed the need for people with private wells to get them tested for pollutants. If pollutants are found, follow-up tests should be continued on a regular basis.

Information is available from KDHE, local county extension agents and the KSU Cooperative Extension Service.

▶ USAIR PILOTS RECOUNT TROUBLE WITH AIRPLANE IN HEAVY JULY RAINS

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — The captain of USAir Flight 1016 added his strength to his first officer's hands in a desperate attempt to push the DC-9's throttles and tried to avert the crash that killed 37 passengers.

In statements released today by the National Transportation Safety Board, Capt. Michael R. Greenlee an d First Officer James Hayes both recounted flying into extremely heavy rain as they approached Charlotte-Douglas International Airport on July 2.

"Rain intensity increased abruptly and dramatically," Greenlee said. "I do not ever recall seeing rain fall that heavily."

The weather, including thunderstorms in the area, was to be the focus of testimony and questioning at an NTSB hearing into the crash that opened today. The hearing is expected to last 3-1/2 days.

John Hammerschmidt, chairman of NTSB's board of inquiry, said Monday the fact-finding hearing would not produce an assessment on the probable cause of the crash. That would probably come out next spring, he said.

In earlier interviews, released Monday morning, they said they noticed a concentration of storm cells south and east of the airport after their aborted landing.

They both reported losing visibility when they had descended to about 1,200 feet. Greenlee ordered Hayes to abort the landing at full power.

"Captain Greenlee called FIRE WALL," Hayes said. "He then placed his right hand over my left hand. We pushed the throttle to the fire wall."

The crash killed 37 of the 57 people on board.

Cockpit voice recordings released by the Federal Aviation Administration showed that Greenlee and Hayes got two wind shear warnings, but both missed an all-points wind shear alert just seconds before the crash.

Wind shear, a sudden, dangerous shift in wind speed and direction caused by a downward rush of cooled air in thunderstorms, is one of the suspected causes of the crash.

The NTSB isn't expected to issue its findings on the cause of the crash until next year.

The hearing follows the crash of another USAir plane, which went down Sept. 8 near Pittsburgh. That Boeing 737-300 dropped 6,000 feet and nose-dived into a ravine at 300 mph, shattering the plane and killing all 132 people on board.

▶ NOW BOYCOTTS PENSACOLA IN ORDER TO HAVE BUFFER ZONES AT CLINICS

MIAMI (AP) — The National Organization for Women has called for an economic boycott of Pensacola if the city doesn't establish a protective ring around its two abortion clinics.

"Part of what's missing in Pensacola is the political will to stop this violence," NOW president Patricia Ireland said.

Sunday the group's national board unanimously approved a boycott of Pensacola as a last resort.

The board did not discuss details of the boycott, did not set a deadline and did not mention what other steps it would first take to persuade the city to adopt a buffer-zone ordinance.

The boycott has to be approved by NOW's executive committee.

A buffer-zone ordinance would reserve an area in front of the clinics that abortion protesters could not enter.

Pensacola Mayor John Fogg said the city council was not opposed to such a law, but wasn't sure it could pass legal muster.

Courts have disagreed about the constitutionality of such zones, although the U.S. Supreme Court in July upheld one in Melbourne, Fla.

▶ INTERNALLY SPARKED PRISON FIRE IN THE HALLWAYS PROMPTS EVACUATION

JARRATT, Va. (AP) — Inmates of a state prison set fires in a cellblock and briefly occupied an exercise yard today before security forces regained control.

No prison staff members were injured, authorities said.

About 170 inmates from one of the prison's three cellblocks began the disturbance at about 9:30 a.m., said Jim Jones, executive assistant to the director of the Department of Corrections in Richmond, Va.

Fires were set in the hallways of cellblock C, and because of the smoke, the inmates were evacuated to a yard, Jones said. They then seized the yard and ripped down small interior fences but did not threaten the prison's outer fences, he said.

Lou Douglas lecturer Diana Gordon delivers her speech titled "Race, Drugs and the Dangerous Classes" Monday evening in the K-State Union Forum Hall. Gordon spoke about how drugs cause users and dealers to commit crimes which affect society.

▶ LOU DOUGLAS LECTURE

New York professor labels anti-drug program useless

SUMMER RUCKMAN
Collegian

A political science professor and author said Monday that the U.S. anti-drug program has turned into a bragging contest among politicians trying to appear tough on drugs.

Diana Gordon, who spoke about the deficiencies in America's anti-drug campaign to approximately 250 people in the K-State Union Forum Hall, was this year's first Lou Douglas Lecturer.

Gordon, a political science professor at City University of New York, travels the nation discussing her most recent book, "The Return of the Dangerous Classes: Drug Prohibition and Policy Politics."

"Drug prohibition is used to obtain and maintain political power," she said. "Putting emphasis on drug issues distracts us from other issues."

She said the drug prohibition program has become more intense and expansive despite opponents.

"Policy cannot be considered as an end in shaping the political and social world," she said. "But the allure of prohibition is irresistible."

Perpetuating the dangerous class is part of the American culture, she said.

Dividing society by race and socio-economic status and assuming the poor are more criminal than the affluent is a trend that persists and is deepening, she said.

Gordon also said a "shadow agenda" underlies the drug prohibition and motivates some of its policies.

She said the shadow agenda intends to oppress and seclude those already disadvantaged, such as minorities and poor people.

Some drug-enforcement laws are targeted specifically at minorities, she said.

Some points on the shadow agenda include creating a way of dealing with racial conflicts, maintaining a middle-class welfare through government funding of anti-drug campaigns and politicians using drug prohibition to acquire political power.

She said she is in favor of an educational program that teaches Americans about the many differences in drugs today, and not just that drugs are bad.

"It's ineffective past the seventh grade," she said, "because kids realize it's not true. An effective drug program would make distinctions between the use and abuse of drugs.

"We have backed ourselves in a corner by providing so much poor, misleading information," Gordon said.

"The idea that all forms of drugs are equally harmful is absurd," she said.

Gordon said over 26 million Americans take drugs, but only 5 million need help because of abuse.

"We are a drug-taking nation," she said. "We must acknowledge that."

Lyman Baker, instructor in English, said the media and political culture work to create the drug issue as a black-and-white issue with simple solutions.

"Everything is the art of simplification. Politicians arouse fears and present themselves as the person who can alleviate those fears," Baker said.

"The picture is that police and politicians are helping to save you from drug-induced crime," he said.

"If the drug menace stopped tomorrow, police would freak out," he said.

"They have an interest in saying there's a need in the anti-drug program," Baker said.

Jeff Stueve, senior in electrical engineering, said a problem of the war on drugs is that it causes prices for drugs to increase but doesn't decrease drug usage.

"Today's war on drugs is creating a higher demand for drugs and causing higher prices," Stueve said.

"Hardcore drug users must resort to crime to support their habit," he said.

▶ STADIUM SEATING

Problems with seating due to dishonesty, overselling of tickets

SERA L. TANK
Collegian

Students met Monday with athletic department officials to try to resolve seating problems at K-State football games.

Seating problems during the K-State-Rice University game were due to student dishonesty, the overselling of tickets and the KSU Marching Band taking too much space, the officials said.

Students may be at least partially to blame for causing the lack of seating, said Charlie Thomas, director of Bramlage Coliseum, whose personnel oversees seating in the stadium.

Thomas said students were giving their season ticket cards to non-students with general admission tickets so they could get into the student sections.

"More people will fill the section up, and it will just pack the section with more people than there are seats," he said.

Ideally, student seating should have only students in it. If that remains true, there should not be a big problem with seating, Jim Epps, associate director of intercollegiate athletics, said.

"The ticket sales compared with space available still isn't a problem if it is kept pure," Epps said.

"Sometimes non-students go into that section and are often aided and abetted by students," Epps said.

Thomas said one possible solution may be to stamp the hands of the students who are supposed to be sitting in that section.

"KU does that, but we really don't want to be that rigid," Thomas said. "It can be regulated, but then you make it so restricted that it takes people forever just to get in."

Eric McPeak, director of the athletic seating committee and senior in pre-medicine, said hand stamping would probably be preferable to a reoccurrence of last Saturday's chaos.

"I think most students would rather have their hands stamped and be able to get a seat that they have already paid for than not to be able to sit down at all," McPeak said.

In the student section of KSU stadium, there are 7,758 seats available, 468 of which are used by the band, Thomas said.

That leaves only 7,290 seats available for the 7,518 ticket holders, he said.

The number of students who showed up for the game Saturday were much more than the Security needed in Derby Complex

Security at any university is a big issue.

Students have a right to expect security, and the University has the responsibility of helping to provide it.

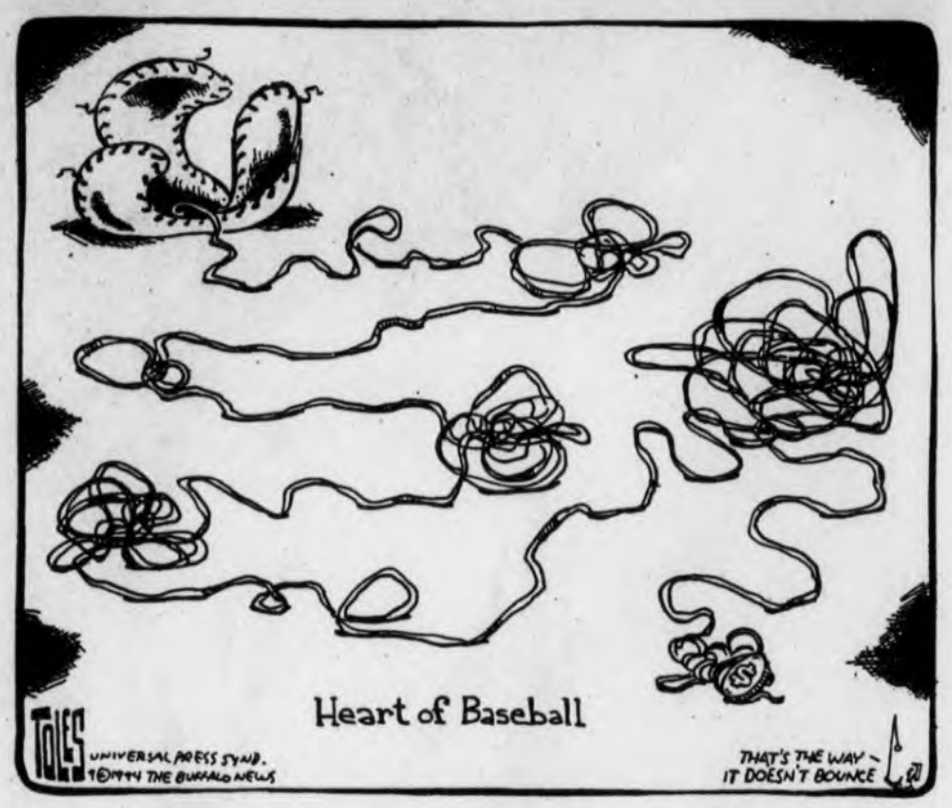
Haymaker Hall has taken a noble step in attempting to ensure the safety of its occupants with a 24-hour locked-door policy, but Haymaker has encountered some problems.

With the other three residence halls in the Derby Complex not adopting the same policy, Haymaker residents are discovering that their security is still being violated.

People are finding their way into Haymaker via Derby and Ford, Moore, and West Halls because there are no Validine locks on the basement doors of each residence hall.

It is obvious that something must be done.

A system of Validine locks should be placed on the doors connecting Derby with each of the residence halls.



This will make access more difficult for unwanted people to enter a residence hall.

Also, every halls' residents should have a voice for their own hall's particular door policy. Residence halls boast about including students in the decisions about their housing situation. Therefore, a policy should only be adopted after taking into consideration the wishes of the residents.

Often, regular students do more than staff to enforce a plan by keeping strangers out and keeping doors shut.

This two-step plan will help curtail the unwanted visitors in each hall and thus help make a safer environment for residence-hall occupants.

TOLES

Parking game needs less players at table

It's just like playing the lottery, only the suspense isn't as fun, and the prize will not guarantee financial independence for life.

KRISTIN BRIGHTON

It's the parking game.

Winning takes patience, quick steering-wheel skill, a compact car with a full tank of gas, and a whole lot of luck.

All of the vultures who plague the parking lots hours before their classes sit at the beginning of a row of cars in park, polluting the atmosphere, blasting their air conditioners or heaters, know what the parking game is like.

Those of us who decide to get an extra two hours of sleep before class and just take a gamble that the parking god is on our side today often find ourselves late — or running — to class.

And if we think the hunt for parking is bad now, just imagine what it will be like after we lose lot A-1 to the art museum construction and all those people fighting over bike racks return to their vehicles with the coming of sub-zero mornings.

A simple solution would only cost about as much as 728 full-year parking permits and would only be making parking an irritation to us during our first year on campus.

OK, I know this sounds like age discrimination, but freshmen shouldn't be allowed to park on campus.

Freshmen should be allowed to park in the Bramlage Coliseum lot free of charge and be bused to campus.

Instead, freshmen should be allowed to park in the Bramlage Coliseum lot free of charge and be bused to campus.

According to the transportation department of Manhattan Unified School District 383, a 1995 71-passenger bus costs around $40,000, depending on options. Like I said before, that is only 728 full-year parking permits.

If we could, over time perhaps, invest in three or four of these banana boats, then we could encourage people to park at Bramlage and have a constant bus route running from the lot, to the Union, to a stop on the north end of campus, and then back to Bramlage. With three buses, this route could probably be made in 15 minutes, so a bus would reach each stop approximately every five minutes.

This way, during bus hours, people could also hitch a ride from the Union to, say, Throckmorton Hall, thus cutting down on foot traffic along the tight pathway along our version of the Berlin Wall.

And there is more. People who live over by Bramlage, like those who live in Woodway Apartments for example, could just walk over to Bramlage and hitch a free ride.

Once we clear freshman cars out of the lots (of course, freshmen living in the residence halls could still buy residence hall permits) and convince people who live near Bramlage to ride the bus, then we'd have a lot more space.

And if we were still tight for space, we could dangle cheaper parking costs in front of the noses of those older students who might be willing to park out at Bramlage, too.

Heck, if the rest of us had a guarantee that we would always be able to find a spot, than we could risk sleeping until ten minutes before class every once in a while, and I bet we could be convinced to pay a little more.

If on-campus permits were raised to $65 instead of $55, we'd pay for a bus with only 4000 permits with the extra $10.

Or, if campus police wanted to help our cause, parking services could donate $1 out of every parking ticket paid to fund a bus.

As there becomes less room to park, more people will park illegally, and more tickets will be issued. At that rate we could raise $40,000 in no time.

Gore tells K-Staters of God, faith

JOHN HART

Twenty-seven students and alumni from K-State joined Vice President Al Gore and other congressional and community leaders, along with 540 college students from around the world, for the National Student Leadership Forum on Faith and Values in Washington D.C. from September 15-18.

Clayton Wheeler, senior in marketing and student senate chair, said he thought the forum was tremendous.

Wheeler has attended around 20-30 leadership conferences but has forgotten the ideas and lost any inspiration after a week or two.

"This forum was different," he said. "I'm going to think about what I learned at this forum for a lifetime."

Senator Pete Domenici, R-NM, a host of the event, said the purpose of the forum is to "provide students with an opportunity to dialogue with peers and men and women in leadership on the roles of values and faith in our professional and daily lives.

"The forum provides a time to focus on the model of leadership that Jesus Christ demonstrated in his life. We want to learn from one another in order to gain a fuller understanding of the essence of servant leadership."

Servant leadership is embodied by the life of Christ, who said in Mark 9:35, "If anyone wants to be first, he must be the very last, and servant of all."

One aspect of the forum that makes it unique is that this model of leadership is the opposite of what the world says a leader is.

Leaders don't serve, but are served. Leaders aren't last, but first, we're told.

However, when you consider the lives of people like Mother Teresa or Christ, regardless of your beliefs about him, you can see with unmistakable clarity that the last truly are first.

Jesus Christ is the greatest leader in the history of the world. No one is more followed than he is. I believe this has happened because of Christ's authority, an authority earned by a life of total service, even up to death on a cross.

Gore, in his remarks during the closing evening, said that his faith in Jesus Christ is at the center of his life. He focused his speech around the question, "What would Jesus do?"

He recalled a story of attending a Catholic mass with Lech Walesa in Poland. Gore, a non-Catholic, debated to himself whether or not to take communion, a non-traditional gesture to say the least. He asked the priest, "What would Jesus do?" The priest served him communion.

Gore's illustration and speech challenged the students to center their faith and values around Jesus Christ, God's way of reaching for man rather than religious denominations, which are man's way of reaching for God.

This echoes the biblical principle that in Christ there is neither slave nor free, male nor female, Jew or Gentile, Baptist or Methodist, Protestant or Catholic, republican or democrat, conservative or liberal, for all who know Christ are one in him.

Billy Graham recently communicated a similar thought when he was criticized by an associate for electing to not hold a large crusade in Russia.

His associate said Graham set the church back 20 years by not having a huge crusade.

"That's too bad," Graham responded. "I wanted to set the church back 2000 years." He wanted to center the church around Christ instead of human tradition.

Gore was asked by a student what he thought Jesus would do if he were president. Initially, Gore said Christ would help the poor and oppressed, but after a lively exchange, he concluded Jesus would never be president because Christ's kingdom is not of this world.

The dream of many who attended the forum, which was planned entirely by students and their peers, is that a movement would begin among college students who are driven by a love for God and one another — Christ's greatest commandment. Then a decaying nation and world would stand in awe as young people began to lead by serving.

Woodrow Wilson, in his last published words wrote, "The sum of the whole matter is this, that our civilization cannot survive materially unless it be redeemed spiritually.

"It can be saved only by becoming permeated with the Spirit of Christ and being made free and happy by the practices which spring out of that Spirit."

It is no secret our country faces extraordinary problems that require extraordinary leadership. Our generation is the hope for the future, and Jesus Christ is the hope for our generation.

Professor needs to watch conclusions

Dear Editor,

"The Wall."

Finally something is pulling us away from bicycles. It's about time.

I don't disagree or agree with what is on "The Wall," but Mr. Anderson's letter made me start thinking.

I wonder where he bought his dictionary to translate the message written in American Sign Language. Before it was changed, the letters spelled out B-U-G-A-H, not F - - K YOU. Even checking out books with variations on this simple alphabet could not get me to make this leap of logic that Mr. Anderson did.

After a hiatus of six years between my freshman and sophomore years, I came back to college to receive an education. If teachers are jumping to conclusions like this without actually verifying what they think, what hope is there for the students?

Ten reasons to go to volleyball match

Dear Editor,

Top 10 reasons why you should attend a K-State volleyball game.

10. Best starting win record since 1988.
9. You don't need a raft to cross an ocean to get to the gym.
8. Bill Clinton probably won't be there!
7. It's not necessary to bring a canned ham to be part of the audience.
6. All bicyclists are welcome at the game.
5. They've got a great coach with a winning attitude.
4. Who really wanted to watch the World Series?
3. Congressional approval not needed to attend.
2. The one place where bumping, setting and spiking is encouraged in front of a live audience.
1. No salary caps for players.

We hope to see even more of you at the next game!

Wall could showcase KSU's best

Dear Editor,

As one walks on the sidewalk between Lafene Health Center and Farrell Library, there looks to be an eyesore.

I'm not just referring to the construction, which is long overdue on the library itself, but the graffiti on the wall.

If some visitor of importance were to tour the University and be directed past that wall, I think he or she would be astonished by some of the chosen words printed on that wall.

Hence, what I'm trying to ask is do we want such an image to be reflected on ourselves, K-State students and faculty alike?

What I think could be done, and other people agree with me, is to paint over the graffiti with purple or white and paint a KSU logo on it.

Add some words of KSU's successes with the Copper Bowl, recent Rhodes Scholars' names, debate and forensics victories in the past and to come.

Make one section dedicated to counting down all the wins the football and basketball team accomplished, or for that matter, all the athletic accomplishments.

The wall is going to be up for a while, so this may be a good project to try for anyone with artistic talents.

This University could only receive embarrassment for what's on that wall right now.

Releases offer transvestites, Wool

The Adventures of Priscilla, Queen of the Desert
Original Motion Picture Soundtrack

Platform shoes, glitter and polyester came back to life in the newly released compact disc, "The Adventures of Priscilla: Queen of the Desert."

Based on a movie about drag queens on a voyage across the desert, the soundtrack is not your ordinary mix of top-40 hits or instrumental music.

Instead, it features 19 songs of pure hip-hopping tunes from the golden age of disco and big-band style melodies from the 1920s.

If you're a disco fan, you'll be in heaven. If not, you'll most certainly be amused by the thought of transvestites singing and dancing to the songs featured on the soundtrack.

Disco standards such as The Village People's "Go West" and Peaches and Herb's "Shake Your Groove Thing" are sure to bring back a flood of memories for the thirtysomething generation.

Other songs with sentimental lyrics and a slow and easy melody break up the fast and repetitive sounds of disco.

Lena Horne's "A Fine Romance" and Patti Page's "I Don't Care If the Sun Don't Shine," have the horn section and flair of a big band straight from the Roaring Twenties.

The CD also caters to the 1980s crowd by including the songs, "Finally" by Ce Ce Peniston and "Save the Best for Last," by Miss America-reject, Vanessa Williams.

Because of the variety and humor of the songs, it's hard to give this CD two thumbs up, but it is recommended for those people who want to get a laugh and who feel in the mood for some hip-swaying and finger-pointing action.

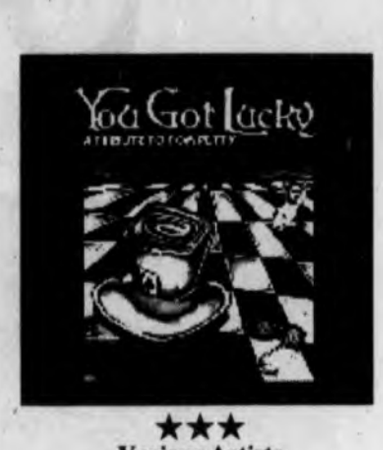
Wool
"The Box Set"
London Records

The compact disc by Wool, titled "Box Set," is a refreshing approach to alternative music.

The intense beat of the drums and the captivating harmony of the guitars blend together to work pure magic.

Each song has a style of its own. Unlike other bands on the scene, Wool sounds like a different band in every song.

The only thing that stays constant throughout the entire CD is the band's ability to manipulate the instruments effectively and provide long guitar introductions.



The vocalist is mediocre, but the drummer and the guitarist's talents shine through to give the band a unique and powerful sound.

The lyrics are light, which is a change from the songs frequently written about death, suicide and destruction. Through the songs "Superman is Dead," and the 30-second track called "Eat Some Ziti," the band clearly displays its sense of humor and easygoing attitude toward music.

You Got Lucky: A tribute to Tom Petty
BMG

Tom Petty and the Heartbreakers. They're not dead yet, and some may believe that it's a little too soon to have an album tributed to them.

But it's here. A smorgasbord of Tom Petty songs, performed by hot and upcoming bands.

There is rarely a group that can cover a song better than the original artist. However, several bands on this album do the job quite well, one being local rock heroes Truck Stop Love.

TSL's rendition of "Listen to Her Heart" kicks. The song has a catchy rhythm, with the bassline painting a melodic picture of the story in the song.

It stands out from the rest of the artists on the album, and even the most die-hard skeptics of cover songs will find themselves tapping their feet to this one.

Another highlight of the album is "Don't Come Around Here No More," done by Fig Dish. Vocals rival Tom Petty himself, and what instruments exist are played well.

A must for fans of Petty and the struggling rock underworld he came out of, "You Got Lucky" is a recommended disc.

Rice game reunites broadcasting alumni

KIM HALL
Collegian

Rice and K-State share a common characteristic.

The similarity can be seen in their sports announcers as both teams' play-by-play action are broadcast by a K-State graduate.

Holthus produces play-by-play for the Wildcat radio network, Musil for the Rice radio network, and Aiken for DB92.

Each have shared strikingly similar events throughout the course of their careers.

"I was sports director at DB92 the 1978-79 school year," Holthus said.

Holthus, who graduated from K-State in 1979 with a radio/television degree and in 1980 with a business administration degree, got his first job at KWLS in Pratt.

"The irony is that Dan Musil's first job was in Pratt," he said. "So he and I started at the same station maybe five or six years apart."

Holthus said his experience at DB92 helped him get off to a great start.

"Kansas State's strength in its school of radio and television and journalism is a very practical undergraduate curriculum," he said. "It really helps students because they have a certain confidence and a level of performance that may be ahead of some students from other schools."

Holthus, who has been the voice of the Wildcats since 1983 and recently signed a three-year contract to be the voice of the Kansas City Chiefs, isn't alone in his success.

Musil, sports anchor at KHOU-TV in Houston and voice of the Owls for the past 10 years, also started at DB92.

"I was sports director at KSDB in 1971 and again in 1974," Musil said.

He said he never would have had a chance if it weren't for the work he did at DB92.

Not only did Musil get sports experience at DB92, he also met his wife-to-be.

"She did the news during my board shift," he said. "I fell in love with her voice first."

Musil said one of the most exciting things about coming back to broadcast the Rice-K-State game is the new Dev Nelson Press Box.

And Musil does get excited when he's calling a game.

"I'm an edge-of-the-seat kinda guy," he said. "I'm not a screamer, but I am enthusiastic."

"Even though my team may not win, I want to be a winner every game," Musil said.

Aiken, who is currently the DB92 sports director, also announced the game Saturday.

He graduated from Oklahoma State University in 1986 with a radio/television and film degree. Aiken then joined the Navy for five years before coming to graduate school at K-State in 1993.

"I'm excited about being here," he said. "It's nice to be back into the college picture."

Aiken said his broadcast style is neutral for the most part.

"I have a respect for both teams, but obviously you're going to have some enthusiasm when your team does good things," Aiken said.

Aiken said he hopes to follow in the successful footsteps of Holthus and Musil.

And Holthus doesn't see any reason why he wouldn't be successful.

"If you look at the practical results of the people that are working in our business, there's a lot of good Kansas State sportscasters," Holthus said. "And we had three in the box today.

"It's a good testimony to our department that it deserves more notoriety than it gets," he said.

Stewart confident about season

CRESTON KUENZI
Collegian

After his team ripped Wisconsin 55-17 Saturday and he was named Big Eight offensive player of the week, Kordell Stewart, Colorado quarterback, was feeling pretty confident.

"The coaches are really helping me with my reads, and making me understand what I should and shouldn't do," Stewart said. "That makes me feel like I can go out and do about whatever I want to do when I'm throwing the ball."

Stewart amassed 301 total yards in the rout of Wisconsin. He passed for 249 yards and ran for 52.

Stewart was also feeling good about his team.

"The entire team played well, everybody picked up their blocks, and I made the right checks and reads," he said. "The defense also did a lot of things for us and got us into great field position."

If Stewart stays healthy, he should enter an elite club of Big Eight quarterbacks to pass for 5,000 yards and rush for 1,000. In his career, Stewart has passed for 4,866 and has rushed for 786.

The only other quarterbacks to do that were Missouri's Phil Bradley and Kansas' Chip Hilleary.

The thought of playing Wisconsin, Michigan, and Texas on consecutive Saturdays excites him, Stewart said.

"That's the kind of opponents a good team wants to play," he said. "If you want to win the national championship, I don't think you would want to play a weak schedule."

Stewart said he is optimistic about playing at Michigan this week.

"If we prepare ourselves real well this week, and everybody does what they're supposed to do, we just may come out of there with a victory," he said.

■ After enduring numerous injuries last year, Kansas coach Glen Mason said the injury bug has bitten them again.

"Asheki Preston's X-rays showed that he has a hairline fracture in a rib, plus he experienced a partial collapse of a lung," Mason said. "He will be out for an indefinite amount of time.

"He could be ready for the Kansas State (Oct. 6) game or possibly as late as the Oklahoma (Oct. 22) game."

Mason also said the injury sustained by his star running back leaves him uncertain for next week.

"June Henley may miss this game with a bruised shoulder."

■ Oklahoma coach Gary Gibbs said the newly installed natural grass in Owen Stadium may reap benefits besides a reduction in injuries.

"In recruiting, I think there is a segment of the students coming out of high school that consider that an issue," Gibbs said.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

IRVING, Texas — Jason Hanson, who had two kicks blocked by Leon Lett late in the game, made a 44-yard field goal with 27 seconds left in overtime Monday night to send the Detroit Lions past Dallas 20-17, ending the Cowboys' 10-game winning streak.

Detroit	20
Dallas	17

It was the first loss for the Super Bowl champions since last Thanksgiving when a blunder by Lett on a blocked field goal attempt allowed the Miami Dolphins to win in the snow at Texas Stadium.

Hanson made his second overtime field goal of the year. He had a 37-yarder against Atlanta in the first game of the season.

Barry Sanders rushed for 194 yards and Emmitt Smith for 143 yards in a matchup of two of the NFL's most prolific backs.

Scott Mitchell connected on 13 of 27 passes for 127 yards. Aikman hit 26 of 39 passes for 223 yards.

It came down to Detroit's kicking game and Lett's outstretched arms.

At the end of regulation, Hanson's 57-yard attempt was blocked by Lett, and the lineman halted a 51-yard attempt 5 1/2 minutes into overtime.

But Lett was not in position to block the game-winner as the ball sailed over the other end of the Cowboys' defensive line.

Wranglers join Royals' minor-league system

ASSOCIATED PRESS

The Wichita Wranglers became the Kansas City Royals' Double-A team Monday, in a ceremony that had all the trappings of a wedding.

During a news conference at Lawrence-Dumont Stadium, champagne flowed, spectators craned their necks for a look at the "wedding party," and there were even a few tears of joy.

"I plan to be married to her the rest of my life," Brett said. "And I hope the Royals will remain married to Wichita the rest of our days."

The teams reached a verbal agreement to affiliate last week after the Wichita City Council agreed to spend $290,000 for stadium improvements.

An official player development contract was signed Monday by Brett, Royals vice president of baseball operations, and Mike Billoni, vice president of Rich Baseball Operations for Bob and Mindy Rich of Buffalo, N.Y., the owners of the Wranglers.

The contract called for Wichita to be the Royals' affiliate for four years. The Wranglers replace Memphis, Tenn., as a Royals minor league site.

Under baseball rules, the two teams were not allowed to discuss the affiliation until after the Royals announced Sept. 6 that Memphis would no longer be the team's affiliate.

The fines imposed for violating the rules are $500,000 for minor league clubs and $1 million for major league teams.

Cornhuskers leading conference chase for title, despite weak schedule

Three weeks into the college football season, the Big Eight Conference picture is beginning to come into focus.

Or is it?

Two items already look very probable.

■ No. 1 — It seems nobody will touch Nebraska.

■ No. 2 — It seems Iowa State won't touch anybody.

The top and bottom finishers in the league may look obvious, but it is the middle six that will be interesting.

Of course, arguments can be made to these forecasts.

As far as contending for the top spot in the conference, Colorado, Oklahoma, K-State and Kansas, along with Nebraska, all have a shot at the title.

Better yet, look at NU's opponent on Saturday, Sept. 24. Pacific. Yes, Pacific.

Oh, don't forget Wyoming on Oct. 1. I'm sure everyone remembers how good these guys are (52-17, Copper Bowl).

Formidable opponents they are not.

Now look at Colorado and Oklahoma. Why, these two conference teams may not possess the talent Nebraska has, but at least they have the guts to lay it on the line early in the season.

Colorado is slugging it out with teams like Wisconsin, Texas and Michigan. The Buffaloes' contest with the Wolverines this Saturday could be one of the best games this season. After all, isn't that what college football is supposed to be about?

At least we don't have to wait until New Year's Day to see a decent game.

Oklahoma is taking on teams like Syracuse, Texas A&M and Texas. Of course, the Sooners are willing to do this every year.

I'll tell you one thing, Nebraska will never form a rivalry like the Red River War. Never.

Could someone please tell me what the Cornhuskers will prove by playing Pacific? This team's wins include a 24-7 spread against the University of California at Davis and a 27-7 victory against Southwest Texas State.

What difference does it make who they play in September?"

Can you say "seven-straight bowl losses"?

The last time NU won a bowl game was in 1987 — a 30-15 decision against Louisiana State in the Sugar Bowl. The Cornhuskers' overall record in bowl games? 14-18. Ouch.

So, the old saying, "you practice like you play" kind of makes sense here, huh?

After Nebraska humiliates Pacific and Wyoming, it opens Big Eight play at home against Oklahoma State. No problems here.

But the following week, the Huskers travel to Manhattan. I can already feel the tension ... Nebraska is ranked No. 1 in the land ... K-State is 14-0-1 in its last 15 games at home ... the Wildcats haven't beaten the Huskers in 27 years ... a sea of purple screaming at the top of their lungs.

The only teams with a shot to knock the Huskers out of Big Eight Title contention are K-State and Oklahoma. If for no other reason, because the Huskers have to travel on both counts.

As for Iowa State, the Cyclones are probably a lock for the bottom spot in the race.

"This team continues to mentally shoot itself in the foot," Cyclone coach Jim Walden said Monday. "We're still making a lot of mental mistakes."

If the Cyclones are making game-losing mistakes against Western Michigan and Northern Iowa, imagine what will happen when they hit the conference part of the schedule.

Missouri might be capable of finishing anywhere from sixth to seventh, depending on how it rebounds from early losses to Tulsa and Illinois.

MU's home schedule includes games with Nebraska, Colorado, Kansas and K-State. It is possible, but not probable, that the Tigers will upset one of those teams.

Oklahoma State is an improved team. The Cowboys' 14-10 loss to Baylor last Saturday marked their fifth loss by seven or fewer points in the last 11 outings. Don't expect the Cowboys to go winless in the league like last year.

If Colorado can escape from Ann Arbor, Mich., with a victory on Saturday, then it should be able to travel to Lincoln and win.

When the Big Eight season gets underway, expect changes. Whether it be the champion of the league or the runner-up, the conference race will definitely be exciting.

Contents of rumored Kedzie time capsule revealed after 30 years

LEIGH BELLINGER
Collegian

Deep in the bowels of Kedzie Hall, amidst the roar of the presses and the pungent odor of ink, there is a time capsule buried beneath the concrete floor.

For years, rumors swirled throughout the building concerning the existence of a time capsule somewhere beneath printing services.

Some talk of a sign that, at one time, was etched in the concrete in the building's northwest corner.

Unfortunately, the marker has long since disappeared, the victim of heavy equipment and feet over the years. When the marker disappeared, so did the only known sign of where the time capsule is exactly buried.

So, is there really a time capsule beneath Kedzie, or is it all a joke, started years ago and passed down through word of mouth?

Actually, it is a little of both.

We have to go back in time to K-State's Centennial in 1963 to solve the mystery. According to the Oct. 24, 1966 Collegian, a four-foot army surplus capsule shell was to have been buried during Homecoming Week 1963 as part of the school's 100th birthday.

The items that were supposed to be put into the time capsule included a 1963 Royal Purple, centennial editions of the Manhattan Mercury and Collegian, a copy of a centennial letter written by President John F. Kennedy and a legislative bill establishing K-State as a land-grant college.

The capsule was to be dug up in 2063, the school's second centennial.

All the school needed was a place to bury this time capsule. Unfortunately, the Student Governing Association could not agree on where to put it. One location mentioned was between the K-State Union and Anderson Hall.

When the school's centennial came to a close, the time capsule was still sitting in the SGA office gathering dust.

By 1965, two years after it was originally supposed to be buried, the Collegian staff had grown impatient with the lack of action on the part of officials. In an editorial, the staff questioned the location of the capsule.

Finally, the SGA made a decision on where the time capsule should go — they gave it to the Collegian. The paper's editor at the time, Suzie Miller Johnson, took the capsule, stood it on its end, inverted the nose cone, and the time capsule was transformed into an ashtray.

The capsule stayed there for months. It gathered dust and cigarette ash, until one day it disappeared.

According to a story from the July 16, 1969 Collegian, the capsule had been buried one summer in the basement of Kedzie by three Collegian staff members. The spot had been marked with a Maltese cross with the letters K,M,E and V on it.

The mystery of the missing time capsule appeared to be solved. After all, the time capsule had finally found a permanent home.

However, questions remained about the identity of the three mysterious staff members. What was in the capsule and why was the capsule buried in the basement?

Now, 30 years of rumors can be put to rest concerning Kedzie's time capsule.

"Nobody knows it's there officially ... and if they say they do, they're wrong," Michael Lowe said from his home in San Mateo, Calif.

Lowe, K-State alumnus, was working with the Collegian in the summer of 1965 when he and two others, Vern Parker and Ed Chamness, decided it was time to take matters into their own hands.

According to the July 28, 1966 Collegian, printing services was installing a new offset press to replace an older press. That meant a crawl space in the basement would have to be filled in to make room for the new press.

From his home in Vienna, Va., Parker said this provided the group a golden opportunity to bury the time capsule.

Before the capsule went in the ground, they filled it with a hodgepodge of empty Coke bottles, news copy from the Collegian and even the contents of an ash tray.

As far as the official centennial items that are supposedly in the capsule, Lowe said, as well as he could remember, there was nothing of the kind when they buried it.

"I don't think any of that stuff was in there," he said. "There was nothing official from anybody, especially the administration or the student body."

After the nose cone was welded shut, the three lugged the capsule down into the basement during the lunch hour. With Chamness standing guard, the two others buried it underneath sand that had already been poured in the hole.

The workers returned after lunch to finish the job and unknowingly seal away the time capsule. Once the workers left for the day, the pranksters returned to the scene of the crime to mark the spot.

They drew a Maltese cross, accompanied with a K for Kedzie, an M for Michael Lowe, an E for Ed Chamness and a V for Vern Parker.

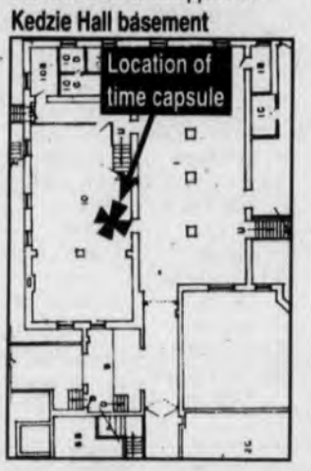
Lowe said the cross was the only thing left behind to let people know where it was buried. Even this marker did not mention the fact there was a time capsule under the building.

"There was never anything left behind to document it was there. It's just buried there," he said. "We figured that when they tore Kedzie down somebody would find it."

That was the way the three of them wanted it. It was a spur-of-the-moment act done only to get a laugh.

"It was a stunt for fun," Lowe said. They joked about what people would think when they eventually discovered the four-foot capsule.

Even today, the members of the Collegian that were in on the joke reminisce about it.



"We still get a kick talking about it when some of us get together," Johnson said.

KEDZIE TIME CAPSULE

Three K-State alumni buried a four-foot army surplus capsule shell in the basement of Kedzie Hall in 1965. The spot was marked with a Maltese cross, which has since disappeared.

A relaxed, tranquil eating environment is the trademark of the

BLUEMONT BUFFET

SUMMER RUCKMAN
Collegian

Tucked away on the K-State Union second floor is the Bluemont Buffet, an on-campus restaurant that provides an escape from the Stateroom's commotion.

In addition to good-quality food, Bluemont Buffet offers a pleasant dining environment not found anywhere else on campus.

The windows along the wall provide a view of students hustling between the Union and Seaton Hall. The afternoon sun floods the room.

An antique grandfather clock ticks along the west wall, and a set of six prints by K-State's associate professor of art Jim Munce decorate the walls.

"Most people think it's a quiet dining room to bring their trays to," Katy Vinson, catering manager for the Union, said.

Located next to the ballroom, the buffet offers a different entree each weekday, and theme days, such as 'carved meat day,' on Fridays.

First opened in the 1970s, the Bluemont Buffet recently underwent a minor face lift.

"The ceiling has been entirely modernized with improved lighting, the walls have been painted, and we have installed new carpeting," Vinson said.

"We've always tried to establish an appealing and inviting atmosphere for our customers," she said.

Russell Staley, cashier work leader, said, "People come here to get away from the loudness downstairs and to enjoy conversations."

Its location on campus is a benefit for K-State faculty, staff and students.

Jack Durgan, a part-time professor at K-State, said he likes the convenience.

"It's a nice place to lunch with friends," he said. "It's easy to come over after class, and the atmosphere is nice and quiet."

Lloyd Thomas, professor of economics, and his wife Sally, have been dining at the buffet for the past 15 years.

"We just love it," Thomas said. "You can't find any food better than here in Manhattan."

Vinson said business is down from last year due to the 95-cent increase in prices.

"They went overboard in their pricing," a Lafene employee said. "I think you could eat anywhere in town for $4.50."

"The convenience of not driving anywhere and parking is not worth the price," she said.

Vinson said the prices were increased to cover costs.

"We upscaled the decor and increased the selection and quality of the food," she said.

Although business is down from last year, Vinson said she doesn't see the buffet closing.

"Bluemont Buffet is a service as much as a revenue generator," she said.

The buffet was originally designed for faculty and staff to entertain visitors to campus and for departments to have meetings, she said.

"The campus demands it to entertain at lunches," she said. "It's also for people who can't tolerate noise but don't have the time to go off campus."

BUFFET HOURS

The Bluemont Buffet hours are 11:15 a.m. to 1:15 p.m., Monday through Friday. Meal choices include the soup and salad option for $4.75, or the full buffet with dessert for $5.95.

House addressing concerns and Carla Jones, assistant dean of student life, met with Smurthwaite residents Monday morning to address their concerns.

Hasan and housing staff assistant Michelle Black gave residents their home phone numbers so residents and members of their families could contact them any time.

"We also are extending police coverage dedicated to Smurthwaite and increasing desk coverage to 24 hours," Hasan said.

Hasan said there would be police presence on the grounds for the next few nights.

Residents were given the option of moving to other residence halls, but Hasan said none of the residents have requested to be moved.

"The women have been very strong and supportive of each other," Hasan said.

Residents who have had to miss classes or have academic concerns can also go to the Dean of Student Life Office for assistance, she said.

Seating problem to be resolved number estimated, Thomas said.

"Last year, we only sold about 5,300 tickets, so we weren't expecting so many students," he said.

Thomas said when the agreement for student seating was made in fall 1992, sales were much lower.

"Early on, when we came to this agreement, we were probably only selling about 4,500 to 5,000 of the over 7,000 tickets available," he said.

Although tickets were oversold, Thomas said there were still some seats available down in the bottom of section 27.

"It's only as a last resort that students sit there. What you generally see is that everyone wants to jam into (section 24) and even fill up the aisles before they go to other seating sections," he said.

Epps said part of the problem is the band is growing.

"There are about 250 band members. Normally we rope off 10 rows for them, but they took 12 rows on Saturday," he said.

With 39 seats in a row, there are about 5-1/2 rows being held for just for the band's equipment, Epps said.

"Whether that's excessive, I don't know. They were to restrict themselves to ten rows. It turns out that they extended that at least two more rows," he said.

One possible solution to ensure last Saturday's seating problem doesn't happen again is temporary bleachers, Epps said.

"We can put them in the grassy area north of the east bleachers," he said.

Epps said that while part of the seating problem can be solved by temporary bleachers, some of the responsibility lies in the hands of the students.

"Part of it is probably for the students to not pass their cards around," he said.

Mortar Board to sponsor University forum

TRINA HOLMES
Collegian

If you have concerns about bicycle regulations, parking or University policies, you'll have an opportunity Wednesday to take it straight to the top.

Mortar Board will be sponsoring a University Forum with several K-State administrators at noon Sept. 21 in the K-State Union Courtyard.

The forum will give students the chance to interact with eight University officials, Janice Wissman, associate dean of the College of Education and senior Mortar Board adviser, said.

"Mortar Board is made up of students who are campus leaders and who know the importance of the administration and students interacting," Wissman said.

"They thought it would be important to make available to all students on campus the opportunity for the administration to explain different policies and promote involvement in various University-related activities," she said.

Panel members present will be Jon Wefald, president; Robert Krause, vice president for institutional advancement; Tom Rawson, vice president for administration and finance; James Coffman, provost; Carla Jones, future assistant dean of student life; James Epps, senior associate director of intercollegiate athletics; Nelson Britt, director of the Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art; and Mordean Taylor-Archer, assistant provost for multicultural affairs.

Panelists will not be giving speeches; rather, they will be answering questions or addressing student concerns, Wissman said.

"It means a lot when you have this many people with big time commitments who take the time to come to the forum," she said.

Stacey Heidrick, senior in pre-pharmacy and Mortar Board vice president, said panel members will be able to provide a quick solution to many student problems.

"The forum is a great way to confront University officials face to face with a question and get an answer right then and there," Heidrick said.

The forum will also be beneficial to participating administrators, Aaron Graham, senior in journalism and mass communications and Mortar Board leadership chairman, said.

"The forum will also be beneficial to panelists who are answering questions," Graham said. "This way, they can find out what questions students have and what the problems are at K-State in the eyes of the students. It's kind of a two-way street thing."

Stop moping miserably — go fishing

Dear Cassandra,

I am writing again in response to Losing Weight and Sleep. My girlfriend and I had plans to get married when we graduated.

This summer, she decided after three years she wasn't sure what she wanted. As hard as it is to give her time and space, I try my hardest to do just that. I don't want Losing Weight and Sleep to think that just because her boyfriend would not "commit" that it's only men who won't commit, because it is also women.

Signed,
Been There–Still There

Dear Been There-Still There,

Maybe you and "Losing Weight and Sleep" need to get together and go out. You two are still miserably moping around waiting for the world to come to an end. You have to overcome this ordeal. Remember the old saying, there are other fish in the sea? Well, there are about 20,000 other fish here on campus alone.

The fact that people don't commit to marriage in relationships doesn't have anything to do with which sex you are. It has to do with people not being ready for a commitment.

The fish are biting.

Show comprises song, torture

Kansas City, Kan.'s Memorial Hall was a freak show Saturday night.

Nine Inch Nails were flawless. Theatrical and powerful from start to finish, the band dazzled about 3,000 people with an assault of abusive sounds, warped lights and shocking sights that penetrated painfully deep into the subconscious of kinky sexual pleasures. Moshers moshed. Dancers danced. Freaks freaked.

We voyeurs watched. We listened.

That said, the show was still less impressive than its audience.

SCOTT ALLEN MILLER

Particularly impressive were the many people dressed in all-black, sporting hair dyed and painted in hues of green, gray and blue.

Black clothing. How passé. Goth rock may have always looked like it, but it really is dead now. It's time to move on already.

At the risk of sounding bourgeois, it seems these people, some of the most creative minds around, would wear clothing at least as creative as their hair, tattoos and pierced et cetera.

Then again, NIN were dressed in black, too. What a shock.

Among the other avid NIN fans were many openly affectionate high school-aged lesbians.

I saw few men there openly displaying affection for each other, but the allure of NIN master-mind Trent Reznor's post-techno beats must be too much for sapphic adolescents to resist. Bully for them for being open about it, but I didn't expect to see so many of them that night.

Of course, there were run-of-the-mill high-school students in Bugle-Boys. Amusingly, they seemed very confused and a little disturbed.

Then there were the pathetic lot who show up at every concert. They primp, preen, and go to any show where there's a chance to breed. They seemed titillated by NIN's music but a little confused and disturbed as well.

We voyeurs were there. We watched. We listened. We were not confused a bit.

With the sadistic audience roaring in ecstasy, Reznor tortured and killed three keyboards. Perverts.

Speaking of perverts, the Tim Rose Circus presented a human torture act that moved, even twisted, the imagination.

Imagine picking up and swinging concrete blocks with your pierced nipples. Imagine balancing a running lawn mower on your chin while lettuce is thrown into it. Imagine picking up weights with hooks under your eyelids or with a hook on your tongue. Imagine swallowing razor blades and then pulling them out on a string. Imagine squeezing your body through a tennis racket.

Imagine just watching it for a half hour. I watched it all. I was not confused. I was transfixed.

What kind of oddball does that make me?

Scott Allen Miller is a junior in radio and television

To help you find what you are looking for, the classified ads have been arranged by category and sub-category. All categories are marked by one of the large images, and sub-categories are preceded by a number designation.

TIPS FOR WRITING A CLASSIFIED AD

Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.

Diversity important consideration in hiring faculty, education efforts affairs, said the credit should not go completely to her office.

"It is really a team effort. One person cannot do it alone," Taylor-Archer said.

Much of the credit should go to other administrators at K-State, Taylor-Archer said.

"I appreciate the efforts on the parts of the provost, the deans, department heads and especially President (Jon) Wefald, who have set a tone of commitment to diversity throughout the University," she said.

Taylor-Archer said that this is an important step in making K-State a better learning environment, because it gives students diverse role models.

"When students see women and people of color in various faculty and administrative positions, it serves to enrich their education and prepares them to live and work in a diverse society," she said.

The reason for hiring such a diverse staff this year is a matter of concerted effort and timing, Taylor-Archer said.

"There was an effort to do what was necessary to reach out and increase the number of underrepresented persons, and to make sure that there is a diverse and highly qualified applicant pool for the selection of faculty," she said.

Although there have been a record number of minorities hired, this is only the first step, Wefald said.

"It all boils down to dedication and an attitude of eternal vigilance," Wefald said.

"We are constantly striving for more diversity. It is a battle you can never win, but one that has to be fought," he said.

Taylor-Archer said that although she is proud of efforts that have been made to achieve diversity, it is only one step.

"We should certainly take pride in the recruitment efforts, but we must pay equal attention to the retention of underrepresented persons," she said.

Wefald said he hopes department faculty and staff will help with that.

Taylor-Archer said that the appointment of a diverse faculty is an important step in the quality of education at K-State.

"We cannot have excellence in education without diversity," she said.

Mixed opinions persist over graffiti artwork students, because it was done with black magic markers. Some of the words he said he recognized from other places around town.

"I'd much rather see 'FCC' (a gang sign meaning 'fuck cops crew') written here then on Durland Hall," Darling said.

Susan Rivera, senior in criminal justice psychology, said the graffiti does not bother her.

"Some things written are not that great, but I have the option to ignore it," she said.

Slover said in he hopes students will not write on the wall. If necessary, he said spot checks will be done to cover the graffiti.

Each of the four painters said none of the students walking by had been rude, but many had questioned why they were painting over the art work.

"The students haven't been rude at all. Many asked why we didn't just spray over the nasty stuff and keep the rest," Shelly Hauck, painter, said.

William McKinley, painter, said he thought they should just have kept the art work.

"A guy and a girl walked by and said they were going to come back tonight and said they were going to keep me busy," McKinley said.

"I said, 'I don't care, it's just a job to me.'"

One design depicted on the fence was of a police officer pointing a gun. Next to the police officer the words, "Looking down the barrel of a gun ... son of a gun, son of a bitch ... get 'n paid, get 'n rich ... " were written with the words attributed to The Beastie Boys.

Slover said the artist of the painting walked by and saw the painters painting over the fence.

"He was upset because he felt the Collegian had encouraged people to paint on the fence," Slover said.

Slover said the artist told him it took about three hours to paint the picture of the police officer.

As Shelly Hauck, painter, started to paint closer to the painting of the police officer, a small audience gathered.

"You can tell she doesn't want to cover up that picture," Slover said. "I don't blame her."

"Can't I just leave it?" Hauck asked.

Kansas farms financially healthier due to lower costs and higher yields

PRUDENCE SIEBERT
Collegian

Kansas farms are in better financial condition than they were 10 years ago, said a K-State agricultural economist.

"The number of farms financially stressed is lower than in the mid-'80s," Michael Langemeier, assistant professor of agricultural economics, said.

"Financial stress is defined as low earnings and high debt. Higher earnings helped attribute to the decline in financial stress."

According to the yearly report by Kansas Farm Management Associations, the net profit for Kansas farms ranged from a negative $152,671 to a positive $568,659. The large figure span has many factors contributing to it, like disasters, poor management and production efficiency.

"Some (farms) have substantially lower costs of production," Langemeier said. "The sizes of the farms have an impact on how profitable they are. Bigger farms have lower cost of production.

"The cost of production varies more with producers of the same size farm than among farms of different size."

Higher yields, lower death loss and being able to wean more calves per cow were a few of the factors that could attribute to the differences in the farms' financial performance, Langemeier said.

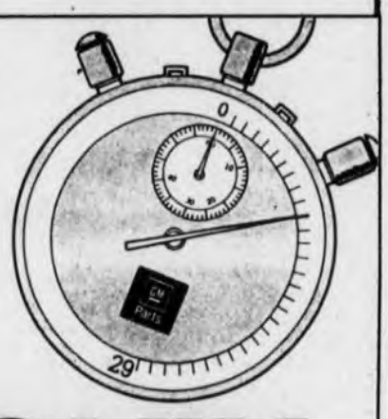
"Every single farm has a different set of resources. They're facing different constraints," he said. "There is no magic formula you can give a farmer to say this will help increase production."

David Frey, assistant administrator for the Kansas Wheat Commission, said he thought the results of the report were discouraging.

"Some of the better farmers in the state are not able to get a living wage," Frey said. "It (the report) helps us get a picture of where agriculture is – where our No. 1 industry is. It's not looking too good."

Kansas Farm Management Associations includes 22 fieldmen (K-State employees) who work with producers, who in turn pay for the service.

"It is an on-going program helping them to budget project expenses and determine what form of enterprise will make the most money for them," Frey said. "It documents the situation of farms."



Since the decline of financial stress, farms are in a better position to withstand a couple of difficult years, Langemeier said.

Langemeier said the future of the Conservation Reserve Program was a big issue of the 1995 Farm Bill, which may not be signed until next fall.

"What happens to beef price, what happens to the Conservation Reserve Program are going to have a big effect on farms and what those farms produce," Langemeier said.

Haiti plan draws fire

BOB MACHA
Collegian

K-State voices are praising and condemning the United States sending troops to Haiti.

Associate professor of philosophy John Exdell said the administration's policy is disgusting.

Exdell teaches introduction to social and political philosophy. He said everything is wrong with an American occupation.

"It's disastrous for the development of democracy there," Exdell said.

He said the administration is not sincerely interested in starting a democracy. Exdell said what the Clinton administration is sincerely interested in is taking over Haiti so American businesses can use it as a sweat shop.

U.S. businesses could get cheap labor and not have to follow U.S. environmental laws, Exdell said. He said there is a conspiracy involving several American government agencies, including the Treasury and the Commerce Department.

INSIDE

Page 12

Exdell said this is a powerful motive and the obvious orientation of U.S. policy.

He said U.S. involvement is also wrong because democracy will be suppressed by the Haitian military. He said there will be just a false cover of democracy.

Head of the political science department and former U.S. diplomat Dale Herspring said he doesn't think the Clinton administration is doing a good job with its Haitian policy, either.

"Clinton has little understanding of foreign policy and Haiti exemplifies that," he said. "I mean, why are we there?"

"Is it because we're trying to stop immigration? We could give the Coast Guard five or six more ships and do that. Is it because the Congressional Black Caucus said they'd vote for the crime bill?" Herspring said.

He said Clinton's worked himself into a political corner.

"About every foreign-policy issue Clinton has been involved in, he has screwed up."

Melissa Hadaway, senior in special education, said the operation cost too much money, but Lt. Col. Raoul Cedras is not a suitable person to rule Haiti, so it may have been worth the money.

"It costs, too, but you don't want a maniac running the country either," she said.

Shauna Schauf, senior in architectural engineering, said she didn't think the U.S. military should have been involved. She said it was good the United States gave the Haitians other help.

He said it was good that no lives were lost, but he said he questioned if things will really work out, because he said trusting Cedras is like trusting Saddam Hussein.Quigley also said people tend to compare former president Jimmy Carter and Bill Clinton, but it's like apples and oranges because Clinton has to look at many issues now while Carter can focus on just one.

"I think he made the right move," Randy

Dwain Archer, director of KSU Parking Services, expresses his opinion during the Black Student Union meeting Tuesday evening. Archer and others at the meeting were concerned about the stereotypes of black people in connection with a recent rape investigation.

Davis leads rape talk

JEREMY UNRUH
Collegian

Misconceptions and ambiguity concerning a campus-rape investigation touched off discussion during a meeting of the Black Student Union last night.

"Did he actually rape her?" one student said.

"What's to say that it's a student?" another said.

Those questions and others were posed to Judy Davis, director of the K-State Women's Resource Center, before an audience of about 35 people at the meeting in Union 207.

Davis said her original intent was to use the meeting to counsel women about campus sexual assaults.

"I don't feel we had enough time to deal with what it is that I came to deal with — the matter of sexual assault on this campus," Davis said.

One woman said residence hall neighbors connect her with the attacker because they share the same skin color.

"They see the posters and they act like he's hiding in the dorms. They want to hide in my room thinking that I relate to him."

The meeting's topic quickly changed as concerns of improper journalistic coverage by the Collegian surfaced.

One man attending said coverage of the case and, particularly, the publication of a police composite photo was an indictment of the black male.

He said he was concerned about the reliability of these composites, and said they might be damning or incriminating to innocent men, due to the derisive misconception that all black men look alike.

"When we look in the mirror as black people, we need to see a positive self-image," he said.

Further debate was sparked when Davis said an alliance between black and white females should be formed.

"Rape doesn't just happen to white women," Davis said. "Rape is a political crime that throughout history doesn't cross racial lines."

Davis concluded by asking BSU if she could return at a later date to focus on preventing sexual assault on campus. She said she fears race had overcome the issue of sexual violence.

"My heart fears that the inevitable emotional fall-out from this will put distance between us."

Rape research targets attacker

KRISTA COZAD
Collegian

Marsha McCoy isn't researching your usual topic, and subjects for her research aren't hunting her down to participate, either.

If anything, they probably don't want to be found. They wouldn't want people to know what they were thinking when they raped someone, or what happened when they and their friends raped someone together.

But McCoy, a graduate of the University of Kansas in psychology who is now interning at University Counseling Services, said she does want to know.

McCoy has been gathering data from KU during the past year and said she is now rounding out her research at K-State on the dynamics of group and dyatic rape (a one-on-one rape situation).

She said she decided on researching the difficult topic because she wanted to know what was going through the minds of men who rape.

McCoy will be researching both their behavior and what they are thinking, or their cognitive state, during the rape, she said.

"I want to know what thoughts they remembered were going through their minds while they're in the situation," she said.

"What they're thinking after the woman has said no, or in the group sexual situation, what they're thinking when they're deciding whether or not to participate," McCoy said. "If they choose not to, do they perceive it as a rape situation? Do they try to stop it? Do they call the police?"

The purpose of the study, McCoy said, is to understand the mentality of the men who participate in rape so others can find ways to prevent men from raping in the future.

"I wondered what I could do personally to prevent rape. The focus most often is what the women can do or not do to prevent rape," she said. "I always wondered, 'Where are the men in rape prevention?'"

Charlene Muehlenhard, associate professor of psychology and women's studies at KU, said understanding a man's motivation in rape could be one of the first steps in changing it.

"If we know what goes through the mind of the man, we might be able to identify a strategy that would change the man's behavior," said Muehlenhard, who worked with McCoy on many of her research projects.

"We want to try to change men's attitudes toward rape, and it's important to know what attitudes need to be changed," she said.

ADA requirements close to completion

LEIGH BELLINGER
Collegian

The City of Manhattan is close to completing all the necessary improvements that stem from a lawsuit the city lost this summer dealing with the Americans with Disabilities Act.

At Tuesday's City Commission meeting, Ron Fehr, assistant city manager, updated the commissioners on the status of the city-wide improvements that are required to be complete by Jan. 25, 1995.

Fehr said nearly all the ADA compliance regulations, as set by the judge in the case, were complete, with the exception of the curb cuts.

The city is in the process of installing more than 800 curb ramps to improve accessibility and has until Jan. 7, 1995, to complete those improvements. Fehr said they currently have five city crews and five contracting crews working on the curb cuts.

"We believe if we maintain that same number of contractors and the weather holds for us," he said, "we'll be able to meet that Jan. 7 goal without any problem."

He also said city officials are still working on a self-evaluation program to review and document the city's non-discrimination and employment provisions.

They hope to publish a early draft of the self-evaluation late next month and have the City Commission approve the final draft at the Nov. 15 meeting, he said.

One citizen who attended the meeting at City Hall said he had a problem with the self-evaluation. He said the city had overlooked input from him and others with disabilities while working on the self-evaluation.

"I'd like to have people such as myself included in your information," he said. "I think a lot of things could be avoided if there was expanded communication."

Vicki Tyler, whose husband filed the suit against the city, said she also was unhappy with the lack of citizen involvement in the self-evaluation.

In response, Mayor Helen Cooper said, "It's been a little difficult for us to communicate with you and your husband when we're in the middle of a lawsuit."

Cooper said the city has tried to get people involved by listening to their concerns.

Vicki Tyler and Cooper also disagreed on how fast the self-evaluation was moving.

"The time line is what's concerning me," Tyler said. "It seems like it's going so very, very slow."

"I think that's our concern, Vicki," Cooper said. "That's our responsibility to complete it, and that's for us to decide. It's in our best interest to complete it, not yours."

Tyler replied, "But if my husband can't get into a place then you have discriminated against him."

Commissioner Edith Stunkel said a meeting could be held to update people who are interested in the ADA compliance activities taking place in Manhattan.

Also at Tuesday's meeting, the City Commission approved, 5-0, a resolution authorizing the city to issue $6 million in Industrial Revenue Bonds to refinance outstanding bonds.

They also approved, 5-0, the request to allow the Manhattan Fire Department's Explorer Scout Post to use the drill pad on Denison Avenue for paid parking during K-State football games as a fundraiser.

NEWS BRIEFS

▶ UNIVERSITY LOSES AFTER FILING MOTIONS, WILL APPEAL TO HIGHER COURT

Riley County District Court denied K-State's motion for a new trial or an amendment to the judgment awarded to Shana Nycole Nero in the negligence suit she won against the University.

The University sought to appeal the jury's decision to award $209,100 in damages to Nero for disability and expenses she sustained as a result of her sexual assault in a residence hall in 1990.

University attorneys filed motions for a new trial or to have Nero's award reduced to $70,200, of which Nero would have received $52,650 because the jury only found the University 75 percent at fault.

Richard Seaton, University attorney, said it is possible that the next step will be to appeal to a higher court.

"That's the question for tomorrow," Seaton said.

"But we need to talk with the administrators involved about it," he said.

Nero's attorneys were not available for comment.

▶ K-STATE PROFESSORS WILL TALK ABOUT NATURE THROUGH THEIR POETRY

Bumblebees and berries.

Nature writing is, contrary to common perception, a great deal more than just this, Elizabeth Dodd, associate professor of English, said.

Dodd will join Christopher Cokinos, instructor of English, at 7:30 p.m. today in Ackert 221 as the Northern Flint Hills Audubon Society presents "Listening to words that listen to the world: A reading of nature writing."

Both Dodd and Cokinos said they will be reading from their own works of nature writing.

"I'm going to read just a little bit from my book, 'Like Memory, Caverns,' but most of the poems I'm going to be reading are from the book I'm currently working on, 'Reading American,'" Dodd said.

In "Reading American," Dodd said she has been thinking about the way a landscape speaks. She said she believes there is a message to be heard from the earth and from nature.

"You hear of how we 'read the land' and 'read the earth,' and that really isn't just a far-fetched metaphor," Dodd said. "There is a form of language there."

Many of Dodd's poems and essays focus on this relationship to the natural world and forming a connection with that world, she said.

"I was born in Boulder, Colo., and my family was always oriented to the outdoors," Dodd said. "What had been a way of life, a habit, began to take not just a recreational direction, but an artistic and aesthetic direction in my writing."

Cokinos is at work on a new collection of poems and said he plans to read one of his new essays on extinct North American birds.

"In looking at the literature of nature, we can go back to Burroughs and Thoreau," Cokinos said. "One of the things that Elizabeth and I are both doing as writers is part of a wider movement of writing today.

"Nature writing has an audience that stretches beyond just English departments," he said. "And we want to give people a sense of who some writers are that they can turn to."

Cokinos said he and Dodd will answer questions on how literature can deepen understanding of the human place in nonhuman nature.

"As a species, we as humans are a part of nature. However, we act like we're not. This has serious consequences," Cokinos said.

"Not just environmental degradation, but ethical and spiritual consequences. We are investigating what we can do about it."

▶ EUROPEAN GRAIN BUYERS GET EXPOSURE TO THE U.S. MARKET SYSTEM

The K-State International Grain Program had some international visitors Tuesday.

The Kansas Wheat Commission and U.S. Wheat Associates brought the members of a European Grain Buyers team to the United States to give them exposure to the U.S. marketing system for wheats and a better idea of what is available.

The team, comprised of milling-company representatives, grain procurers and trading firms from Norway, Finland, Slovenia, Albania and Malta visited K-State's International Grains Program to learn about the wheat-marketing system, how the wheat industry assures quality grain and to understand the buying opportunities offered by the U.S. wheat producers.

"They don't know how to buy from the U.S. and the different uses of different wheats," Doug Ohlemeier, marketing specialist for the Kansas Wheat Commission, said.

Many of the countries have imported small amounts from the United States in the past but for the most part have faced monopolies in their countries on purchasing wheats.

Goris van Lit, marketing specialist for U.S. Wheat Associates, Netherlands, said there are a lot of changes going on in Western Europe, and many countries are preparing to join the European Community. With this, they are privatizing their grain-buying process.

"Import duties are going down, so it is cheaper to buy from the U.S. There are higher-quality wheats not available in the European community," van Lit said.

The main goal of the trip was to educate the Europeans about the availability, marketing and transportation of wheat from Kansas, van Lit said.

"There is a lot of educating to be done there," van Lit said.

K-State was chosen as one of the sites to be visited because Kansas is a top wheat-growing state in the nation, Ohlemeier said.

Ohlemeier said the team will also be visiting Minnesota, Texas, North Dakota and South Dakota.

Study goes abroad; students connect

LISA ELLIOTT
SUMMER RUCKMAN
Collegian

K-State students missed an opportunity Tuesday to learn about studying abroad.

About 20 people attended the student seminar about studying abroad and international community-service programs available through K-State and off-campus organizations.

"I wonder why 20,000 K-State students aren't here," a guest speaker said about the lack of attendance.

The seminar, co-sponsored by International Programs and Community Service Program International Team Project, featured two guest speakers from Partnership for Service Learning.

Howard Berry, president of the New York City-based organization and Linda Chisholm, vice president said the purpose of Partnership for Service Learning is to provide students with an international cultural experience, educational application of course work and a meaningful service experience.

The evening seminar and a University seminar stressed the importance of international study as part of a student's complete education.

"You have to be a part of your own learning in programs like these," Berry said. "You bring into the classroom your experiences from the society.

"It's not observational but hands-on experience. Part of it is encountering the real world."

Universities tend to be more concerned with schedules, labels and rationalistic education than they are with the synthesis and application of that learning, Berry said.

The rationalistic approach to education involves an instructor speaking to a group of students who listen, but do not act on what they are learning, he said.

"Education has always been for connection — connection to the world," he said.

Berry referred to service learning as the ecology approach to learning.

The ecology approach to education allows students to connect classroom studies to experiences they have in communities around the world, he said.

"A number of us have seen in Service Learning a way to connect classroom learning to the community," Berry said.

The community provides the experience to the students, and the students give service to the community, he said.

"There needs to be a two-way interaction," Berry said.

Chisholm said she has found more prosperous and prestigious institutions to be more removed from the community in which it exists.

Land-grant universities are more service oriented because of the underlying history, she said.

Service experiences may be compared to the traditional hero's journey, she said. The students leave home, have experiences and face challenges without the support of family and friends and get the chance to prove themselves and return home.

"When we take a student and put them into an adult situation, they take on the responsibility of the situation," Chisholm said.

Sometimes, she said, students and universities are afraid of international programs because of cultural differences.

Cultural interpretation is needed to avoid problems, Chisholm said.

"What is useful in one culture may not be useful in another culture," she said.

Berry said the Partnership for Service Learning has skilled in-country mentors for all its teams who step in when needed.

"Sometimes too much is made of this cultural issue," Berry said. "Their society doesn't crumble because our student made a cultural mistake."

Barry Michie, director of the K-State Study Abroad program, said a practical reason for studying abroad is that it looks good on your résumé.

Sarah Cotté, sophomore in Spanish and pre-law, said she found the seminar informative in her search for the right study-abroad program.

"I want to go into international law," she said. "I figured I needed to go to another country to learn Spanish."

Amtrak crash investigators report tragedy could strike again

ASSOCIATED PRESS

MOBILE, Ala. — After Amtrak's worst rail disaster occurred almost a year ago, the Coast Guard found hundreds of rail bridges vulnerable to a marine crash like the one that sent the Sunset Limited careening into a swamp.

In its final report released Tuesday, the National Transportation Safety Board recommended a sweeping inspection of rail and highway bridges.

The report also said the lack of such a probe likely contributed to the Sept. 22, 1993, crash that killed 47 people.

A barge lost in fog struck the unlighted rail bridge spanning Big Bayou Canot about 3 a.m., knocking the bridge's rails out of alignment.

The Sunset Limited, traveling at 72 mph, arrived minutes later and derailed, plunging into the water about 10 miles north of Mobile.

A private wreath-laying ceremony for the 47 victims is planned Thursday to mark the accident's first anniversary.

Federal rail officials are still analyzing the inspections to decide exactly what safety precautions should be taken.

Bridges at the highest risk for a catastrophic accident should be first to be outfitted with warning signs, lighting, navigation markers and other safety equipment, the NTSB said.

The board's report also said the Department of Transportation should convene a task force to conduct an expanded study that would include highways that span waterways.

The report concluded the wreck was probably caused by several factors, including the towboat pilot's lack of radar navigation competency.

Shuttle conference people from hotels

We have guests.

You may have noticed if you drove to class today and found your normal metered spot in front of the K-State Union roped off.

The National Rural Families Conference is not a heathen, hateful bunch of free-loaders. Their arrangements, like all other conferences, were made by the University.

Students already get angry at each other when trying to park. Getting rid of 76 stalls will only increase tensions. Some students may even get mad at the people here for the conference.

People who drive here for conferences are not usually familiar with campus. They congest already-impassible campus roads.

Part of arranging for a conference is arranging for parking. The University should try something else.

Set up a shuttle between the conference members' hotels and campus. It could be a University shuttle, a hotel's shuttle service or public transit from the city. It wouldn't matter which. Have the conference members park in Bramlage Coliseum and shuttle them from there.

If this is not possible, Parking Services should assign one lot on campus to metered parking for days when the Union will have conferences. Many students rely on those spots to park.

Do anything, but take stalls from an already-strangled campus.

MARLETT'S WORLD

AIDS can get anyone

ERIN MANSUR-SMITH

All I had to do was stand there. I thought it would be the easiest volunteer job I'd ever done. I just had to stand, watching over a few sections of cloth roughly the size of the average human body, occasionally passing out tissues to people who may need them and helping visitors find a specific panel.

None of this Names Quilt stuff, I told myself, was going to affect me. When I looked at the panels that spread along the walls and floor, I didn't see people who had died of AIDS. I saw names without faces and dates without any significance to me.

One of the squares had a college sweatshirt on it with doctorate embroidered underneath. Others weren't so fancy. Just a first name spray painted sloppily on a sheet.

I had been there for two hours when an older woman approached me and requested I help her get on her knees. I asked if she wanted me to get her a tissue from one of the boxes scattered around the room.

No, she said. She wanted to kneel so she could reach and touch her grandson's name.

She told me he was a college student. He liked to play ball and grew up not far from here. He wanted to be a teacher, she said. He only made it to his sophomore year.

That broke me. Looking around the room, I suddenly saw bodies everywhere. There were women and children, sons and brothers. They were human beings who had once breathed, walked, laughed and cried and who didn't anymore.

Some may have died quickly, with dignity and surrounded by family. Others may have lingered or died alone, all of them remembered with a 3-by-6 piece of cloth.

We, as a generation, have been preached at, yelled at and pleaded to about the dangers of AIDS. We have had more information shoved at us from the media, our parents, the educational system and even some churches than any other generation before us. Yet, through the din of it all, it appears as if we have heard very little. According to the National AIDS Hotline, HIV infections among the 18- to 24-year-old age group are on the rise, with its main source of transmission being from unprotected heterosexual sex. Roughly one in every 250 college students has been infected with HIV, and 80 percent of those students don't even know they carry it. Women in rural areas are a group where infection is rapidly growing.

We aren't safe, any of us. Not in Kansas, where from June 1981 until December 1993, 1,090 cases of AIDS were reported. Certainly not at K-State. You only have to figure the averages for yourself to get scared.

It happens here. It's happening now. It could happen to you. None of us is an idiot. We're adults, and we shouldn't still need commercials about dancing latex condoms and "Just Say No" posters to remind us what needs to be done.

David Eugene Frese, a former Collegian columnist, once said, "It's hard to think straight when you're naked," and that's true. But if we don't start taking responsibility for our own safety, we'll only be adding more and more names to a list that's already more than three football fields in length.

Perhaps the next name added will be yours, written with your grandmother's hands.

Don't let the Ollie Norths, Marion Barrys of the world formulate public policy

Read this quickly, then finish your homework. That way, you will have time to see the candidate debate in the K-State Union.

No, it's not time for SGA elections again. But local and state elections are right around the corner. And if you don't go watch the debate in the Union, you might just wish you were in Virginia.

DAN LEWERENZ

Virginia has recently joined the nation-wide trend of voting for really lame candidates. The Republican nomination of Oliver North for the senate is a good case in point.

I know what you're thinking. Isn't this the same Oliver North who patriotically broke the law in the Iran-Contra scandal?

Why yes, he is. North was convicted and sentenced for lying to Congress a few years back, but he was later pardoned. It seems that the Virginia Republicans are operating on the premise that the only people who should be able to lie to Congress are other congressional representatives. Seems fair.

North faces a semi-popular incumbent and an independent challenger from within GOP ranks, but they are of little consequence. Win or lose, Ollie has stolen the show.

Not to be outdone by their neighbors to the south, the Democrats in the District of Columbia have nominated Marion Barry for mayor.

I know what you're thinking. Isn't Barry the same guy we saw busted on national television several million times while smoking crack?

Why yes, he is. Barry served time for possession of crack cocaine. But the sitting mayor is so unpopular that a recent poll found the majority of D.C. residents wouldn't vote for her for any office under any circumstances.

The Republican nominee is inconsequential. Democrats outnumber Republicans 11 to 1 in the District. Barring a huge natural disaster, Democrats will always hold the mayor's office. Barry has stolen the show and, most likely, the election.

You don't want Manhattan to end up like Virginia or D.C. So you want to find out as much as you can about the people running for office.

That's where the Union comes in.

This afternoon, from 1 to 2:30 p.m., the Union Program Council's Issues and Ideas Committee will host a debate between two local candidates. Incumbent Democrat Sheila Hochhauser and Republican challenger Ann Stevens will slug it out for the 66th District seat in the state legislature.

And you can see it live.

I am happy to report that neither candidate is as exciting as Oliver North and Marion Barry. But, in the great scheme of things, this election is far more important. By attending the debate, you will get a chance to meet and interact with these two candidates, one of whom will probably represent you in Topeka for the next couple of years.

I know what you're thinking. Isn't that the same Topeka that raised our tuition last spring and didn't even give us any faculty salary increases or scholarships?

Why yes, it is. Today's forum will give you an excellent opportunity to see if further tuition hikes are in the forecast. Ask them about salaries and library books. Ask if the state is paying its fair share for higher education expenses, now that they are demanding that of the students. Ask if either of them killed Nicole Simpson.

There are a lot of interesting things you can find out about candidates if you only ask them. And you can use that knowledge as the basis for a highly educated vote come this November.

So go to the Union. Get some lemonade and a basket of Tito's famous mini-burgers. Sit down. Relax. Inquire.

If you don't, and Marion Barry and Oliver North raise your tuition and recall all the books in your new library while smoking crack in Nicaragua, don't come crying to me.

Dan Lewerenz is a senior in philosophy.

Players need to watch behavior

Dear Editor,

I am a strong supporter of the K-State athletic program. I have been for many years. But the recent run-ins with the law over DUIs are beginning to cause some concern in my mind. Just when the program is achieving great things, things it has never achieved before, it has to work through a public-relations nightmare.

I stand behind the actions taken by the coaching staff, but they should not have to be dealing with the problems in the first place.

Players — you are athletes, but you are also representatives of the entire University. Act like it. Don't put yourselves in a position that causes the team, the athletic program and the University as a whole to receive a black eye in the news media.

Things like this should not happen here. Let Texas A&M, Oklahoma and Florida State make news headlines for abrasions with the law.

You are at K-State. Keep your act clean.

Charles Durbin
junior in agricultural business

▶ FOOTBALL

K-State needs success off field, too

Dear Editor,

I am concerned about the recent DUI arrests involving K-State football team members. The first arrest indicates a judgment error by the individual involved. The second arrest indicates a failure on the part of K-State team members to learn from the mistakes of others. The third arrest, and any subsequent similar incidents, indicates a general failure on the part of the program to deal with these problems.

I hope the K-State football program will develop a more responsible attitude toward drinking and driving. Many people are pleased with the recent success of the K-State football program. It is unfortunate that society measures collegiate football success in terms of the quantity of wins and not by the quality and character of the program and its participants.

▶ RESIDENCE HALLS

Residents will vote on security options

Dear Editor,

The debate of safety and security in the residence halls is a hot topic right now. As a resident staff assistant, I am in a position that in some ways inhibits me from revealing my true opinion of the argument. But, when I read the Collegian, I felt the need to at least point out one important thing that is sometimes overlooked in the heat of debate.

That one thing is the rights of the residents. On Sept. 22 and 23, Ford Hall residents will be voting on whether to lock the front doors 24 hours a day. All the floors had meetings to inform the residents of the pros and cons of locking the doors, and the women of Ford will be able to make an informed decision of their own. No one is going to be able to tell them what is best for them.

Staff in a residence hall go through a lot of training. One of the things that is stressed day in and day out is that we are here for the residents — kind of "the customer is always right" attitude. We are also asked to remember that our residents have left home and are adults now; thus, we need to refer to them as men and women. I fully support the idea that they are adults and capable of making their own decisions. If we are going to refer to them as men and women, let's treat them as if they truly are. All I ask for is consistency. I am proud that I can say I am a staff assistant in a residence hall that is truly a hall for residents.

Brenna Aberle
senior in interior design

▶ RESIDENCE HALLS

Safety is responsibility of an individual

Dear Editor,

As a woman and resident of the residence halls, I have a vested interest in keeping the campus and halls safe. And I understand that, as in loco parentis, the Department of Housing and Dining Services is required (either legally or morally) to make the halls safe for the residents.

However, I feel as safety measures increase, the residents are told indirectly that it is housing's job to protect us. But this is wrong. It is my job to protect me and mine only.

And I wonder why housing feels it should shelter me, by taking responsibility for my protection out of my hands. If the time comes, and I am being attacked, Validine won't help me. Only my clear thinking and knowledge of defense measures can protect me.

I would like to see self-defense courses on every floor in every hall. I would like to see pamphlets with safety measures (locking one's door, for example) and simple self-defense techniques taped to every door. And I would like to see housing officials change their position from saying it's their job to keep "bad" people out, to saying it's our job as residents to look for suspicious people and report them to staff, it's our job to not let in people we don't know.

Making the residents a more active part of the halls' safety will do more than Validine and other paltry measures will ever do.

Equine endurance

World event at K-State will give Kansas exposure

JANET McPHERSON
Collegian

The world's finest athletes are coming to Kansas in 1996.

The Manhattan/Fort Riley area will be host to the 1996 Federation Equestrianne Internationale World Championship Endurance event, Dr. Jerry Gillespie, head of the Department of Clinical Sciences, said.

In an FEI endurance run, horse and rider travel 100 miles on a predetermined FEI-approved course in a maximum of 24 hours, Christy Linders, organizing committee chairwoman, said.

For equine enthusiasts, planning for the event is a lot more than mere horseplay.

Linders said that $1 to $1.5 million must be raised for the event.

Funds are being solicited nationally and from local Kansas businesses, she said.

"We'd be proud if the majority of the funding came from Kansas," Linders said.

Gillespie said the organizers are planning to bring in a professional fund-raising group.

"All of us have had some experience in raising small amounts of funds, but this will take a major effort," he said.

Gillespie said a "Run for the Championship" fundraiser, a multi-distance race for people of different athletic abilities, was being planned.

Kitty Pursely, owner of Equine Clothiers in Manhattan, said the economic effect of the FEI endurance event will have a domino effect in the area.

Pursely, who is in charge of the trade fair for the event, said people coming to Kansas from Europe will not only need hotel rooms, but will also buy tack, hay, grain and memorabilia to take home.

Pursely said competitors will be here at least four days, but some will come early to acclimate their horses. Competitors won't travel long distances without taking advantage of the tourism opportunities, she said.

Gillespie said he anticipates 25 countries will have teams competing in Kansas.

"We think it will be a very festive event and draw people from around the world," Gillespie said.

"There's an awful lot of excitement in Europe and elsewhere about coming to this part of the United States because they love our western heritage, so I think it's going to be a nice cultural exchange as well," he said.

Gillespie said he thinks the endurance event will bring a lot of notoriety and visibility to this area, which will be beneficial for a long time.

National television will be brought into the area, he said, giving Kansas a lot of exposure.

Gillespie is the President of the American Competitive Horse Consortium Limited, which is the fundraising and overseeing arm of the organizing committee.

"The consortium, we hope, will survive beyond this first event and help produce others down the road," Gillespie said.

He said that now the entire focus of the consortium is on 1996.

"One of the things we really want to do is involve all Kansans," Gillespie said.

He said the planners especially want to involve youth because it will be fun for youth to see an international competition.

"Maybe they'll get stars in their eyes about competing," Gillespie said.

The endurance-run course must be given a trial run in 1995 before the actual world competition, Gillespie said.

Riders from all across the United States and Canada wanting to be on a team in 1996 will participate to prove themselves to the selection committee.

Linders said there are no specific requirements for the course, but it will be a challenge for the competitors, with hills, dales and creek beds. Swimming is not acceptable. She said they are also staying away from pavement.

"We want it to be pleasurable and not worrisome for the riders and their horses," Linders said.

The horses are examined by FEI-certified veterinarians before they are allowed to race and again at seven checkpoints during the run, Linders said.

"If they fail any part of the exam, they are pulled from the race," she said.

Pursely said horse and rider must be in tip-top shape.

"It's a terribly athletic event," Gillespie said.

"You can't find better athletes."

Students agree with Clinton Haitian plan

Lehman, senior in elementary education, said.

He said he didn't think much of Clinton as a president, but occupying Haiti will be a good thing for the United States and common people in Haiti.

Quigley said it's good for Haitians to have some of their human suffering relieved. The United States will be helped because troops will be stationed there, he said.

"We don't have the room for training or the economy to support as big a standing army as we have in the States," he said.

He said places like Germany and Okinawa, Japan were part of what kept the army well trained.

Jason Rogers, freshman in mechanical engineering, said maybe Clinton was too quick to use force, but now things are more orderly.

Gopher back worries coach

Minnesota offense bringing balanced attack to contest

JULIE KUHLMAN
Collegian

Two men from the Minnesota Golden Gophers roster have football coach Bill Snyder worried.

Quarterback Tim Schade and running back Chris Darkens have the potential to keep the Cats' hands full.

"Schade works hard to enhance plays," Snyder said in Vanier Football Complex during his weekly press conference.

"He's operating with a lot of confidence right now, and he has a very strong arm."

Schade gathered 1,648 yards and eight touchdowns during the 1993 season as he completed 135 of 286 pass attempts.

He also holds the school record for single-game yards with 478 yards against Penn State in 1993.

Running back Darkens has Snyder comparing his speed to J.J. Smith.

"He's got a burst, awfully good speed," Snyder said.

Darkens was ranked 10th in the Big Ten Conference in all-purpose yardage with 104.1 yards per game.

He was a nominee for the Doak Walker Award, which goes annually to the nation's top running back.

Snyder said he believes the Golden Gophers will have a balanced offense but are now beginning to run better.

"The balance they have on offense really makes them difficult to defend," he said. "But, you have to defend the run first. Darkens is a tremendous back."

So will a strong win against a team like Minnesota prepare the Cats for the Big Eight conference and be a turning point in their season?

"Perhaps so," Snyder said. "That would be the best of all worlds."

A year ago, the Cats had key players make key contributions in the Minnesota game ,which brought out some team leader, an element that was lacking in the first two games.

"The circumstances are all similar to a year ago today," Snyder said. "We learned as much about the way we can play against Minnesota as we did at any other football game since I've been here."

Quarterback Chad May said play will have to improve to beat Minnesota.

"We know we didn't play well last week, and we're working hard to correct the mistakes we made," May said.

A problem, May said, is the Cats tendency to play up or down to the other team's capabilities.

"I think we do that a little bit," May said. "One of these times, it's going to come up and bite us."

Snyder said he isn't taking anything for granted.

"We can't play like we did against Rice with teams like Minnesota and Kansas," he said.

"All of a sudden, just because we've won a bowl game, we can't go out on the field and expect to win."

Clawing, scratching and fighting for every play is what Snyder said his team has to do to win every week.

He said some special people have made some outstanding plays, such as Tyson Schwieger, Percell Gaskins and May, but that isn't enough.

"We need to make more of them and be more consistent," he said.

Snyder's record now stands at 29-28-1 in his sixth year at K-State.

"It doesn't make a hoot to me, I've never thought about it," he said.

Snyder said he hasn't done anything different than when he first got here and isn't planning on leaving now that his record looks good on a re´sume´.

Kelly's playing status for game still undecided

WESS HUDELSON
Collegian

Dederick Kelly is scheduled to appear for arraignment in Manhattan Municipal Court at 8:15 a.m. Thursday.

Kelly was arrested for driving under the influence at 2:28 a.m. Sept. 18 at the corner of Oak Street and Poyntz Avenue.

Kelly

Kelly's status as far as suiting up for Saturday's game against Minnesota is still undecided, Coach Bill Snyder said.

"There is reason to believe that he may not be guilty of anything," Snyder said.

Kelly is the third K-State player to be arrested for DUI since June.

Chad May was arrested in June but had the case dismissed. However, an appeal is pending.

Steve Hanks, who was arrested Sept. 8, has a diversion hearing set for 2 p.m. Oct. 13.

Bob Pottroff represented Hanks at the arraignment and entered a plea of not guilty, but he asked to keep the option of diversion open to Hanks.

"This is the third incident, so it doesn't seem to be a passing fancy," Snyder said. "I am embarrassed, the team is embarrassed, and we accept responsibility for it."

Snyder said each of the three cases has different circumstances, and each is being dealt with differently.

"Each of the players were dealt with appropriately, and each received discipline," Snyder said.

Hanks will return to the Wildcats' lineup Saturday against Minnesota as a backup to Chuck Marlowe at free safety.

'93 Minnesota game propelled Wildcats

There are moments in people's lives that make them better. For Coach Bill Snyder and the K-State football program, one of their moments happened one year ago.

The 1993 K-State football team's turning point was the 30-25 come-from-behind victory in the Metrodome in Minneapolis, Minn., and I was there.

The win for the Cats ended an 18-game non-conference road losing streak. Mitch Holthus, the voice of the Wildcats, said to his K-State listeners after the game, the win buried the final ghost of the Cats' losing past.

The win was so special to the program because K-State was able to regain the lead just when the Golden Gophers were sticking the knife into the Cats.

K-State scored 17 points in the first 17 minutes, but Minnesota climbed back with 13 unanswered points in the second quarter for a 17-13 halftime score.

Chad May's 7-yard run early in the fourth quarter gave the Cats a 24-13 lead, but a 9-yard touchdown pass from Gopher quarterback Tim Schade and a Minnesota fumble recovery in the K-State end zone helped the Gophers to a 25-24 lead with 5:33 left in the game.

I thought K-State was going to lose at this point. Then came Andre Coleman. Coleman caught the kickoff at K-State's 4-yard line, went down the right sideline and cut back across the middle to avoid two tacklers before going out of bounds on the left sidelines at the Gophers' 24-yard line.

Five plays later, J.J. Smith got the go-ahead touchdown with 3:11 left in the game. K-State failed to get the two-point conversion, which would have made the score 32-25. Minnesota needed just a touchdown, and not a touchdown and a two-pointer, to win.

The chances of winning improved for the Cats, but as the Gophers moved down the field, those chances were diminishing.

Minnesota moved to K-State's 4-yard line with one minute left. After two running plays and a pass into the end zone, the Gophers called time-out for their last play.

Schade rolled out of the pocket to his left, but overthrew his intended receiver in the end zone. At once, the K-State team, the 1,000-plus Cat fans in the Metrodome and back in Kansas , celebrated.

BRIAN ANDERSON

The victory helped K-State win against Kansas, Missouri and Oklahoma State and tie Colorado later in the season.

Snyder said his team benefited from the win.

"That will always remain with me as a special ballgame," Snyder said. "Everything that can happen happened in that ballgame. We got out in front quickly, then we fell behind, and then we came back.

"We learned so much about our team."

If the Cats are to beat Minnesota this year, they should remember how it felt to win last season.

If they do that and fix the mistakes from the Rice game, the Cats will again be 3-0.

▶ RUGBY

Team ready to compete in fall campaign

BILL MCNALLY
Collegian

It looks like football, but it is not, and it is played a little like soccer, but it is not.

So what are those guys doing on the south side of the old Memorial Stadium throwing an oblong white ball around?

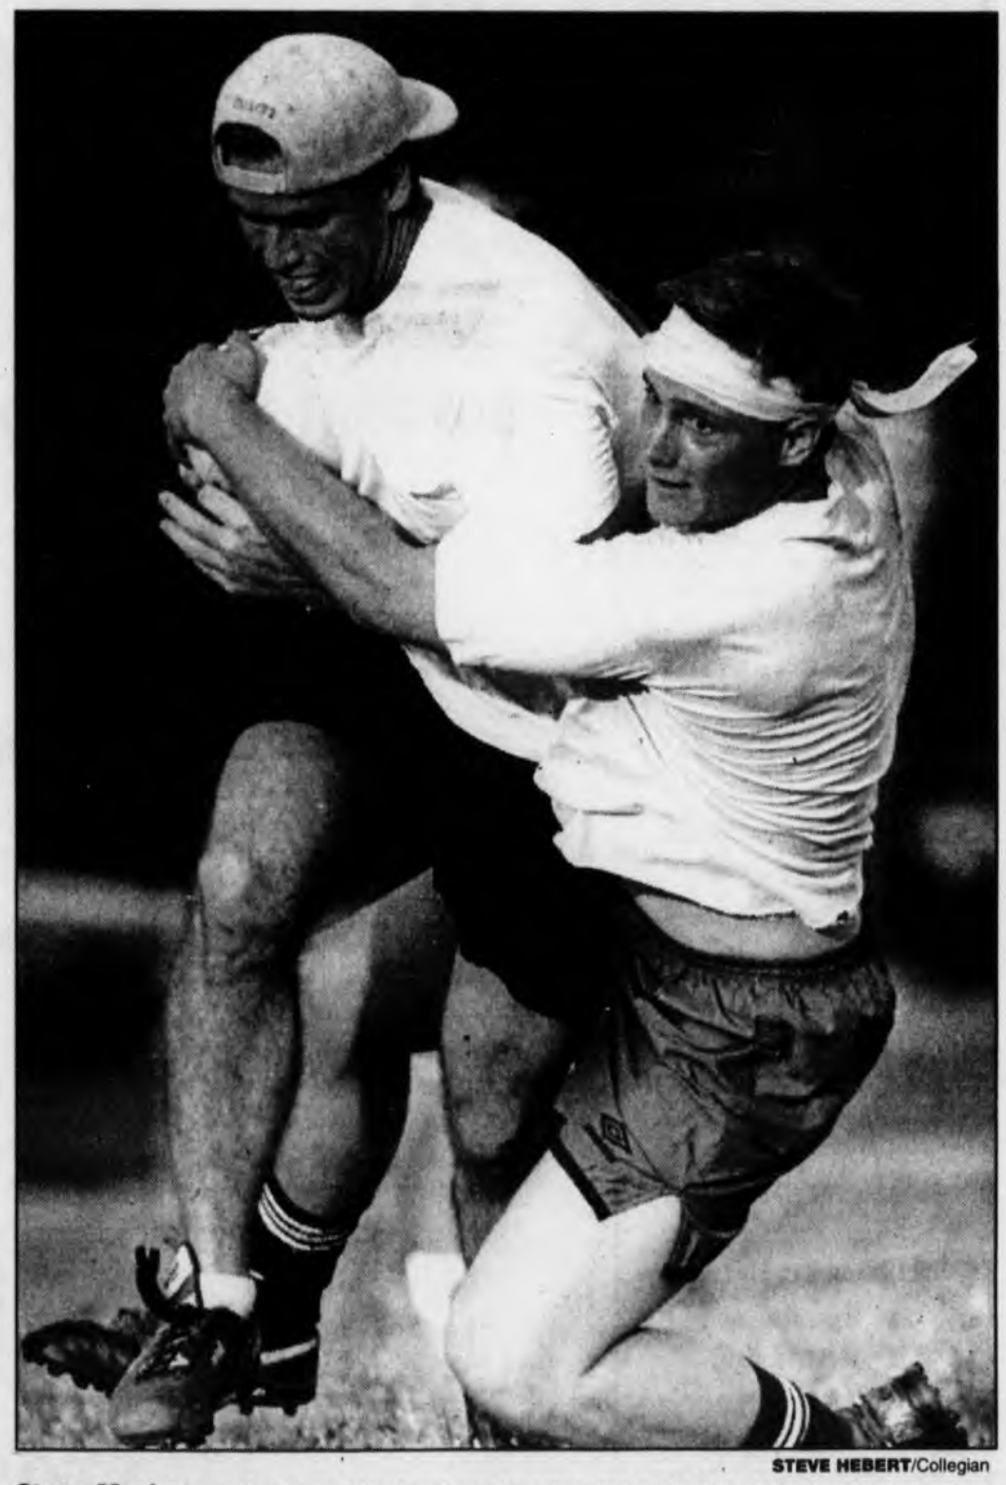
It is called rugby. Rugby is a sport that is very competitive, tiring and will be played in any climate in long-sleeve rugby shirts and shorts.

The sport is hard to understand, but with a little patience and a little time, students can start to understand the concept of the game.

Mark Fleury, senior in chemical engineering, said he has been playing for three years and is still learning the rules of the game.

"People don't start coming out and playing until their sophomore or junior year of college," Fleury said. "It is hard to build a good foundation for a team when your players are only there for a year or so.

"When building a successful program in any sport, it is good to have a group of young people to build the base," he said.



Rugby is open to the general public, and anybody in Manhattan or Fort Riley can play. Regardless how many people are practicing, students shouldn't shy away thinking they won't get to play, Fleury said.

The only requirement of the players is to pay their dues, have medical insurance and attend practices.

The rugby team is supported by the Sports Club Governing Council, Budweiser and Auntie Mae's Parlor.

The team will have various fundraisers during the school year. One of their fundraisers is an alumni game every Labor Day weekend. They charge the alumni to play, have a cook-out and sell T-shirts to raise money.

After the alumni game, the team's next match is Sept. 24 at Whitemen Air Force Base at Warrensburg, Mo., for a club-side match. The rugby season will last until Nov. 12 and then will start back up again in February.

Delta Upsilon hammers Alpha Tau Omega

DEBBIE PILANT
Collegian

No. 6 rated Delta Upsilon routed Alpha Tau Omega 32-0 in intramural flag football action Tuesday.

Jason Gugelman, DU team captain, said he was pleased with the team's performance.

"We played much better than last week," he said.

He said quarterback Rick Blasi was the key to DU's success so far.

"He is the key to the offense," Gugelman said. "He's quick, and that makes him hard to tackle."

Blasi said he credited the team's improvement in recent games to strong defense.

"The offense didn't make any major mistakes," he said. "Our defense is always good, but our offense is catching up."

Gugelman said the DU team wasn't used to these types of blowouts.

"We're used to being competitive but not dominating," he said.

The ATOs had difficulty containing the DU offense. They started dominating from the first drive, scoring on a shovel pass from quarterback Blasi to center John Will.

The DU defense answered by sacking ATO quarterback Jason Prine on the first play from scrimmage and forcing the ATOs to punt after three downs.

The offense kept rolling on its next possession with another pass from Blasi. This time, he connected with split end Kevin Barge.

Again, the DU defense held strong, sacking Prine once more and batted down the next pass. The ATOs went for it on the fourth down, but the DUs halted the drive.

The DUs scored again on their next offensive drive. Blasi tried to keep it himself but ran into some trouble.

He found slot back Matt Ahlquist in the backfield and shoveled it to him. Ahlquist ran it in for another DU touchdown.

The second half began with another long drive by the DU offense. Blasi's first pass fell incomplete as the ATO defense put on the pressure. Blasi went to the air twice more to set up Ahlquist, who made a run for the first down that put the DUs in position to score again with another Blasi-to-Barge toss.

NUTRITION & HEALTH

Dietary counseling can help students lose, gain weight

Eating is a pain for many K-State students, and any mention of the subject may bring groans and whining.

But unfortunately, this process is necessary in order to sustain life. Many students are faced with the decision between eating either by their pocketbooks or by the nutrition labels.

Students with this type of decision will find there are many places to turn to for advice. One is Lafene Health Center.

Lafene has been the destination of choice for thousands of emotionally and physically drained K-State students ever since its inception in 1961.

While the decor has changed a little during the last 33 years, its mission of helping students hasn't. Lafene has expanded its counseling services by offering dietary counseling.

"Nutrition is so important, so basic, and people up until a few years ago were not aware of how important it is to them," said Martha Ann Olson, Lafene registered dietitian.

The department offers weight-control classes in the fall and spring, she said.

This semester, the classes are limited to people who are at least 10 pounds over their ideal weight and need to lose at least 10 pounds, Olson said.

The program is not like Weight Watchers, and it is free, she said.

"It's just common sense, good nutritional food choices, plus exercise," she said.

While some seek advice on how to lose weight, others are asking how to gain weight.

"I want to increase my caloric intake," said Jace Kowalzyk, K-State crew member. Kowalzyk, sophomore in advertising, said he is trying to get in shape for rowing.

What would Olson say to the college student whose diet consists of Ramen noodles and Hamburger Helper?

"I'd find out what other foods you eat and help you learn the food pyramid," she said.

"I'd advise you to go to the bookstore and look for a 'cookbook for one.'"

Olson sees an average of 15-20 people per day by appointment. Many of her patients are people who need more than just help choosing foods, Olson said.

Many people require dietary counseling because of medical considerations, she said. These include people who suffer from eating disorders, diabetes and hypertension, she said.

Other students just want some advice.

"Many times, a student comes in and says 'I just don't feel I'm eating right,'" Olson said.

"So we look at the person's diet, make needed changes, and the person begins to feel better."

For some students, the choices are made for them. Justin Boisseau, junior in finance and American ethnic studies, is a fraternity member.

His new housemother is working to create meals with more nutritional value. "She's cooking low-fat foods — less fried stuff," he said.

Barbara Depew, production manager of Union Food Service, said planning meals is the key.

"It takes some effort. You need to do some shopping and read some magazines," she said.

Agricultural Extension Services in Umberger Hall offers a lot of good literature on nutrition as well as food storage, she said.

"If you have time to do your own cooking, you can eliminate excess fat and sodium," Depew said.

It's a question of whether you are willing to spend time to shop wisely or simply for convenience, she said.

Olson said while she does not make a menu or give recipes to patients, she will try to help them as best she can.

"I'd be glad to talk to them," she said.

Saturated fat increases cancer risk

Eating 10 grams of saturated fat a day may raise a woman's risk of ovarian cancer by 20 percent.

But the study being published Wednesday adds some good news — that just two small servings of vegetables a day could more than offset that risk.

The main risk factor is exposure to the reproductive hormone estrogen. Women who have multiple pregnancies or use oral contraceptives, which both inhibit estrogen, are at lower risk.

But scientists have long suspected that the same fat that causes heart disease plays a role too, because women who eat less meat aren't stricken as often.

Now, the first large study of diet and ovarian cancer, published in the Journal of the National Cancer Institute, suggests the link is real.

IT'S A FACT:

Ovarian cancer strikes some 20,000 U.S. women a year and kills about 12,500 of them, mostly because there is no good way to detect it early.

Objective ear found at Family Center

SUMMER RUCKMAN
Collegian

Whether you're having problems dealing with a roommate or a spouse, K-State's Family Center can help with relationships.

Nancy O'Conner, clinical director of the Family Center, said the center provides valuable services of which many students aren't aware.

"Dealing with the stresses and strains of college living are one of the services we provide," she said.

The Family Center counsels students, in addition to Manhattan and surrounding-area residents, about relationships.

The director of Family and Marriage Therapy, Steve Bollman, said people come to the Family Center experiencing stress usually caused by a relationship.

"We're more of a family-focus program but deal with all relationships," Bollman said.

O'Conner said the center specializes in people from a relationship standpoint or individuals interested in working on personal difficulties.

Students needing an objective ear or someone to listen can talk to a therapist at the Family Center.

"Talking to someone not involved can help people sort through their feelings," O'Conner said.

Students interested in talking to someone but unsure about going to therapy can call the center to learn about the service, she said.

"It's not uncommon for people to call and say they have never participated in therapy before," she said. "A therapist can explain the type of work we do."

The Family Center does charge for sessions but uses a sliding-fee scale that takes into account a student's financial situation.

"People with limited income still get good, quality service that fits into their budgets," O'Conner said.

In addition to helping students adjust to new relationships at college, the Family Center provides counseling in many other areas, such as divorce, step-families, sexual assault and women's issues.

For example, premarital and marital therapy help couples discuss a wide range of issues that affect a relationship, O'Conner said.

She said she recommends a five-week program to couples planning to wed.

"It certainly is helpful to start them in a process of talking about issues and feelings," she said.

The Family Center sponsors speakers, such as a speaker on parenting for the family-housing residents at Jardine Terrace Apartments, to discuss topics with the community.

"We're open to ideas for speakers and programs," O'Conner said. "Contact us, and we can put together a program geared toward the interested population."

The Family Center also provides a supervised training experience for graduate students.

"It's a site for master's and doctorate interns to receive applied training in marriage and family training or family-life education," O'Conner said.

Eldon Solomon, graduate student in family therapy, said the clinic gives him hands-on experience, an important aspect of his education.

"Through supervision, a graduate student understands how the techniques and theories from the classroom apply. And how they apply to one's own style as a therapist," he said.

Students need health care to be accessible

Committee to draft position paper

TRINA HOLMES
Collegian

Preserving the role of campus health centers was one topic the Student Health Advisory Committee discussed at its meeting Tuesday morning.

The committee, composed of K-State students and faculty members, first reviewed a position paper regarding health-care reform, which was drafted by a student intern at the University of Kansas

Students need health care to be accessible, convenient and inexpensive, according to the paper.

College students also need a system that provides them with a full range of services, and expanded coverage is needed by students who have families, the report stated.

John Bell, graduate student in education and SHAC chairman, said although the wording in a couple of places in the document was questionable, it conveyed student desire to keep college health centers intact.

"The argument is that we need to keep campus health centers running because they deal with student issues," Bell said.

Tricia McKale, junior in elementary education and SHAC member, said she felt preventative health education was an important aspect of health care that could only be found at the campus centers.

"I know my home community doctors don't address preventative health care," McKale said. "This (K-State) is the only place I know that does."

The final version of the paper should be drafted sometime in October and be submitted to area legislators, Bell said.

"When the submission goes in, we want some sort of student voice appended to it," Bell said. "We want to make sure that the student voice is heard amongst the general submission."

The committee also discussed the results of a community-wide attitude survey about Lafene Health Center that was conducted as a spring 1994 marketing research project.

According to the survey, the most interest was generated by the prospect of adding a dental clinic, an optometry clinic and a men's clinic to Lafene, as well as extending the hours of operation of the University mental health counseling service past 5 p.m.

Bell said although the addition of a dental and optometry clinic would be too expensive, the idea of a clinic to address mens's health care needs was appealing to him.

"I like the idea because we already have a women's clinic," Bell said.

"It seems like things like testicular cancer have been on the news lately, and it can be caught early," he said.

"I think this is something to follow up if we find an open slot of time or money."

Other concerns came from committee members who, after reading the survey results, said the services offered at the health center were not well publicized for students.

Door-knob hangers, signs on residence hall bulletin boards and fliers were some suggestions members had to solve this problem.

Sara Blecke, senior in graphic design and SHAC member, agreed that most of the freshmen she had talked to were not properly educated about what services Lafene offers.

"They don't realize that they can come to Lafene for something as simple as a common cold, and it would be essentially free," Blecke said.

"They may just have to pay $3 for some kind of drug."

"I know my home community doctors don't address preventive health care. This (K-State) is the only place I know that does."

In this threatening world, everyone needs a PAAL.

PAAL II™

Anyone can be a victim of violent crime, anytime, anywhere. Protect yourself with the PAAL II personal attack alarm. When its pin is pulled, the PAAL II emits an ear-piercing alarm and a bright flashing light, startling an attacker and drawing the attention of anyone within a wide area. Unlike other protective devices, the PAAL II can't be used against you. The light on the PAAL II can also be used as a flashlight. Clip a lightweight PAAL II on your clothing wherever you go. It's your best defense against attack or harassment. The technology is Quorum. The opportunity is yours.

Collegian workers are completely loony

Write to Cassandra, 116 Kedzie Hall, Manhattan, KS 66506

Dear Cassandra,

I was very disturbed when I opened Tuesday's Collegian and saw two transvestites on page five.

Was it just there for shock value, or are the people who design the paper a little funny?

Also, if you could, please find out where the "guy" on the right got the dress made out of thongs, as I have never been able to reach my full fashion potential wearing a thong.

Signed,
Just Wondering ...

Dear Just Wondering ... ,

Your suspicions are completely true, as everyone who works for the Collegian is a complete loony.

As for funny, that is another story, as they are really just kind of tragic.

To my knowledge, you could just go to a discount store and buy several pairs of thongs to make a dress like the one in the picture.

▶ REVIEW

'Apocalypse' cast filled with rage

RUSSELL FORTMEYER
Collegian

Francis Ford Coppola's "Apocalypse Now" is perhaps the last great epic movie to have as many intriguing occurrences behind the camera as in front of the camera.

"Apocalypse Now," filmed from 1976 to 1979 in the Phillipines and arriving in theaters in 1979, became a harrowing journey for the cast and crew. Martin Sheen suffered a heart attack during the filming that almost ended the project.

Sheen's drunken escapade in the first scene is very real. That is no pre-thought-out fit Sheen exercises. It's pure drunken improvisation. Enjoy it.

Dennis Hopper was too high most of the time to seriously work on the film. Marlon Brando, in arguably his last great role on the screen, stipulated in his contract that he had to be filmed in shadows.

Even Coppola suffered from rage and tantrums that hindered the film.

How does a director approach the controversial subject of Vietnam?

Screenwriter John Milius, borrowing a plot line from Joseph Conrad's novella "Heart of Darkness," crafts an insanely vivid story of Vietnam. It follows an army captain (Sheen) who is assigned to travel up a river into Cambodia to assassinate Colonel Kurtz (Brando), a Special Forces officer gone mad.

Along the way, Vietnam opens its doors and reveals itself — the atrocities of American soldiers killing innocent people, the countless bodies and skeletons left by Kurtz, and the madness afflicting everyone. It is a harrowing experience to watch this movie.

What's hard to believe, looking back at this nearly two-decade old movie, is its fresh, modern appearance. This movie is seeminglessly dateless. Coppola is a master, and a master works well in any situation.

Coppola's homage to Vietnam is his masterpiece. Its importance and substance outweighs his Godfather series and his stylish, overwrought Dracula movie.

Three years ago, Eleanor Coppola (Francis' wife), granted permission for two "Apocalypse"-buff/film-makers, Fax Bahr and George Hickenlooper, to make a behind-the-scenes documentary on the making of "Apocalypse Now." They used the footage shot by Eleanor during the entire four years the movie took to be completed.

"Hearts of Darkness," the name of the documentary, is no less enrapturing than the movie itself.

KANSAS ELECTION

Slattery, Graves argue qualifications

LEIGH BELLINGER
Collegian

Forget crime, health care and taxes.

The issue that looks to dominate this year's gubernatorial campaign is people's perception of who is better qualified to replace Gov. Joan Finney.

"I think there will be one issue that will be a major issue and that is the question of which candidate is best prepared to be the next governor," Rep. Jim Slattery, D-Kan., and the Democratic candidate for governor, said.

Voters will be looking to see who they can trust to do a better job of managing affairs of state government for the next four years, Republican candidate and Secretary of State Bill Graves said.

While both candidates agree on the big issue of the campaign, they obviously disagree on who is better qualified for the job.

Slattery, who is serving his sixth term in Congress, said he believes his experience will make all the difference come November.

"I'm the candidate who has agriculture experience, business experience, military experience, policy-making experience and law-making experience," he said.

Born in Atchison County, Slattery grew up on the family farm. After high school, he received a degree in political science from Washburn and graduated from the Washburn School of Law.

Graves

He was elected to the Kansas House of Representatives in 1973 and went on to serve three terms. In 1979, he left the Kansas Legislature to become the president of a real estate and development company. He was elected to Congress in 1982.

While in Congress, he fought to kill the funding for the Superconducting Super Collider in Texas and stop the production of the B-2 bomber.

The road leading up to this year's campaign has been drastically different for Graves.

He grew up in Salina and worked for the family business. While working for Graves Truck Line, he did a little bit of everything, working on the loading docks to management. He attended Kansas Wesleyan University and studied business administration at the University of Kansas.

Graves was elected as Secretary of State in 1986 and is currently serving his second term. During his time in office, he has been recognized for his leadership by the International Association of Corporation Administrators and appointed to the U.S. Competitiveness Policy Council.

Slattery

Much like the 1992 presidential campaign, both candidates said they believe college students will play an integral role in deciding who is elected.

"The students in Kansas may very well determine who is the next governor of Kansas," Slattery said.

For those students who downplay the importance of the governor's race, both Graves and Slattery said what happens in Topeka affects everyone.

"You're just not thinking clearly if you somehow believe that investing your time and your vote in who's going to be the next governor of Kansas is not important," Graves said.

To get students involved, Slattery said both campaigns will have to get students interested and show them how important the race really is.

"An election is fundamentally all about the future of our state," he said. "What direction do we want to go and who is best prepared to lead us in that direction."

Candidates share similar background

BOB MACHA
Collegian

Both graduated with honors from K-State. Both worked in agriculture after graduation. Both served in Kansas politics.

When election day rolls around in November, candidates for Congress in the 2nd District, Democrat John Carlin and Republican Sam Brownback, will try to emphasize their differences. However, the issues they place the highest priority on are similar.

Carlin said he sees the issues in this election as government frustration, economics and crime. Brownback said he sees the important issues as how to reduce government, crime and the loss of moral values.

Both Carlin and Brownback say they think voters are fed up with government.

"I think probably the biggest issue is total frustration with government," Carlin said.

"People want government off their backs and out of their pockets," Brownback said.

As a way to help reduce frustration with government, Brownback said he will try to reduce government's role by supporting legislation to reduce congressional privileges.

He said he would keep his own staff budget at 10 percent below what the law allows. He also said he's going to reduce the number of committees and subcommittees.

Brownback and Carlin both said they support term limits.

Carlin said he supports 12-year term limits for all members of Congress. Brownback said he supports a 10-year limit for House members and 12 years for the Senate. He supports a constitutional amendment for these limits, he said.

On other issues, the candidates disagree.

Carlin said he wants to focus on job creation as a means to help improve the economy.

"When we talk about job creation, first of all, I want to talk to you about quality jobs, jobs where we're talking salaries one can raise a family on," Carlin said.

"Family values seem to sneak into a lot of political discussion. If we really want to talk about family values, we'll also have to talk about the necessity of having an economic system that produces quality jobs where it's feasible for a family to survive economically," Carlin said.

Carlin said he sees health care as a big part of economics. He said he's concerned about people not being a part of the current system because they can't afford it.

Brownback

"People don't want a big government agency. They don't trust it. I think they want a limited set of reforms," he said.

Carlin and Brownback also have different ideas on abortion.

"I'm pro-choice but not pro-abortion. I oppose federal funding for abortion, but I certainly have more confidence in women to make that decision than I do in government," Carlin said.

Carlin

"I'm opposed to abortion except in cases, of rape and incest, and when the mother's life is in danger. I oppose federal funding for it," Brownback said.

Brownback said not many people pay attention to moral values.

"We need to return the values that made this nation great. These are work, family and the recognition of a higher moral authority," he said.

Research could help prevention

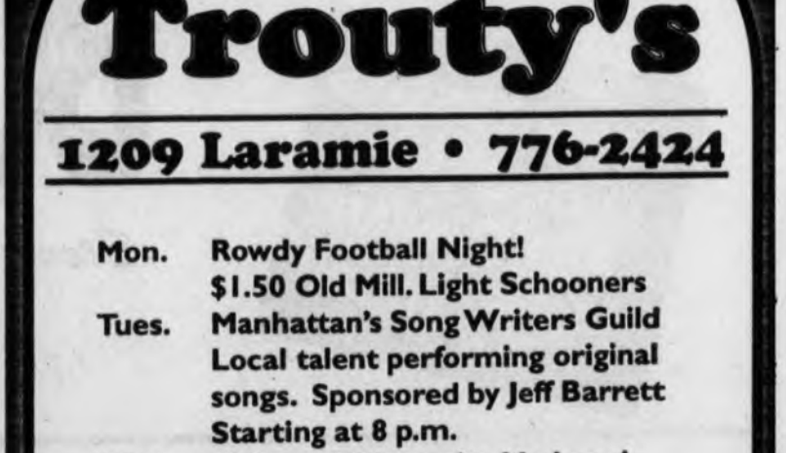
Betsy Bergen, associate professor of human ecology who has conducted two studies of students' attitudes toward sexuality at K-State, said the research could be beneficial.

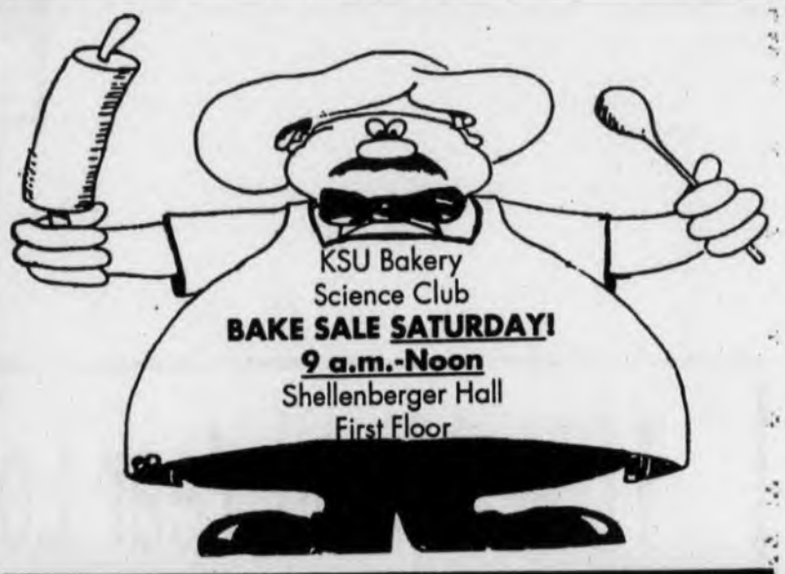
"In terms of the climate today of sexual research, I think we certainly need prevention," Bergen said. "If the research is geared toward prevention, I think it can be valuable."

Her research hasn't always been easy, McCoy said. One of the first problems with gathering her data was the fact that men are not as good as women at giving clean data, or data that is easy to interpret, she said.



Another problem she said she encountered was finding the men to research. Bergen agreed that information can be hard to gather.

"Research about sexuality is certainly controversial and certainly a private topic to some people," Bergen said. "It's difficult to get responders many times."



To find out how many men have been in a rape situation, McCoy surveyed students in KU's general psychology classes in a test study.

She said she found about 10 percent had been in a group rape situation. These preliminary results indicate she will need to survey about 500 students so that she will end up with about 50 relevant subjects, she said. She said she expects to have complete data collected and analyzed by next fall.

To help you find what you are looking for, the classified ads have been arranged by category and sub-category. All categories are marked by one of the large images, and sub-categories are preceded by a number designation.

TIPS FOR WRITING A CLASSIFIED AD

Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.

Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.

WE DO NOT USE PHONE NUMBERS OR LAST NAMES IN PERSONALS.

Haiti critics fear reprisals

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — As thousands more troops moved peacefully into Haiti, America's top general cautioned Tuesday that U.S. casualties could occur at any moment. Republicans in Congress attacked President Clinton's handling of the affair.

Exiled Haitian President Jean-Bertrand Aristide, too, signaled his disapproval of an American policy that permits Lt. Gen. Raoul Cedras to remain in power until mid-October.

At the White House, Clinton said the nation awoke to a "much better and very different day" than if the troops had been sent in as an invasion force.

At the same time Gen. John Shalikashvili, the chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, told reporters at the White House there could be an outbreak of violence pitting Haitian against Haitian at any time.

"And the nation needs to understand that we can be taking casualties at any moment and we need to be prepared for it."

Shalikashvili spoke as angry Haitians threw rocks at Haitian police in Cite Soleil, a stronghold of Aristide supporters. Police fired automatic weapons in the air to disperse a crowd estimated at 5,000. No injuries to Americans were reported.

In Congress, where opposition to a military invasion had been overwhelming, Republicans kept up a steady criticism of Clinton.

▶ Q&A

Questions and answers about the pact between the United States and Haiti that prevented the invasion, and how it will be implemented.

■ How many U.S. troops are going to Haiti and how long will they stay?

By day's end Monday, 3,000 Americans were to be on the ground. The United States should have 14,000 to 15,000 troops in Haiti by next weekend. Some of them will remain for months to set up an interim police force. When the country seems stable and Aristide's government is on its feet, the peacekeeping task will be turned over to the United Nations.

■ What are the elements of the accord reached Sunday?

Military ruler Lt. Gen. Raoul Cedras and his two top commanders are to resign by Oct. 15. Until then, they are to assist the U.S.-led occupation. Deposed President Jean-Bertrand Aristide will return, and the high command will be protected by an amnesty law to be approved by the Haitian congress.

■ What does Aristide think about the accord?

Aristide had no public comment, but his Washington lawyer, former Rep. Michael Barnes, called the agreement highly imperfect.

■ When will Aristide return?

Aristide was not named in the agreement and a specific date for his return was not given.

■ Why are Cedras and the other commanders allowed to remain in power until Oct. 15?

Cedras insisted a military amnesty be in place before they resign, and it may take some time for Parliament — many of whom fled after the ouster of Aristide — to reconvene and approve an amnesty. Also, the United States thought it better to have the military still in power during the transition.

■ What ensures Parliament will approve the amnesty law?

An amnesty was part of the Governors Island accord signed by Cedras and Aristide, which Cedras then broke. Congress never approved the amnesty last year because they could not get a quorum.

■ Cedras refused to honor the Governors Island accord. Why is there reason to believe he will honor this?

A year ago, he told U.N. and U.S. negotiators he would step down by Oct. 15, 1993, but he never did. This time, the presence of U.S. troops should ensure he keeps his word.

■ When will the world trade embargo on Haiti be lifted?

The United States on Monday put off asking the U.N. Security Council to ease sanctions, saying it was first necessary to see if Haiti's military continues to cooperate.

■ Who is going to be running Haiti until Oct. 15?

Military-installed President Jonassaint said his administration would cooperate with the transition that includes Aristide's return. Legislative elections are set for December.

■ What are the main drawbacks of the accord?

Cedras, army chief-of-staff Brig. Gen. Philippe Biamby and Port-au-Prince police chief Lt. Col. Joseph Francois Michel are not obliged to step down immediately, nor are they required to leave the country.

The main threat is that the army might not comply with orders to accept the foreign occupation and thousands of militiamen in the countryside could attack troops from the United States and other countries.

K-State scientists study long-term recycling

STEFFANY CARREL
Collegian

The half-eaten cheeseburger and fries thrown away today just may be recycled for further use tomorrow.

Developing ways of recycling food waste is the goal of a group of K-State scientists in the Department of Hotel, Restaurant, Institutional Management and Dietetics.

"Many people don't realize that there is a difference between reusing and recycling," Dennis Ferris, graduate research assistant for HRIMD, said.

"Food can't be reused, but it can be recycled — that is, turned into something useful for another purpose," Ferris said.

Recycling food waste is an important idea, Carol Shanklin, waste management expert and professor in HRIMD, said. Waste disposal isn't just an environmental issue anymore — it has become an economic issue, she said.

"In the past, food-service operators did not consider getting rid of food and packaging waste as an expense," Shanklin said.

"Now with landfill space becoming scarce, food-service operators are becoming concerned about the cost of waste disposal."

Today, the cost of waste disposal in Manhattan is $30 per ton — a cost that has doubled in just two years, she said.

"Already, in Manhattan, we're using a transfer station because our landfill is closed," Shanklin said. "We pay a lot more because we have to transfer our waste to Perry landfill."

Perry landfill is about 70 miles from Manhattan, east of Topeka.

Besides the direct costs, Shanklin said waste disposal has indirect costs associated with it, such as wasted natural resources.

"You consume a great deal of water when you run a garbage disposal, and water is a limited resource," she said.

Increasing costs for waste disposal and closing landfills are not unique to Manhattan, she said.

By the year 2000, four out of five landfills currently in operation will close because they are full or because of new federal regulations, she said.

"There has been a perception, in the Midwest especially, that we really don't have a problem with waste disposal and the space for that waste to go," Shanklin said.

"But now we have public schools noticing," she said. "Now, our students are becoming more environmentally conscious."

Shanklin said there is also a movement by consumers responding to waste-disposal concerns.

"Consumers are getting away from disposable products, and the retail marketers are responding to consumers' demands for more concentrated products," she said.

Shanklin said the scientists' research began with the question, "What can we do to help?" and involves studying individual food-service operators and their needs.

"First, we do a profile of the food-service operator to determine what their waste stream is composed of.

"We ask, 'Is it predominantly packaging material waste or is it predominantly food waste?'"

Each food-service operation the scientists have studied so far has had different characteristics, Shanklin said. However, they have made some general conclusions.

For example, they found approximately 70 percent of the total waste was food waste. Based on this analysis of the waste stream, Shanklin said they can perform the second step of the process, which is to help the food-service operator from both a management perspective and an environmental one.

"From the management perspective, we look at what they purchase and what their consumers waste," she said.

"From the environmental perspective, we can develop a long-term plan with them — whether they should work with a waste hauler or decide to go into recycling.

There are several ways to recycle food waste, Shanklin said. Some have already been established, and others are still being investigated .

"First, we can use this food waste to create organic material. We can blend it with other organic compounds — like newspaper, another waste product — and compost it," she said.

This compost could be used to develop a product that greenhouse operators and landscapers could use as a soil amenity, she said.

Ferris said another potential use for food waste is converting it into a biodegradable film similar to that used for plastic trash bags.

"Our goal is to produce a film made of waste materials that will decompose rapidly when discarded," Ferris said. "If we are successful, a potential use of this material would be to bag grass clippings that go into community composting operations."

Using food waste as animal feed is another recycling option, Ferris said, because food waste is rich in protein, carbohydrates and minerals.

"If we can use this waste as feed, we will not only recycle waste, but we will also reduce the amount of grain fed to livestock," he said.

Ferris said food waste must be dried and modified in other ways before it is usable as animal feed.

One method of modifying the refuse is by using a pulper and microwave dehydrator to turn the waste into dried pellets, he said.

Shanklin said the scientists must evaluate the energy costs associated with using the pulper and dehydrator.

"We don't want to create additional waste, and we don't want it to be more expensive," she said.

DISCARDED CARDBOARD

A two-week, waste-stream analysis of Derby Food Center found the following:

- More than 1,800 pounds (2,500 gallons) of waste was produced per day.
- Food left on students' plates accounted for almost 40 percent of total waste stream by weight. This is more than half a pound of edible or inedible waste per plate.
- Cardboard packaging was the largest waste stream by volume, accounting for more than 44 percent of the total volume.
- After cardboard boxes, paperboard containers, metal cans, wooden boxes and plastic containers were collapsed, the total volume of waste was reduced by 49 percent.

BIG 8 FOOTBALL

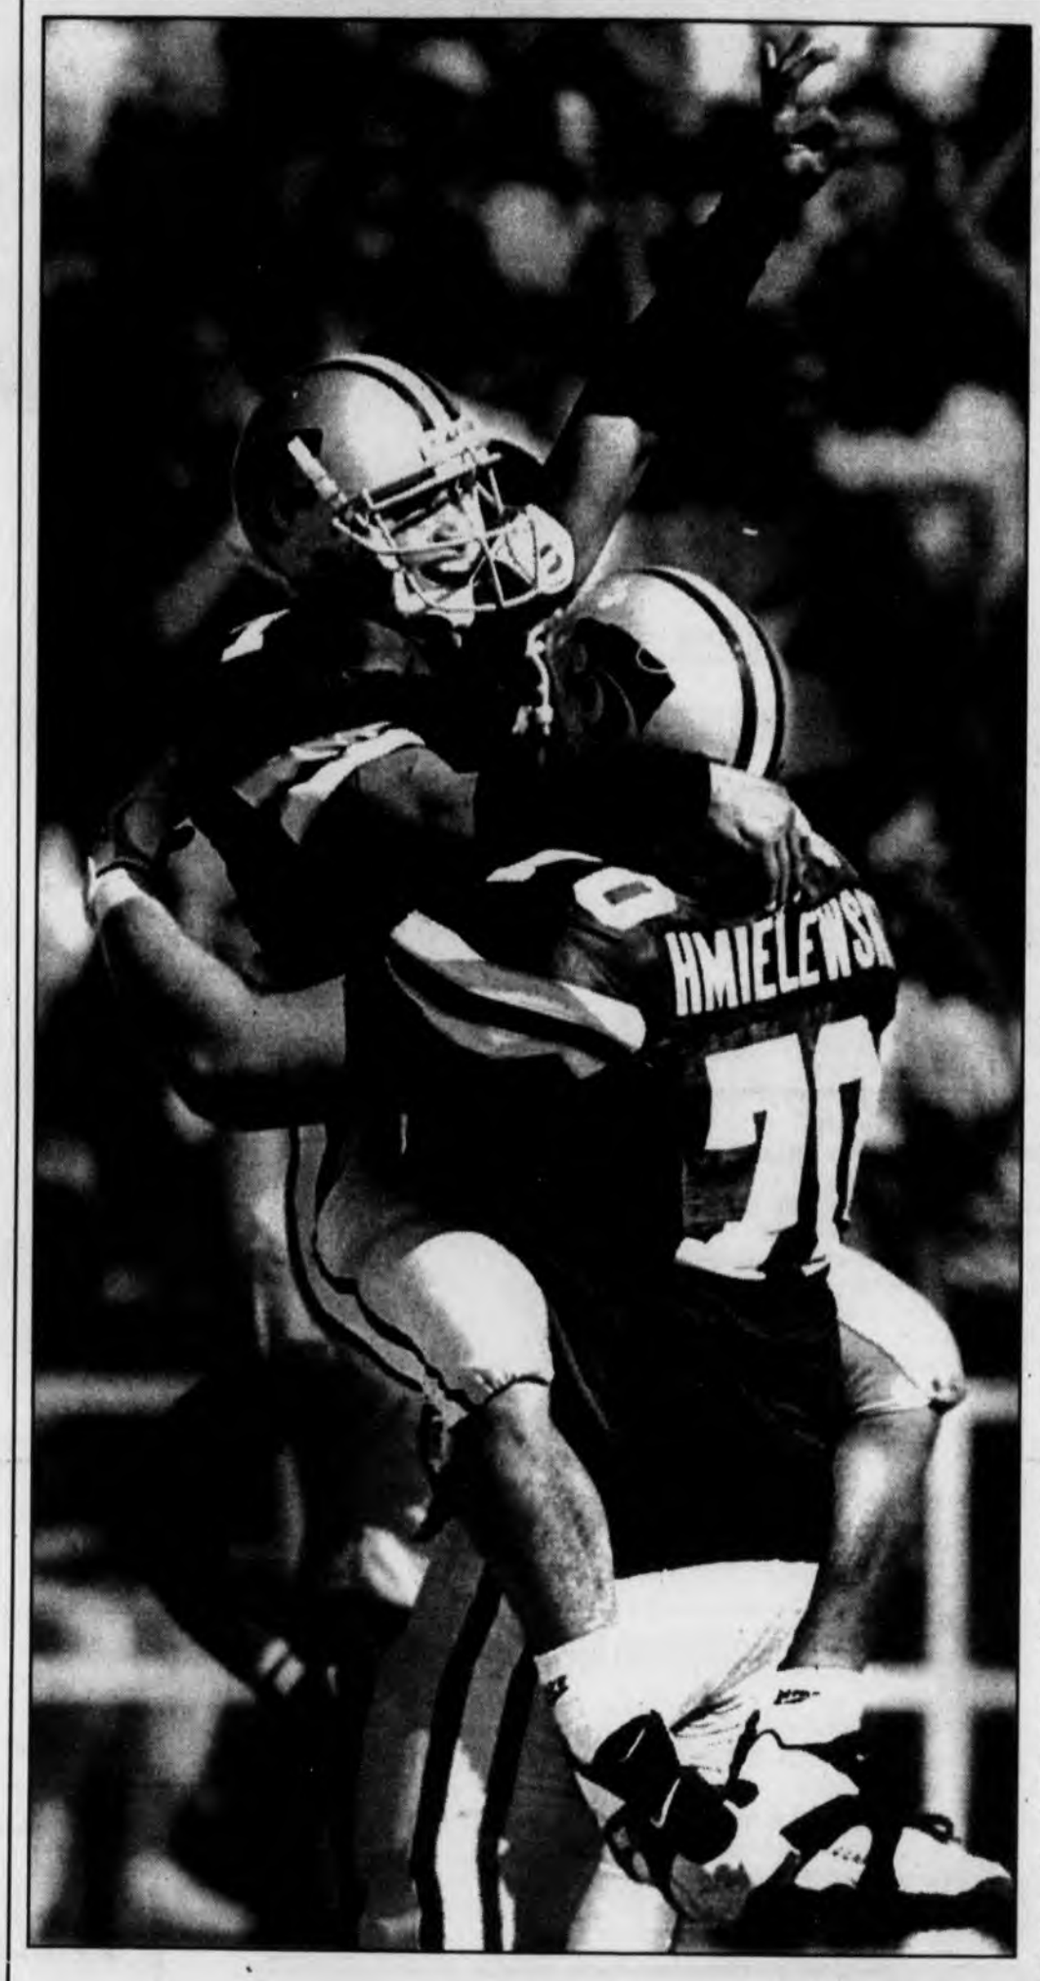
PREVIEW FOR SEPT. 24

Minnesota at K-State
See Page 3

Colorado at Michigan

When: 2:30 p.m. Saturday, Sept. 24
Where: Michigan Stadium (102,501)
About the Buffaloes: Colorado handled Wisconsin last week in a big victory. Running back Rashaan Salaam rushed for four touchdowns, and quarterback Kordell Stewart was impressive for the entire game.
About the Wolverines: Michigan has already defeated Notre Dame in South Bend, Ind. Michigan is a solid team both on offense and defense, but the team's leader is quarterback Todd Collins. Preseason Heisman Trophy candidate Tyrone Wheatley could return after missing the first two games due to a shoulder injury.

Ala-Birmingham at Kansas



When: 1 p.m. Saturday, Sept. 24
Where: Memorial Stadium (50,250)
About the Blazers: Last season UAB finished with a 9-2 record. This season the Blazers return 23 lettermen, and that includes 12 starters. Receiver Derrick Ingram is UAB's top player.
About the Jayhawks: KU had a hard time last week against TCU, as the Jayhawks lost. They will try to bounce back behind running back June Henley and quarterback Asheki Preston. Both were knocked out because of injury against TCU.

Rice at Iowa State

When: 1 p.m. Saturday, Sept. 24
Where: Cyclone Stadium (50,000)
About the Owls: Rice about pulled the upset against K-State last week. Their option attack can be deadly, as quarterback Josh LaRocca ran for a touchdown against the Wildcats. The Owls also rushed for 207 yards and had 15 first downs.
About the Cyclones: ISU was beaten for the third time in a row last week. ISU lost to Western Michigan at home. The Cyclones also have losses to Iowa and to Northern Iowa. Coach Jim Walden has been rumored to be on his way out of Ames because of his poor record. Iowa State is led by center Tony Booth, who was an all-Big Eight selection last season.

Tulsa at Oklahoma State

When: 6 p.m. Saturday, Sept. 17
Where: Lewis Field (50,614)
About the Golden Hurricane: Tulsa has already defeated Missouri in the first game of the season. They will try to knock off another Big Eight foe, with a balanced offensive attack. Their main strength on offense has been their line.
About the Cowboys: OSU had a victory snatched away at the last moment at Baylor. The Cowboys continued to play well behind the running of David Thompson and the throwing of Toné Jones. The defense is led by end Jevon Langford.

Despite mistakes Cats get victory

It wasn't supposed to be this close.

K-State defeated Rice 27-18 last Saturday, but the Owls let several opportunities to defeat the Wildcats slip right through their fingers.

The first Rice slip-up came in third quarter. Rice took the second half kickoff and went on a drive that ate up nearly seven minutes of the third quarter.

Finally, the K-State defense stiffened up, forcing the Owls into a third down passing situation.

Rice quarterback Josh LaRocca then dropped back to pass and found Ed Howard streaking down the left sideline. LaRocca put the ball in his hands, but Howard dropped the ball in the end zone.

K-State 27
Rice 18

Later in the fourth quarter, LaRocca faked a handoff to a running back. LaRocca then rolled to his right and fired a pass to a wide-open Byron Coston at the ten yard line.

The only problem was that Coston dropped the pass, which would have been another Rice touchdown.

"I think that it is obvious that we were two dropped passes away from winning this ball game," Rice coach Ken Hatfield said.

Not only did Rice make crucial mistakes, but K-State made several mistakes that could have resulted in disaster.

The Cats had six penalties for 57 yards, two fumbles and a blocked punt, all of which came as a result of not being mentally prepared, Coach Bill Snyder said.

"I did not coach them well enough to get ready to play," Snyder said. "That's my responsibility, and that's my job.

"I need to put them on the field so that they are mentally in tune with what is going on, so they can play this game emotionally at the level that they need to be playing on."

As for the overall performance, Snyder wasn't impressed.

"I believe that we played rather poorly," Snyder said.

"It's still important that we won the ball game, but I have real concerns on how we played."

K-State tackle Jim Hmielewski said the Cats' performance against Rice won't be good enough to win against other teams.

"I think that we played terrible," Hmielewski said. "It was reminiscent of 1992, when we just came out flat."

Even with the overall lackluster performance, the Cats did get on the right track early with a 40-yard Martin Gramatica field goal. The kick gave the Cats a 3-0 lead.

The Owls placekicker Johnny Bagwell answered K-State's score with a 29-yard field goal to tie the game up at 3-3 in the first quarter.

K-State then tried to answer the Rice field goal with a drive of their own.

However, the drive stalled when quarterback Chad May was sacked and stripped of the ball.

Rice recovered the ball, and six plays later LaRocca ran an option around the left side for a 24-yard touchdown run.

Hatfield said LaRocca played very well against the Cats.

After the Rice touchdown, K-State struck right back two minutes later, with a touchdown of its own.

The touchdown came when May optioned to the right, and he ran untouched for a five-yard touchdown run.

That evened the score at 10-10, but the Cats didn't stop there as they added ten more points in the second quarter.

J.J. Smith capped a 61-yard drive with a one yard plunge to give the Cats a 17-10 lead.

Then with a few second left in the first half, Gramatica tacked on a 27 yard field goal to give the Cats a 20-10 lead at halftime.

Rice then controlled the entire third quarter, but they only scored once.

That came when Jamey Whitlock dived into the end zone, but Bagwell's extra point attempt failed which left the Owls trailing by one point.

The Owls could have taken the lead with Whitlock's touchdown, but Howard dropped the ball on Rice's first drive of the half.

"We out-fought them in the third quarter," Hatfield said.

"We knew that it would be important for us since we were heading into the wind."

The Cats then put the game out of reach with a 30-yard touchdown pass from May to Tyson Schwieger.

The touchdown gave the Cats a 27-16 lead.

Rice then blocked a K-State punt for a safety.

That closed out the scoring at 27-18.

Budget a game of Monopoly for athletic department

NICOLE POELL
Collegian

This is the second part in a two-part series on the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics' budget

It's like playing a guessing game.

K-State athletic director Max Urick plays this real-life Monopoly game every year as he makes budget projections for the upcoming seasons, hoping they're accurate.

Last year, they weren't.

This resulted in the current $600,000 to $650,000 budget deficit for the athletic department.

"When our revenue projections are not accurate, as was this past year, and then we run arrears, and it's very stressful," Urick said. "But we're expecting to have a positive balance by the end of this year."

"What it looks like to me for fiscal year '94 and '95 is that our revenues will be $9.9 million or somewhere around $10 million," Urick said.

"Our expenditures will be real close to that. Now whether we end up with a positive balance of $25,000, $50,000 or $150,000 depends on how accurate these projections are, how we can hold the line, and if we don't have the unexpected expenditures as we had last year. So my projections are just kind of a best guess based on the information that we know now."

One piece of information Urick and his staff are aware of has actually exceeded the original projections — football ticket sales.

"This year, on football season tickets, we projected we'd sell 17,043," Urick said. "So far, we've sold 20,000. So our revenues in that area are going to be higher from just that one category. The single-game tickets we projected to be 10,000. We know for the first game we were in excess of that.

"So if this stays true and keeps climbing, it will eventually help our net balance not only this year, but through the course of the years."

Urick also knows that these projections can and will be affected by things he has little control over.

"We try to take a financial snapshot based on what we best feel about things now when we do these projections," he said, "but a lot of variables can affect that.

"The enrollment fluctuations can affect it. The win-loss record of our revenue sports can affect it, but we intend to monitor the progress of these things on a regular basis."

Urick has already begun his analysis of the variable that is bound to have the biggest effect on K-State's athletic budget in the years to come — the evolution of the Big Twelve Conference.

"Actually, the year before we officially join the Big Twelve will be an unusual time for us," Urick said. "We will be participating in the Tier I Championship, which is the new bowl lineup putting the best against the best.

"That year, a Big Eight team will be either in the Orange, the Sugar or the Fiesta bowl. The payout from whatever game is about $8 million to the conference. Allowing about $1 million to

OBSTACLES

Karina Kuregian left her homeland in Armenia to play tennis at K-State

JULIE KULHMAN
Collegian

She was 5 years old when tennis became as natural as breathing.

K-State tennis standout Karina Kuregian grew up on the tennis courts her father coached on in Yerevan, Armenia.

"Tennis was an unconscious routine for me," Kuregian said. "It was as normal for me as something like going to school would be for anyone else."

Kuregian's tennis-oriented family includes her father, who was a coach in Armenia, and her sister, who recently became a coach.

She then played tennis throughout her childhood and teen-age years in Armenia.

"We didn't have organized sports in school, so I had to play in clubs," she said.

So how did someone from Armenia wind up in America?

"I came into the states with the Armenian National Tennis Team," she said. "We played matches in places like Yale and Cambridge."

Landing at K-State is another story for Kuregian.

"I did have the opportunity to come through K-State when I was playing with the team, and this college gave me the opportunity to learn English," she said. "My English wasn't good enough for some other universities."

At K-State, the 20-year-old Kuregian was ranked 20th in Division IA tennis last season before she suffered a ruptured disk in her back. The injury put her career on hold.

"I was playing in February when I felt a tight hamstring, so I thought I had hurt that," she said.

"When the trainers were stretching me, I knew it was something else because it hurt all the way down to my feet."

She then struggled with the decision to have surgery.

"I didn't know what to do," she said. "Finally I decided to when, one month, before the surgery I felt almost handicapped. I could barely walk."

The surgery was performed on June 2, in New Jersey, and it held off her tennis playing for six months.

Kuregian said the surgery has not hurt her tennis, only her endurance.

"I still felt like I was on the court when I was recovering, because I was playing in my mind," she said.

"It helped me see some things I didn't see before."

But the comeback hasn't been all easy.

"It's very tough to get back," she said. "I can't do as much as before, because I know there's something in my back keeping me from it."

However, Kuregian will be playing doubles this weekend, and she said she is excited to begin competing in singles next week at the National Clay Court Tournament.

"I'm not sure if I'm ready to play at a real tough level, but I will do my best," she said.

Playing tennis at a professional level is something Kuregian said she hopes she can achieve some day.

But something else has to happen first.

"I have to graduate before I do," she said.

Kuregian is majoring in business finance and said she'll need a degree even if she does get to that level.

"Even if I can play professionally, I'll probably only get to play for two or three years."

Although playing professional tennis is a goal in her future, going back to her homeland isn't.

"I don't think I'll go back until the country gets better," she said.

"My parents moved to Russia. They are safe and healthy, and I was worrying very much about them," she said.

Tennis has taken much of Kuregian's time and has made it hard to see her family and friends.

"I am very busy with tennis and school. I have some good friends, a boyfriend, my teammates and my coach," she said.

"If I tried to have much more, I would never have time to see anyone."

> K-State tennis player

Her relationship with Coach Steve Bietau is one she said is solid.

"I trust him and can come to him with my problems, and he will help me work on them," she said.

Bietau has coached Kuregian to national recognition in the polls, and most recently she became the first player in K-State history to receive an International Tennis Association all-America Award.

Kuregian said she is proud of the accomplishment but embarrassed that everyone saw her receive it.

She received the award at KSU Stadium in front of more than 38,000 fans during the Southwestern Louisiana game.

"Oh my gosh, it was so embarrassing," Kuregian said.

▶ MINNESOTA PREVIEW

Gophers look for redemption

CRESTON KUENZI
Collegian

The Minnesota Golden Gophers will be looking for revenge when they come to Manhattan this Saturday.

In last year's game at the Metrodome in Minneapolis, the Golden Gophers were down 30-25 to the Wildcats.

The Gophers mounted a 12-play, 78-yard drive in the closing minutes, only to have it end at the two-yard line.

That's when quarterback Tim Schade's fourth-down attempt fell incomplete.

The Gophers ended up finishing 4-7 last year, including a win over eventual Rose Bowl Champion, Wisconsin.

Minnesota coach Jim Wacker said the losing record was misleading.

"We were a competitive team last year," he said. "We were so close to three more wins."

The Gophers have started off this season at 2-1. Their only loss was a 56-3 loss to Penn State in the first game of the season. Minnesota bounced back with two convincing victories over Pacific and San Diego State.

After the first three games, the Gophers are looking to improve three areas. These areas are defense, turnovers and penalties.

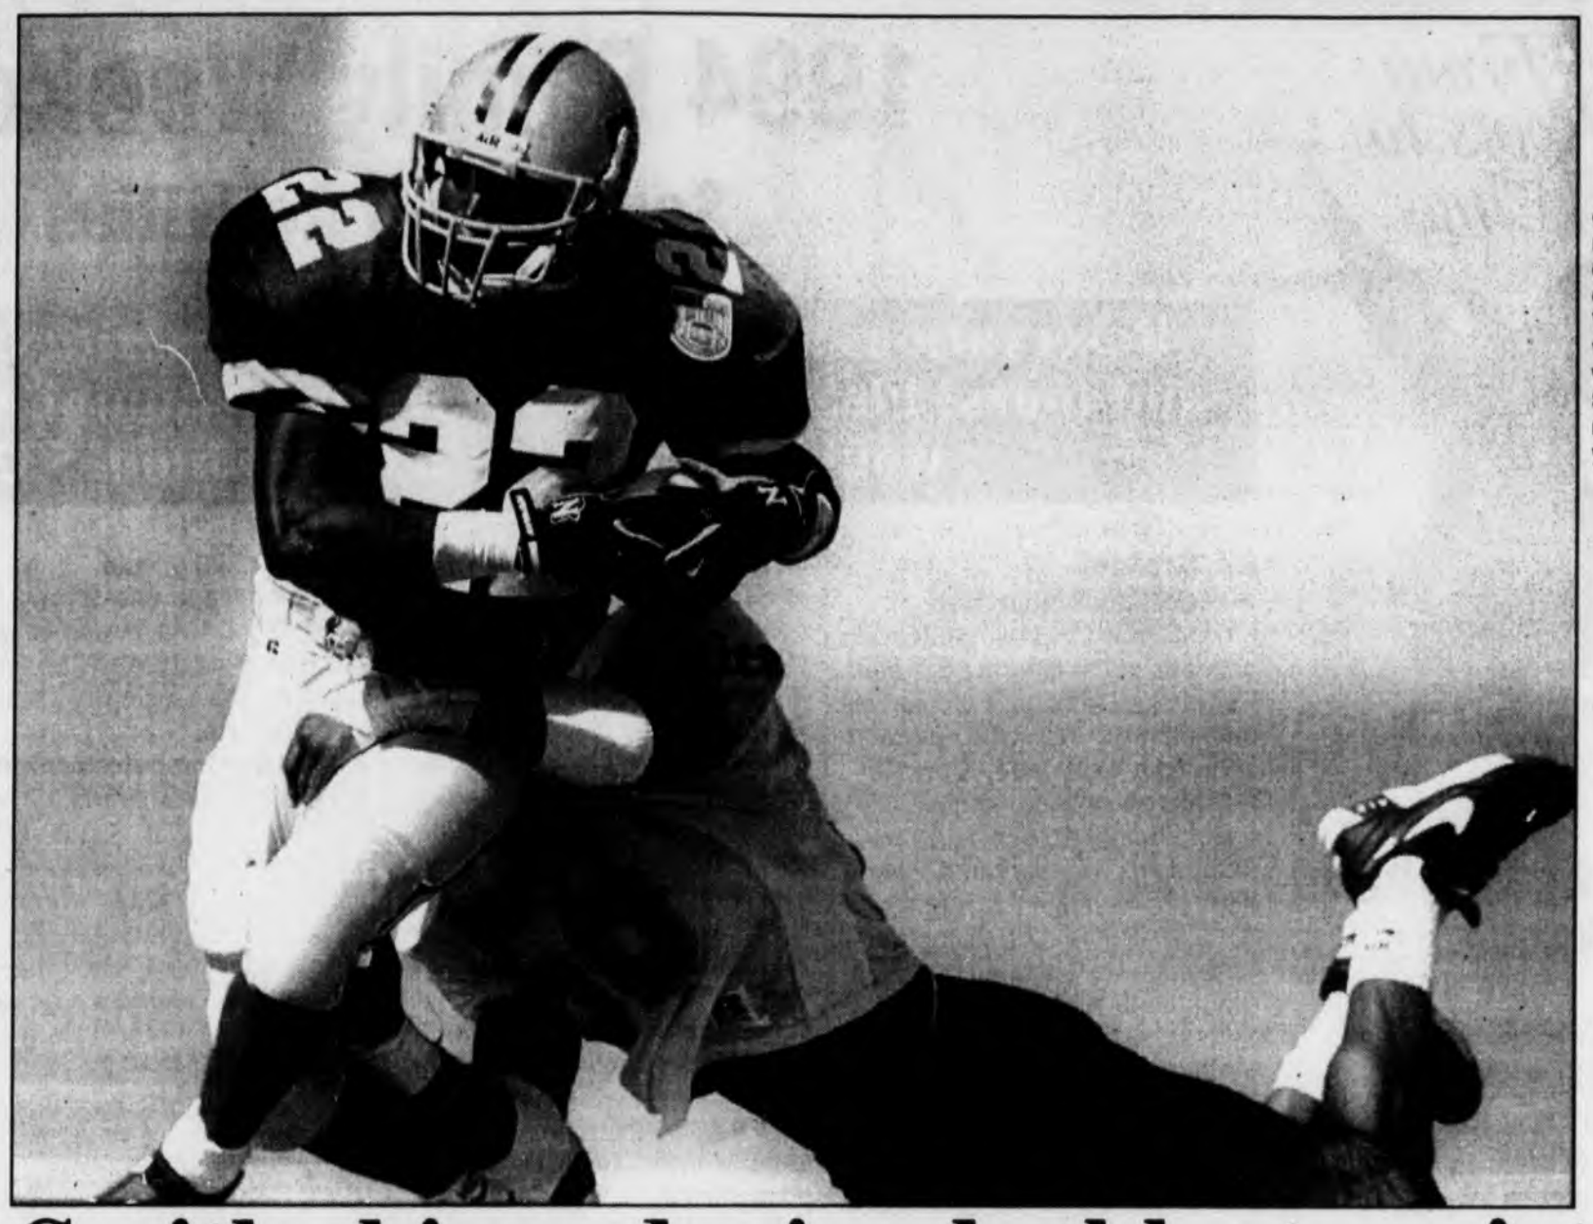
Last year, the Gophers ranked last in the Big Ten Conference in total defense (417.4 yards allowed per game) and in scoring defense (31.9 points allowed per game).

Wacker said he anticipates an improved defense.

The linebacker position is the area of biggest concern for the Gophers. They graduated their top two team leaders in tackles from this position.

This year, the Gophers will rely on Craig Sauer, who had 68 tackles this past season and 12 this year, and Ben Langford, who leads the team with 17 tackles this year, to lead the charge.

"The lack of game experience at linebacker is a concern right now," Wacker said.



Minnesota returns seven starters on offense from a team that set several school records including yards per game (411.6), most passing yards (3,277), most passing touchdowns (220), and first downs (237).

They also led the Big Ten with 297.9 yards passing per game.

Leading the way are Schade and Scott Eckers at quarterback. Both saw considerable playing time last season, and they have both spilt time so far this season.

"They did some very good things for us last year," Wacker said. "Both will have to cut down on interceptions. That will determine how good of a football team we will be."

The Gophers return a wealth of talent and experience including their leading rusher from last year, Chris Darkins. Last season, he finished with 610 yards rushing, and he averaged 4.9 yards a carry.

J.J. Smith, running back, dodges a Rice defender, in the Wildcats 27-18 victory last weekend at KSU Stadium. Smith rushed for 114 yards.

Smith shines during lackluster victory

Co-captain finishes with 301 all-purpose yards in Wildcat victory over Rice

WESS HUDELSON
Collegian

K-State running back J.J. Smith's record-setting performance against Rice may go well unnoticed.

Smith gained 301 all-purpose yards in the game, including 114 yards rushing, 46 yards receiving, and 141 yards on kickoff returns. Andre Coleman set the record with 270 yards last season against Missouri.

Despite the performance, Coach Bill Snyder seemed unimpressed.

"I thought he ran well, but we need to get him to keep his balance when he breaks through the line," Snyder said. "Our longest run of the season is still just 16 yards."

The performance solidified Smith's versatility as a running back. His 114 yards rushing moved him to eighth place among K-State's career-rushing leaders. Smith's career total now stands at 1,309.

Additionally, Smith now ranks fourth among K-State's career touchdown leaders.

Smith scored in the second quarter Saturday by leaping over the goal line from 1 yard out.

On kickoff returns, Smith had runs of 31, 44, 36 and 30 yards and was tackled by the last defender on most of the returns.

"It was one tackle away every time," Smith said. "The special teams' guys really get going. They want a knock out every time they run down the field."

Every time he touches the ball, Smith is looking for a touchdown, he said.

"I'm always looking to score," Smith said. "I want to have the ball in my hands.

"I have confidence in my abilities, and I like to show people what I can do," he said.

Despite Smith's desire to contribute, he seemed more concerned with the play of the team rather than his own performance.

"We won," Smith said. "We've still got a lot of things to iron out."

The mistakes committed by the Cats concerned Smith as well.

"We had turnovers. That was the big key in this game," Smith said. "We gave it away and were fortunate enough to come back and do some good things.

"Rice is a good team, and people will see that later on in the season," he said.

Smith said the offensive line was the biggest factor in his success.

"It was simple to find the holes today," Smith said. "Anyone could have run through the holes I was getting today."

Although the victory was unsatisfying to most of the team and Coach Snyder, the Wildcats moved up to No. 17 in the USA Today-CNN Coaches Poll on Sunday.

However, Smith doesn't put much stock into the polls.

"I'm not really sure how those polls are figured out," Smith said. "We can't get ourselves caught up in what other people think too much."

"It was simple to find the holes today. Anyone could have run through the holes I was getting today."

▶ VOLLEYBALL PREVIEW

Volleyball team looks to retain winning record

CRESTON KUENZI
Collegian

The K-State volleyball team will try to keep their nearly unblemished record intact this weekend.

The Wildcats travel to Arlington, Texas, to take part in the University of Texas-Arlington tournament.

Moore

They will be accompanied by three other teams. The teams the Cats will face are Virginia Tech, Oral Roberts and Texas-Arlington.

Volleyball coach Jim Moore said he isn't worried about playing away from Manhattan, because he doesn't believe in a home-court advantage.

"Being on the road is insignificant," he said. "It doesn't mean anything.

"I don't see any reason why we shouldn't have as good a record away as at home."

Moore also said this tournament should be a little less stressful than the one they participated in at Oregon.

"The scheduling is easier this time because we only have one match a day," Moore said.

Virginia Tech went 17-18 last year but lost only one starter from the team. The Hokies enter the tournament at 4-6. This will be the first time that K-State has ever played Virginia Tech.

Moore said Virginia Tech will probably be the stiffest competition.

"They look pretty strong," Moore said. "They beat Texas Tech, Kansas in four games, and New Orleans pretty handily in three."

Oral Roberts went 20-13 last year, including a 1-1 record against the Cats.

The Golden Eagles won the first meeting last year in five games, but the Cats handled them easily a few weeks later in a three-game bout. The Eagles lost only one starter and return nine letter winners.

The Eagles are 6-5 this year and play at North-Texas University on Thursday.

Texas-Arlington went 11-19 last year. They have four starters and 10 letter winners returning. The Mavericks are in a similar situation to the Cats, since they have a new coach, Janine Gremmel-Smith.

Moore said the tournament will be favorable for his team as it prepares for the Big Eight Conference.

"It's very important that we have a good tournament," he said. "Virginia Tech would be a big win, but we'll have to play a lot better than we did against UMKC."

Last weekend, the Cats displayed a lackluster performance in a 15-4, 15-7, 15-10 victory over the University of Missouri-Kansas City Kangaroos on Sunday.

"We played terrible," Moore said. "It was ratty for what they're capable of playing like."

K-State estimates more revenue in future

"expenses, and divided eight ways, that comes to $875,000 per school."

The payout will remain the same, it will be divided 12 ways the next year, Urick said.

The addition of a second major bowl and lucrative television contract will raise each school's conference share.

"We expect to have a playoff and another major bowl that year, so I speculate each school receiving around a $250,000 payout," he said.

"But the big chunk of money will come from our football television contract with ABC and Prime Sports, which pays $100 million over five years," Urick said.

"That averages to $20 million a year, divided among the 12 schools, which makes our approximate payout $1.6 million."

That figure is quite an improvement over what K-State received from its conference payout this year, something Urick said was a factor in his department's deficit.

"We were down about $600,000 in Big Eight revenue this past year," he said. "This was a result of expecting to have a second conference team playing in a major bowl, which didn't happen.

"Oklahoma went to the John Hancock Bowl, Colorado went to the Aloha Bowl, and we went to the Copper Bowl. The earnings from any bowl game that pays less than $1 million are not divided among the conference. So since Nebraska was our only major bowl, each school received a very minimal amount. That accounted for a large part of the shortfall we experienced."

Even the Wildcats' $700,000 payout from the Copper Bowl didn't provide a huge monetary boost to the department.

"Our expenses from the Copper Bowl ran about $630,000," Urick said. "So we ended up with about $70,000 going into our bank account that we pay bills out of when the money becomes available."

While there isn't much money available in the Cats' account at this point, Urick said K-State isn't alone.

"We're all in the same kind of predicament," he said.

SPORTS DIGEST

▶KELLY IS ARRESTED FOR DRIVING UNDER THE INFLUENCE

Another K-State football player was arrested for driving under the influence of alcohol or drugs.

Dederick D. Kelly, a junior fullback, was arrested at 2:28 a.m. on Sunday for DUI. Kelly was arrested at the corner of Oak Street and Poyntz Avenue.

Coach Bill Snyder was unavailable for comment.

Kelly, who plays mainly as a blocking back in short- yardage situations, scored a touchdown for K-State against Southwestern Louisiana.

Last season, Kelly played in ten games, and he gained 14 yards on two carries in the Copper Bowl. Against Nevada-Las Vegas, he gained six yards on two rushes.

However, this season Kelly was seeing more playing time since Rod Schiller injured his knee against Oklahoma State in the last regular season game of last season.

On Sept. 8, Steve Hanks, a junior defensive back, was arrested for DUI.

During Hanks' arraignment on Sept. 15, his lawyer Bob Pottroff entered a plea of not guilty, but wanted to keep the option of diversion open.

▶CROSS COUNTRY TEAMS TAKE FOURTH PLACE

Both the women's and men's cross country teams finished in fourth place at the Woody Grenno/Nebraska Invitational last Saturday in Lincoln, Neb.

The women's team didn't run its top three runners, but it still finished strong as they just finished 11 points from a second-place finish.

Lesley Wells and Samantha McNamara finished 16th and 18th.

The Nebraska Cornhuskers grabbed first place in the meet, and from their performance the Cats now know who they will be competing with in the Big Eight.

"I think that they're a little bit better than we thought," Coach Terry Drake said. "The women got a chance to see what it is going to take to win the Big Eight Conference."

Billy Wuggazer led the men's team with a sixth place finish. Wuggazer covered the 8,000-meter course in a time of 25:42.

Drake said Wuggazer had his best performance of his career.

"He showed the competitive leadership that I wanted him to show."

COLLEGIAN STAFF

▶MEN'S GOLF TEAM FINISHES IN NINTH PLACE IN COLORADO

This past weekend, both the K-State men's and women's golf teams played in tournaments. The men competed at the Falcon/Cross Creek Invitational, while the women played at the 1994 Hawkeye Invitational.

The men finished in ninth place, with Brett Waldman leading the way for the Cats. He finished in 22nd place, while having rounds of 78, 75 and 73.

Scott Hovis ended up one stroke behind Waldman with rounds of 73, 76 and 76.

Troy Halterman finished in 40th place, and he was the Cats' next-highest finisher.

The women's team finished in 10th place at the Hawkeye Invitational. Trisha Hoover led the Cats with a 42nd-place finish.

Both teams will be in action again this weekend.

The men will travel to Lawrence to play in the Kansas Invitational.

The women's team will play at the Cyclone Golf Classic.

POLITICAL DEBATE

"Until I went to the Legislature, it wasn't in fashion to say it was your top priority to represent K-State. Since that time, I think candidates have been following my lead."

Legislative candidates debate at K-State

MIKE HIND
Collegian

The K-State Union Little Theatre was host to the first debate for the 66th legislative district Wednesday afternoon.

The Republican candidate for the position, Ann Stevens, opened the debate by saying she was running because her opponent was ineffective, out of step and out of touch.

"Only 9 percent of the bills she has proposed these last two years have been passed," Stevens said.

"Another way to say that is 91 percent of the time she has failed."

Sheila Hochhauser, the Democratic candidate and incumbent, said she was running because of a pledge she made to the people when first elected in 1988.

"I pledged that I wouldn't continue to seek office unless I continued to have an impact," Hochhauser said.

"Until I went to the Legislature, it wasn't in fashion to say it was your top priority to represent Kansas State University.

"Since that time, I think candidates have been following my lead," she said.

After the opening remarks, the candidates were asked questions by a moderator concerning tuition increases, Fort Riley and crime legislation.

Both said they felt the school should have a more active voice over the tuition received by K-State.

"K-State is still a bargain," Stevens said. "Just compare our tuition with any of our peer institutions. K-State students shouldn't subsidize other Board of Regents institutions."

Hochhauser said that the regents had been very aggressive with tuition hikes in the last few years and encouraged the regents and the Legislature to explore other methods of finance before raising tuition.

On the issue of a possible Fort Riley shutdown, both candidates agreed that the best strategy for keeping the base in Kansas was federal lobbying.

Hochhauser said that state legislators didn't have great influence on that issue in Washington D.C., but her position on the governor's task force gives the state some hope.

"State legislators don't have a lot to say and a lot of sway with the federal government regarding Fort Riley," Hochhauser said.

"I have met the Speaker of the House and think it's possible to influence him in Kansas' favor."

Both candidates said they stressed tougher crime legislation but took different stands on the death penalty, with Stevens in support of the death penalty and Hochhauser opposed.

After the questions by the moderator, the two candidates were given a chance to ask each other a question.

Hochhauser was given the opportunity to ask first but had no questions. Stevens did ask Hochhauser a two-part question.

Stevens said Hochhauser was in Europe during the flood of last year.

"If it had been your home that had been flooded, would you have returned, and before you left, did you inform the other representative from Manhattan and state senator of your district that you would be gone?" Stevens said.

"My home did receive two inches of water in the basement," Hochhauser replied.

Hochhauser said that her husband was on sabbatical, and they felt it was important to keep their 2-year-old daughter with them.

"I thought long and hard about returning and decided against doing so because I hired a legislative aide," Hochhauser said.

Hochhauser said that she and her husband paid for a legislative aide to keep them informed of the situation and to meet with flood victims that needed assistance in the Manhattan area.

She said she informed the other representatives in her area of her planned absence and a letter appeared in the paper about her trip.

"I think the most appropriate question to ask about the flood is, were the people who were affected by the flood in any way disadvantaged by my absence? The answer is clearly no."

Students in Ford Hall to vote on locked doors

CHARITY WOODSON
Collegian

Residents of Ford Hall will have the opportunity to take safety and security into their own hands during a hall-wide vote today and Friday.

The vote will focus on the hall's front doors, which are only locked from 11 p.m. to 7 a.m. If the vote passes, Ford will become the second hall in the Derby Complex to have a 24-hour secure building.

"As an individual, I think that each person should take as many measures as possible to protect themselves," Ford Hall director Lori Landers said.

"If locking the doors keeps even one person out that shouldn't be in our home, that's what we should do," she said.

The option to lock the doors 24 hours a day originally went before the Hall Governing Board, but HGB decided to leave the decision to the residents.

"There are 600 people living here. It is not up to 30 people to choose. We all need to vote," said, Ford Hall president Marci Decker, junior in business management.

Many residents, like Marla Clifton, freshman in elementary education, think the decision to lock the doors would be a good safety feature.

"It's a shame that we have to worry about locking our doors during the day, but you can never feel too safe," she said.

The recent break-ins at the Smurthwaite Scholarship House may also have an effect on the vote.

"I hope the residents will think twice before they make their vote," Landers said.

"It shows that things like that do happen close to home."

Not everyone in the hall is so positive about the possibility of a 24-hour secure building, however.

"For security reasons, I can see the point, but I would feel that my freedom was taken away," Ford receptionist Bonnie Wynne, junior in pre-vet biology, said.

Locking the doors would change the job of the front desk as well, Wynne said.

"We're going to turn into security guards, basically," she said.

"It would take us away from the desk a lot."

Some residents said they would like to see other measures taken to ensure their safety regardless of how the vote turns out.

"We need to have more programs," Clifton said, "about self-defense, rape and awareness of our surroundings."

Being protected 24 hours a day is not feasible, Decker said.

"We just need to have common sense and watch out for ourselves," she said.

Overall, the vote is a chance for the residents to take their safety into their own hands, Landers said.

"This vote gives them a chance to be in control," she said.

Quiet-study policy source of friction in residence halls

TONYA BOBBITT
Collegian

Stacy Weager said she enjoys living in Putnam Hall, but she would like to change the hall's 24-hour quiet-study policy.

"I feel that we should be able to have at least two hours a week that we can be louder than usual," Weager, freshman in information systems, said.

"We need a time to release our stress, and it is hard when you have to be quiet 24 hours. We can barely even laugh without getting in trouble."

Heidi Nelson, a resident of Van Zile Hall, said she has the opposite problem.

"There is always a group of people standing outside my door late at night," Nelson, sophomore in kinesology, said.

"I wish they would go inside their rooms and close their doors so this doesn't bother other people," she said.

Hall residents may experience some confusion when deciding where to start if they have a problem.

There is no one chain of command to follow, Shah Hasan, assistant director of housing for residence life, said.

However, there are a few helpful hints that can help you begin solving your problem or possibly speed up the process, Hasan said.

Hasan stressed certain steps can make the problem-solving process easier, but at any

▶POLICE REPORT POSSIBLE SUSPECTS IN RAPE CASE

K-State Police are continuing the investigation into the rape of a K-State student at Smurthwaite House Monday morning.

"We have had a couple of people report possible suspects," Capt. Robert Mellgren said. "We have nothing verified."

Mellgren said the K-State Police are asking for help from the Riley County Police Department. They are looking into similarities between this case and a rape that occurred on Aug. 22 east of campus on Vattier Street.

RCPD Capt. Allen Raynor said they will be looking into the possibility that both rapes were committed by the same person.

▶UNIVERSITY ENROLLMENT PREDICTIONS COME TRUE

Predictions of K-State enrollment figures for new students made last year were correct, as the number has increased by 199 new students, for a total of 5,208, including freshmen and transfer students.

"We were right on the money," said Pat Bosco, associate vice president of institutional advancement and dean of student life. "With the help of faculty, staff, and the patience of students, we've done a fairly good job of accommodating new student growth."

The increase from last year reflects the friendly, welcoming image of K-State where students can receive a quality education, he said.

While the enrollment figures for the new students are up, the overall enrollment figures for this semester are down.

Last fall's total enrollment for K-State was 20,050 and has decreased to 19,906 this fall.

Registrar Don Foster said low overall enrollment figures this fall are partially because of K-State's 1994 graduating class of 4,177 members, the largest class ever.

The University is waiting for a detailed analysis of what the new freshman and transfer classes for this year look like before they predict next year's figures, Bosco said.

"We know we're going to project an increase once again in new students but are waiting for a detailed analysis to accurately predict," Bosco said.

The increase of the new freshman class was a healthy one for K-State, Bosco said. Not only is the new freshman class larger than last year, but it also has more of the state's top scholars, he said.

More than one-third of the spring's top Kansas high-school graduates came to K-State this fall. Among the new freshman students, 161 ranked first in their graduating class, and 73 ranked second.

"We're very pleased not only with the quantity, but the quality of the new students," Bosco said.

▶ DECADE-LONG K-STATE EMPLOYEE WAS LOYAL, TRUE-HEARTED COLLEAGUE

A 10-year K-State employee died Monday at his residence in Manhattan after an extended illness.

Augusta Keith Linley was employed with the Department of Veterinary Medicine at the beginning of his career at K-State and later as cashier for Housing and Dining Services.

Linley was involved in Juneteenth, a nation-wide commemoration of the black culture. He was also involved with the African American Male symposium, a celebration of the black male.

He practiced as an ordained minister at his church, Fellowship Temple, and sang in the church choir and for weddings.

Linley was always giving, Charlotte Self, Linley's friend, said.

"Everybody will remember Keith as a very loyal friend," Self said. "He truly was a genuine, true-hearted, giving person."

Bob Burgess, assistant director of Housing and Dining Services, said Linley dealt directly with the public and could easily strike up a conversation.

"Keith was a very open and caring person," Burgess said.

The funeral will be at 10 a.m. Saturday at the Irvin-Parkview Funeral Home in Manhattan. Burial will follow at the Sunrise Cemetery in Manhattan.

Friends can show respect to the family and deceased from 7 to 9 p.m. Friday at the funeral home.

▶ STOLEN SCULPTURE ANGERS ARTIST, NOT FIRST THEFT FROM HIS PORTFOLIO

A sculpture was stolen on Saturday, Sept. 17, from the lawn outside West Stadium.

The sculpture was a teardrop-shaped stone about 2 feet in length. It belonged to Harry Anderson, graduate student in sculpture.

"It was actually a piece of a sculpture," Anderson said.

Anderson said he was upset about the theft because the sculpture was supposed to go to a show in Lawrence this Saturday.

"I don't think people always realize what they're doing," he said. "They're taking more than just a piece of stone."

This is not the first time this has happened, Anderson said.

"I had parts of a piece stolen last year, and I had to remake them."

Anderson said he is not terribly angry about the theft, and he is working on a replacement for the piece.

"It was a big loss for me," he said. "I may not have time to finish the new piece, but that's part of the risk of storing my work out on the lawn."

Anderson said another piece was damaged that night. K-State Police are investigating the theft.

▶ UNION INVITES STUDENTS TO FILL VACUUM LEFT BY FARRELL CONSTRUCTION

The K-State Union has extended an invitation for all students to use its facilities for studying.

Jack Sills, Union director, said the purpose of the invitation is to encourage students to use the Union's facilities who would otherwise use the library.

"Because Farrell Library has lost almost 600 study spaces due to construction, we want to offer the Union as an alternative to those who don't have a chair to study on," Sills said.

Areas in the Union available for studying include the Stateroom, the Union Station, second-floor couch clusters and small areas on the ground and first floors.

Union Station manager Teto Henderson said the Union Station, which can occupy 250 people, is open until 11 p.m. Sunday through Thursday and until 1 a.m. Friday and Saturday.

"During finals week, we are open 24 hours, so we're accustomed to large groups of studiers and have never had noise problems before," Henderson said.

Sills said amendments to the Union hours will be considered if the need arises.

"If you think the Union is not for studying, you're wrong," Sills said. "It's for everything, and we welcome everyone."

Students voice campus woes

TRINA HOLMES

Parking problems, athletic conference changes and the lack of ethnic studies programs were some concerns students voiced at a University forum on Wednesday.

The forum, sponsored by Mortar Board, gave about 50 students the opportunity to ask eight University officials questions and receive an immediate response.

Panel members were Nelson Britt, director of the Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art; Carla Jones, assistant dean of student life; James Epps, senior associate director of intercollegiate athletics; James Coffman, provost; Jon Wefald, president; Robert Krause, vice president for institutional advancement; Tom Rawson, vice president for administration and finance; and Mordean Taylor-Archer, assistant provost for multicultural affairs.

Rawson said the problem of inadequate bike lanes and racks may be solved by the annexation of K-State by the city of Manhattan.

He said a six-year budget proposal is being drawn up to give to the city commission on Oct. 15, detailing how the tax money should be spent.

"It will include some items like bike racks and bike lanes — improvements that will be mutually beneficial to the University and the city of Manhattan," Rawson said.

Krause said that in order for the proposal to be effective, students must take the initiative and vote.

"We encourage students living in the residence halls, who have the opportunity to become involved in the government of Manhattan, to register to vote," Krause said.

Rawson also said that $5,000 from the University's limited contingency fund has been allocated for the bicycle problem.

He said that the division of public safety and Student Senate are being asked to donate matching amounts, so possibly 500 or more parking places may be added in order to make the campus more biker friendly.

As for the automobile-parking situation, Rawson said four scenarios are being researched to determine which option is the most feasible.

Rawson said the University has the option of doing nothing or restricting the sale of parking permits for those who live a specific number of blocks away from campus or restricting them by student classification.

Building a parking garage that holds 1,200 cars, or implementing a campus shuttle system are other options, he said.

"The survey results should be available at the K-State's new police director prepared for anything

DOUG BASSETT
Collegian

The new director of the K-State Police department started his new beat Sept. 19.

Ronnie Grice, formerly the director of public safety at the University of Arkansas at Pine Bluff, made his first trip to Kansas when he moved to Manhattan last week.

"The closest I have ever been to Kansas is Kansas City, Mo.," Grice said.

He is taking the place of John McAuliffe, who recently resigned.

Grice

Grice said he has come prepared to handle the duties of police director.

"I believe that my past experience has really prepared me for almost anything that you can throw in front of me," Grice said.

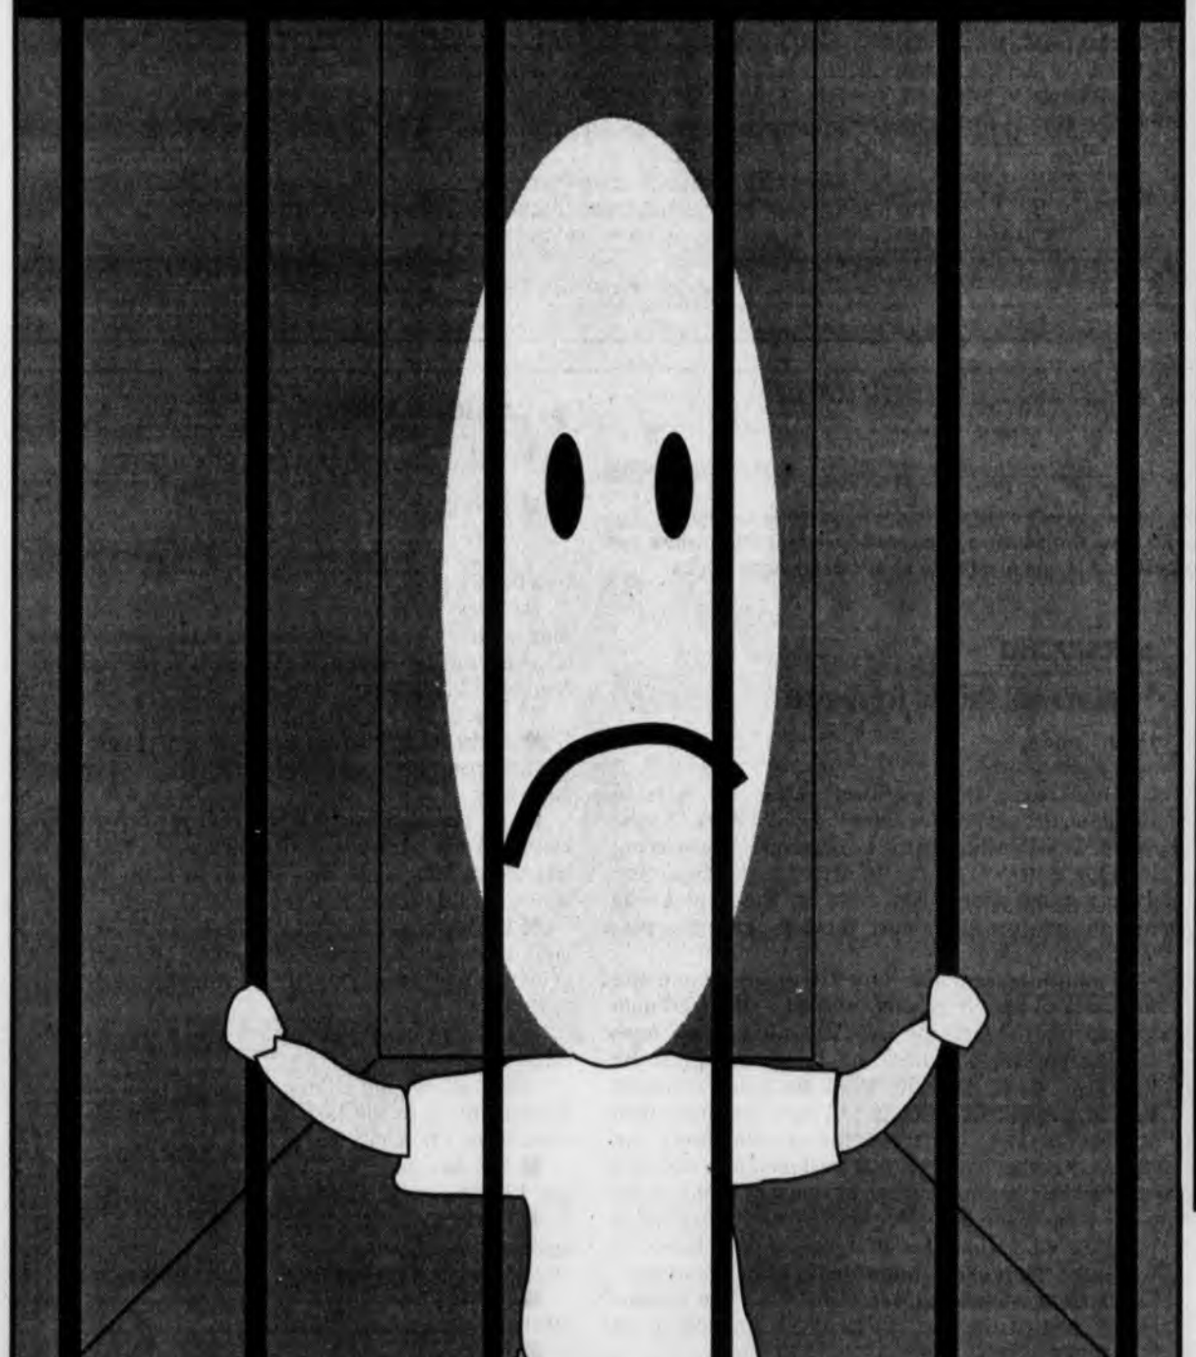
When he began at the University of Arkansas, Grice said the entire university was in trouble.

"When I went in, the whole institution was in turmoil," Grice said. "The school had a 3.6 or 3.7 million dollar deficit, and the public safety director and one of his investigators had been fired," he said.

In 1992, there had been a shooting incident that involved an officer and a nonstudent, Grice said.

"I had to go in and take not only a department but an entire institution, and completely restructure it," he said.

In 1993, Pine Bluff had only two serious crimes, both robberies, he said.



Grice has a bachelor's degree in political science/pre-law from the University of Arkansas at Pine Bluff.

Grice also has been working on a master's degree in criminal justice

IN OUR OPINION

By the Collegian Editorial Board

Collegian tries to report crimes fairly

The Collegian tries to publish as much information as possible about a crime.

Because of recent events and the ensuing discussions that have occurred, we at the Collegian feel it is time for an explanation of our coverage of crimes.

It is our policy to report perpetrators and crimes as accurately as we can.

We include every bit of information given to us that we can confirm.

When rapes occur, we will publish arrested suspects, but we will not publish a victim's name, unless we are strongly encouraged by the victim.

Part of our reporting involves a physical description of the person or persons involved in committing the crime.

We publish the most detailed description available. A typical description would include sex, height, weight, any identifying marks (like tattoos and scars), hair, eye and skin color.

Upon availability, we will publish a police composite to help our readers identify a suspect. The circulation of a composite usually indicates that the person is still loose to possibly commit another crime.

We list all of these traits — not to be racist, sexist or discriminatory.

We list them to inform. We list them to keep our readers informed and educated. We list them as part of our effort to prevent another attack. We list them to help keep our readers safe.

TOLES

The good held back

Welcome to K-State, where even Jesus Christ would be crucified, just by criticizing professors.

Because of some glitches in writing and copy editing last week, a column titled "Can't Write, but Can Get a College Degree" had some glaring errors in grammar.

Such oversights wouldn't be so painful if the column hadn't focused on the importance of language skills, and how K-State and other universities have diminished their emphasis on them.

SCOTT ALLEN MILLER

The implicit and explicit message in letters written by a professor and students responding to that column was that one has no business criticizing the educational status quo unless that person (and his editor) is himself perfect.

Such attitudes are indicative of a larger problem.

The educational system has become such a clique that anyone outside it has no credibility with anyone within it. This attitude of "us over them" is known as elitism.

An anecdote, related to me recently, told how K-State political-science students didn't know the answer when asked the year the Declaration of Independence was signed. This was the same group that also thought Karl Marx was the father of capitalism.

I'll bet they vote, too.

Everyone makes mistakes. It's human. It's forgivable. No one can know everything. But if an outsider challenges the educational establishment, he better dot his i's, cross his t's and be perfect or face wholesale dismissal.

It is social heresy to assert that a college education has become a mediocre commodity available to anyone with the ability to pay and follow the rules. The truth hurts. The fact that college grads often can't read, write and spell and don't know as much as alumni from years ago, seems to faze no one in the educational elite or even the students.

Students dissatisfied with the quality of modern college education are told to shut up unless they can do better. Fellow students resent students who excel. Students who want more out of a class learn either to shut up and act stupid, quit coming to class, or just keep their misgivings to themselves. They dare not make anyone look bad by pursuing a higher standard.

Professors dissatisfied with the performance of students and fellow colleagues fall into a spiral of silence.They're told not to make other instructors, especially those with seniority, look bad. They're told they're too strict. They're told to get along or get out. They dare not make anyone look bad by setting a better example.

If you still think college education doesn't need a serious overhaul, ponder a few questions.

The military is by no means perfect, but would you want the same people who set standards for educational paradigms and achievements running the U.S. Armed Forces?

Would our nation be secure in the hands of the same people who decided that effort equals achievement, that smart and not-as-smart students should be ignored in favor of average students, and that students should be passed on whether they master necessary skills and concepts in order to placate tuition-paying parents?

If you answer no to these questions, consider one last idea. If the military couldn't defeat its enemies by adopting today's educational standards, these standards will never vanquish the common enemy of ignorance.

Ignorance will remain the status quo as long as the educational leadership is controlled by complacent elitists who pander to mediocrity. You probably know a few.

Hey mister, are you wearing briefs?

My youngest son, Dustin, recently started the first grade, which is traditionally considered the beginning of one's education.

BRAD SEABOURN

Of course, any parent will tell you that a child's school years come only if you are fortunate enough to survive the infant/toddler years, which normally include such spectacular events as: baby burp down the back of your neck; unnatural encounters with used, ozone-depleting, radioactive, disposable infant diapers that produce toxins, which if inhaled will cause immediate loss of consciousness and ultimately DEATH; and lastly, tornadic infant feeding frenzies that result in a complete redecoration of the dining-room walls in lovely color-coordinated baby food groups such as Strained Peas with Cheese Chunks and Creamed Corn with Turkey Parts (my favorite is Quasi-Mashed Mixed Vegetables, which, if given sufficient time and enough used-diaper toxins will grow beautiful, multi-colored molds on the wall that eventually make cleaning and painting unnecessary).

Graduating kindergarten is indeed an educational milestone, and in keeping with the solemnity of this occurrence, my son apparently feels it is no longer necessary to wear underwear to school. In fact, he has gone so far as to QUESTION the need for wearing underwear, which presents parents, such as myself, with a dilemma not unlike trying to solve complex differential equations (and you thought after taking calculus you would never use it again, HA!).

You may recall President Clinton was asked on national TV whether he wore briefs or boxers, and in keeping with this media trend my son has made it his conversational staple to ask total strangers (usually male) if they are wearing underwear and occasionally, when his first-grade neurons spark in the right sequence, what TYPE of underwear they are wearing, briefs or boxers.

For example, this recent encounter occurred in the grocery store:

Total Stranger: Hello young man. And how are you today?

Dustin: I'mfinedoyouwearunderwear?

Total Stranger: WHAT?

Dustin: I said, 'Do you wear UNDERWEAR?' I'm in the first grade and I don't wear underwear. What kind of underwear do you wear?

Total Stranger: HEY, WHOSE KID IS THIS? POLICE! POLICE!

Like any good father, I immediately stepped forward and identified the kid as belonging to the woman in the next aisle (my wife).

So, in order to provide my son with a well-rounded underwear education, the long and short of it in other words, I offer the following:

A Glossary of Men's Undergarment Terms

Athletic Supporter: a holster-like device worn by fleeing male parents whose children have just confronted a total stranger with the question, "Do you wear underwear?"

Boxer Shorts: an unrestrictive, free-style form of undergarment frequently worn by old men and total strangers in grocery stores.

Briefs: a smaller, more restrictive version of boxer shorts; actually, these are the REMNANTS of boxer shorts worn by fathers of children who ask delicate, personal questions of total strangers in grocery stores, and which are manufactured by the total stranger grabbing the father's shorts and raising them above the father's head with great force.

Bikini Briefs: an even smaller, more highly restrictive remnant of boxer shorts manufactured with the use of even GREATER force (see Briefs).

Naked: a term indicating without clothing, as in, "Dustin take a bath WITHOUT CLOTHING!"

Nekkid: Peach County, Georgia, dialect for naked.

Buck Nekkid: a highly excited state of nekkid as in, "Look, Homer, look, that woman is BUCK NEKKID!"

I explained all of this to my son, and I finally think I got through to him.

"Dad, do YOU wear underwear?"

No, Dustin, I don't.

"Why"

Well ... trips to the grocery store just seem to go better that way.

Brad Seabourn is a graduate student in grain science.

▶ RAPE

Crime was mislabeled

Dear Editor,

What rape? The front page article in the 9/20 Collegian disgusted me! Although I feel sorry for the victim, or whatever she is, rape is a very serious accusation, and it should not be confused with burglary or assault. If no rape occurred, then how can the campus police and the Collegian justify calling it a rape? Using the word "rape" to describe someone breaking into the Smurthwaite House takes away from the impact and the seriousness of the word "rape". Doing this hurts all victims of the actual crime of rape, even if it does give you a good front page article.

▶ PARKING

Solution not fair to freshmen

Dear Editor,

Concerning the "parking game" by Kristin Brighton, the idea of bus shuttling could work. As she stated, bus shuttling helps to decongest the parking lots, the Berlin Wall pass and avoids having more drivers in the winter. The entire proposed plan was well thought out and almost flawless. Let me repeat — almost.

It is unclear to me why Brighton chose the freshmen to bar. A possible reason is the freshman student body, being the largest, would mean more campus parking for those not lucky enough to be freshmen. As of Aug. 30, 1994, the count recorded with the registrar's office is 353 more freshmen than seniors, making the freshman student body the largest. Another reason is that freshmen may not own as many cars considering age or finances. If this is the case, I understand the logic of freshman vehicles being barred. I admit though, I happen to be biased to this idea because I happen to be a freshman. Freshmen are attending school for the same reasons as the rest of the student body — to receive an education.

Yes, the "parking game" calls for a solution. Bus shuttling is a good system proven to work by Oklahoma University and other colleges. A good approach of who gets shuttled might be Brighton's idea of "dangling cheaper parking costs" or have each grade level give up a certain amount of permits to ensure fairness. Of course, there are the two old fashioned ways, volunteers and first come first served.

Nebraska does well, year after year

Dear Editor,

It seems as though Mr. Simmons is quite the Big Red basher.

Here are some facts on Nebraska football that he may want to look at because apparently he was out of the country when Colorado played mighty Northeast Louisiana on Sept. 3.

The facts:

- Nebraska's schedule includes seven bowl games from 1993. Colorado and Oklahoma only have five.
- In response to Mr. Simmons' question, Nebraska has plenty to prove by playing Pacific. If NU scores 100 points, they should be #1 in the polls again. Isn't that how polls work?
- Of NU's seven consecutive bowl losses, four were to eventual national champions: Florida State (1993), Georgia Tech (1991), and Miami (1989), (198?)

It's fun to bash Nebraska football, isn't it Mr. Simmons?

After all, we are talking about the most winning football team in the last 30 years. Here are some more facts, Mr. Simmons:

- NU has gone to 25 consecutive bowl games and 13 consecutive games on New Year's Day.
- In the last 20 years, NU has played 84 games against Top 20 teams (an average of four per season) and 45 games were against teams in the Top 10.
- NU has been in the AP poll every week since 1981—206 consecutive weeks.
- And most importantly, NU leads the nation in first team academic all-Americans in football with 49.

You better mark Oct. 29 on your calender, Mr. Simmons.

It could be a hostile environment for those Brave Buffaloes on Homecoming and the 200th consecutive sellout at Memorial Stadium in Lincoln.

end of the fall semester, so we'll be able to proceed with whichever option we choose then," Rawson said.

"If we choose to build a parking garage, it will probably take a couple of years to get through all the bureaucracy and actually get it built.

"If we choose the shuttle option, it will take less time and can probably be implemented within a year."

Another question was raised about what effects the addition of four Texas schools to K-State's athletic conference will have on K-State's athletic programs.

Epps said the addition of Baylor University, Texas University, Texas A&M and Texas Tech will strengthen the conference, enhance the level of competition and give K-State greater latitude in adding women's sports.

"The merge of the four Texas schools will add prestige to the conference because of the prestige of the schools," Epps said.

Wefald said he couldn't think of any drawbacks to the conference change.

"Being a part of the Big 12 is probably the most important athletic happening that's ever taken place at Kansas State University," Wefald said.

Questions were also raised about the lack of ethnic studies programs at the University.

Coffman said that the University is currently involved with two projects designed to specifically address this issue.

Coffman said one project is based in the Kansas Board of Regents system and includes a system-wide conference dealing with curriculum development.

The other deals with revamping the proposal that was submitted to Faculty Senate last year and recommends implementing the diversity-overlay course as a curriculum change.

Although this proposal was not approved by Faculty Senate, Coffman said it was not dropped.

"Diversity is going to be rethought and mainstreamed in a broad variety of courses," Coffman said.

Wefald added that the hiring of nine African-American faculty members, 10 African-American staff members — including the new police chief — two Hispanics and two Native Americans show the University's attempts to diversify itself.

"There are five themes guiding K-State enhancement, and promoting diversity is one of them," Wefald said.

Grice likes students from the University of Arkansas in Little Rock. He did his police training at the Arkansas Law Enforcement Training Academy at Camden, Ark.

"I am a people person, but I am even more a student person," Grice said.

"I always have a pair of black sneakers under my desk," he said. "I get up and walk campus at least twice."

For now, Grice said he is conducting about a two-week evaluation of K-State to get a feel for what needs to be done.

FORMER KSU COACH HAS HEART ATTACK

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) — Ohio State assistant basketball coach Ken Turner had a heart attack while jogging, a university spokesman said. A hospital spokesman said Turner, 48, was in critical condition at Grant Medical Center. Turner joined the Ohio State staff June 24 after spending four years as assistant coach at K-State.

Receiver waiting for opportunity

WESS HUDELSON
Collegian

Kevin Lockett hasn't had a chance to make a big play this season, but that doesn't frustrate him.

After two games, Lockett has snared only four passes for 31 yards.

Tyson Schwieger scorched the Rice secondary for 137 yards on 10 catches last Saturday in K-State's 27-18 victory.

"We throw to the open receiver, and Tyson (Schwieger) has been getting open," Lockett said. "I haven't been the open receiver."

However, on occasion, Lockett likes to let quarterback Chad May know he is open.

"I tell him I'm open after every play in the huddle," Lockett said. "Chad just tells me, 'Shut up — no you weren't' and calls the next play."

Lockett was limited to two catches for 17 yards against Rice but said he is being patient.

"I didn't expect to come out and do what I did last year right off," Lockett said.

Last season, after two games, Lockett had collected 11 catches for 149 yards.

With last year's performance, Lockett grabbed the attention of opposing defensive backs as well.

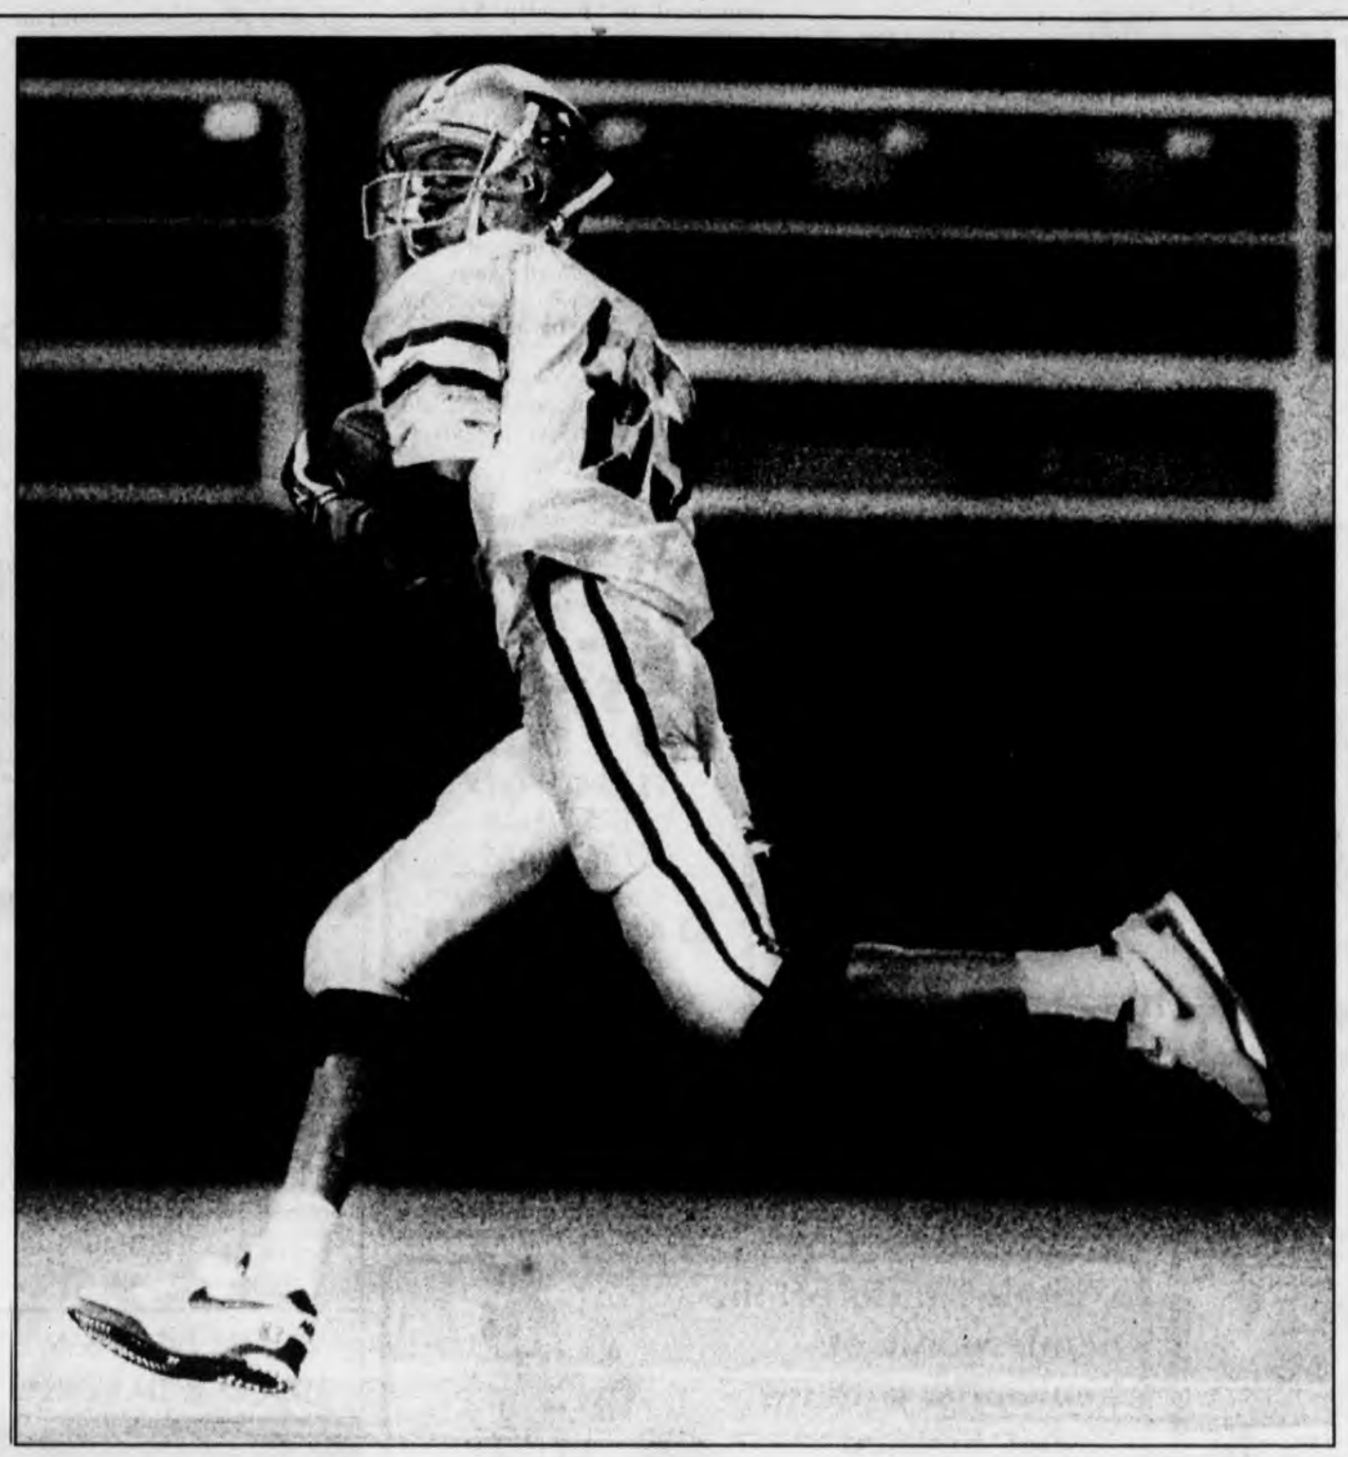
"I'm not sure that teams are specifically focusing on me, but the d-backs we have played aren't exactly the worst in the nation," Lockett said. "They have played all of us well."

Lockett said the defenses he has faced this year have forced K-State's offense to throw shorter passes.

"We've had to run a lot of underneath pass routes," Lockett said. "I like to go for the big play, and I think Chad likes to throw me the deep ball."

May said Lockett's performance has been fine this year.

"Tyson has caught more passes than Kevin, but I don't think it's anything that Tyson has done special. It's just what the defense gives us," May said. "I don't go out on the field and say 'I'm going to throw to Kevin on this play and Tyson on this play.'"



Wide receivers have other responsibilities besides catching the football, Lockett said. Lockett was involved in a few minor shoving matches while blocking during last Saturday's game.

"Coach always tells us if we're not catching the ball, we need to be doing something, so I worked on blocking over the summer," Lockett said. "Those type of things happen on almost every play out there."

Last season against Minnesota (K-State's Saturday opponent), Lockett had two receptions for 59 yards and a touchdown. K-State defeated the Golden Gophers 30-25 in an offensive shoot-out.

Lockett said he is excited about the opportunity to play Minnesota again.

"I'm hoping this will be the game where I come out of my shell," he said.

Kevin Lockett sprints for the end zone against Minnesota last season. Lockett caught two passes for 59 yards including a touchdown grab in the 1993 contest.

Walden, Gibbs walking tightrope

Some random thoughts for you all to ponder while you're sitting in class ...

■ Is anyone else placing bets on which Big Eight football coach will be the first to get the axe this year? It's a close one between Iowa State's Jim Walden and Oklahoma's Gary Gibbs, but I'm putting my money on Walden.

Hey, Jim is a great guy and has some of the best quotes in the conference, but for his sake and the sake of the program, I think there needs to be a change, now.

Being an Iowa girl, born and raised, it kills me to watch the Cyclones get humiliated every weekend by teams like Western Michigan and Northern Iowa.

As Walden himself said, "This team continues to mentally shoot itself in the foot," prompting my ever-sensitive boyfriend to respond, "When they start their conference games, they'll mentally shoot themselves in the head. Hee hee hee." I'm not amused.

As for OU's Gibbs — let's put it this way. If the Sooners lose this year's Red River War against Texas, Barry Switzer may be headed back to Norman. I can dream, can't I?

■ Does anyone else around here miss baseball at all, or am I the only one willing to admit it? Things are getting bad enough that I've resorted to watching old videotapes of last year's Phillies' games to help me deal with my John Kruk withdrawal.

■ The three little letters that scare K-State sports writers the most lately — DUI.

■ This year marks the 25th anniversary of Monday Night Football, and whoa Nellie, how things have changed.

Instead of viewers hearing Howard Cosell's familiar twang introducing each show, MNF fans like my 12-year-old brother get ready for some football by playing air guitar with Hank Williams Jr. and all his rowdy friends.

Personally, I miss the good old days that included Cosell and Dandy Don Meredith up in the booth.

NICOLE POELL

The best MNF Meredith moment? It had to be during a game between the Houston Oilers and Miami Dolphins. The ABC camera zoomed in on an apparently "sleeping" fan in the stands, only to capture him open his eyes and flip millions of viewers the bird.

What was Don's response up in the booth? "They're No. 1."

■ So, what have a couple of major league baseball players been doing during their summer vacations? Well, Brian McRae went back to school to do a little broadcasting work at KU — I was impressed.

The other most noteworthy activity is a laugher. Dodgers' catcher Mike Piazza spent some of his free time walking Sally Spectra down the aisle on the daytime soap opera,

The Bold and the Beautiful. Mike, what drug are you on? Even Tommy Lasorda is cuter than Sally.

■ How in the world could Sports Illustrated omit George Brett and Barry Switzer from its cheesy "40 Most Influential Sports Figures" feature?

I mean, if not for his tremendous talent on the baseball field, George should have at least been included for surviving both the notorious pine-tar incident, as well as his well-publicized hemorrhoid attack during the 1980 World Series.

And Barry. Not only did he perfect the wishbone and successfully feed the Oklahoma football monster, he and his Sooners were a primary factor in making college football and the Big Eight as exciting and popular as they are today.

■ You probably heard about the tragic demise of the Texas Tech mascot a few weekends ago. During its ceremonial victory lap after a Tech touchdown, the horse got spooked, ran headfirst into a wall and died.

The Wildcats' own Mike Ekeler might want to keep this in mind the next time he decides to do his pre-game head-butt into one of the advertisements along the stadium walls.

■ Not to beat a dead horse (whoops, sorry), but why did the baseball season have to end the one year when Cleveland had a legitimate shot at the World Series? Oh well, at least in Major League II they made it to the playoffs.

Williams filling void left by Preston's rib injury

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LAWRENCE — The Kansas Jayhawks will have a new leader Saturday when they take the field against University of Alabama-Birmingham.

Quarterback Mark Williams, a 6-foot-2, 175-pound junior transfer from Diablo Valley (Calif.) Junior College, was forced into starting action after Asheiki Preston suffered a fractured rib and punctured lung last weekend in the Jayhawks' loss to Texas Christian University.

Originally, Coach Glen Mason planned to redshirt Williams while Preston completed his senior season, giving Williams an opportunity to start for two years.

But Preston will be out at least until Oct. 6, so Williams got the starting call to action.

He didn't seemed fazed by the assignment.

"The preparation isn't that different," Williams said Wednesday. "I just have to prepare to be out there after the kickoff. But there's really no difference."

While at Diablo Valley, Williams ran the run-and-shoot offense. He said he thinks that translates well to the Kansas offense.

"We run a lot of roll out passes, throwing on the run," he said. "It's similar to what we did in junior college."

Williams' path to Lawrence went through Los Angeles.

"UCLA had recruiting films of me," Williams said. "They got their quarterback situation settled, so they sent films of me to KU. I'm glad they did."

Williams threw 32 touchdowns in junior college, while Kansas has only thrown 31 touchdowns so far in the 1990s. But don't expect Kansas to open up the offense.

"They've simplified (the offense) a little," Williams said. "I won't have to make so many reads."

One of Williams' teammates has another idea of how to make things easier for the first start.

"We're going to keep guys out of his face, give him some time to throw the football," senior guard Hessley Hempstead said.

Mason said he likes the skills Williams brings to the 2-1 Jayhawks offense.

"He has a strong arm, he runs the option well and, what I like most about him, he's tough," the coach said.

Trainers spending long hours with athletes

CRESTON KUENZI
Collegian

There's a group of people that put in many hours at KSU stadium.

No, it isn't the football players. It's the sports medicine department.

"We put in anywhere from 30 to 40 hours a week plus a full class load," Brent Unruh, head student trainer and a senior in kinesiology, said. "It's hard, but I'm here because this is what I want to do for my career."

Claudette Ferguson, student trainer and a major in kinesiology, had another complaint besides the long hours.

"What I don't like is not actually being able to see the games, from a combination of not being able to see over the players and having to work," she said.

Ron Thomas, director of sports medicine, said the department entails many different people and a wide variety of tasks.

"The sports medicine department consists of our doctors, staff trainers, and student trainers," he said. "Sports medicine is a coverall term that represents everything from training to rehabilitation to the prevention of injuries for all of the intercollegiate sports."

Thomas said the student trainers are valuable to the football team.

"It's hard to be everywhere at once when 100 guys are spread out over the field," he said. "So, we send students with all of the groups and put our staff trainers at centralized locations."

Thomas said not just anybody can be a student trainer.

"We select upperclassmen majoring in fields associated with athletic training," he said.

Unruh said the best part about being a trainer is the atmosphere.

"Just being around athletics is great," he said. "If you like sports, you'll like this job."

However, Ferguson said the job is difficult in many aspects.

"There's a lot of knowledge you need to have in this field, so this is basically a learning experience," she said. "During practice, we're there if someone gets hurt, to treat and evaluate injuries."

Thomas said the student trainers' duties go beyond what they do on the field.

"The student trainers work with the players during treatment and rehabilitation sessions with the staff overseeing," he said.

Thomas said they're prepared if a serious injury does occur.

"If an emergency does happen, it's important that we work together because it takes a team to stabilize a person."

Club teams to tangle with KU

WESS HUDELSON
Collegian

The men's and women's soccer teams have a busy weekend ahead of them.

Both teams face the Kansas Jayhawks. The men take on KU at 2 p.m. Saturday. The women play the Jayhawks at 11 a.m. Sunday at Anneberg Park.

It will be the first contest of the year for the women's team.

Women's coach Heather Hamilton said the team added some players in the off season to make improvements.

"Last year we had some holes, but we added some skilled players that have really added some strength to the team," Hamilton said.

For the first time this year, both squads have the opportunity to participate in a national-championship tournament.

"That seems to make the games more important this year," Hamilton said.

The men's team will then hit the road on Sunday bound for Norman, Okla., to play Oklahoma.

The men have compiled a 2-0-1 record thus far this season, but starter Bart Vance said the important games are still to come.

"If we want to have a chance to go to nationals, we have to beat KU and Oklahoma," Vance said.

The men's and women's teams will play every team in the Big Eight Conference this fall.

Public Enemy returns; album skips a beat

ANDREW TOMB

The return of Public Enemy conjures up thoughts of the band's controversial past — the accusations of anti-semitism, racism and terrorism.

Their latest album still has the appearance of any older PE record, with Chuck D's lyrical assault still challenging the masses to higher consciousness, but the band seems to have missed a rung on the evolutionary ladder.

Public Enemy is still undoubtedly old school.

The latest record, while definitely more advanced than their debut, "Yo! Bum Rush the Show," still has not advanced beyond the ruttish assault on the senses' style of rap production.

Flavor Flav, the comedic relief in the middle of all this, seems to have lost his influence with the group, only taking the lead mike on two of the record's songs.

High points on the record are few and far between, coming on the radio and MTV, "Give it Up" and Flav's "Aintnuttin Buttersong."

DJ Terminator X seems to just be in a rut, refusing to give up or expand on the PE trademark 'funky drummer' beat.

It was cool on "It Takes a Nation of Millions to Hold Us Back." Now it just gives me a headache.

It's almost as if the group has been isolated from the rest of society since "Fear of a Black Planet," and has only had the Nation of Islam and the KKK to get news reports from.

Orgasm easier to reach with the help of Counseling Services

Dear Cassandra,

I've never discussed this with anyone besides my girlfriend; I just hope you treat my question as seriously as I do.

I am an undergraduate in my mid-thirties. When I was in my teens and early twenties, like most males, my early sexual experiences found me consciously trying to avoid ejaculating too soon. I later seemed to gain a measure of control and was able to consistently postpone my climax until both my girlfriend and I could enjoy simultaneous, explosive orgasms. Sex was great, and for the most part, still is. The problem is that I'm finding it generally difficult to reach orgasm now. Probably a quarter of the time I'm unable to come at all, and at least half of the time, it takes an uncomfortable length of time, leaving me totally exhausted, sweaty, and my girlfriend occasionally sore. She says I shouldn't worry about not coming, but I do.

Cassandra, I know it's not an erection problem, but it's as though the sensitive nerve endings around the glans area have been rubbed numb. It's frustrating and leaves me very unfulfilled.

I love and respect my girlfriend and would not want to cheat on her nor could I be happy without her.

Signed,
Coming of Age

Dear Coming of Age,

Occasional difficulty with orgasm is not always a sign of a sexual problem.

If you've been experiencing sexual problems for some time, you should see a physician to rule out possible biological causes. If no medical reason can be identified, you should seek out a counselor or a psychologist with expertise in the area of human sexuality.

The University Counseling Services can give you general information and appropriate referrals.

Although your situation is fairly uncommon, it's not incurable. Don't hesitate to seek help and get it taken care of.

Board reviews vo-tech

DOUG BASSETT
Collegian

Whether Manhattan Area Technical Center will become a technical college in the near future was one of the subjects discussed at the Manhattan-Ogden Unified School District 383 school board meeting yesterday.

The proposed plan by Bill Berry, the director of the MATC, was to provide the school board with some ideas of how the plan to turn the technical center into a technical college would be implemented.

Berry said the year the school could be completely converted to a technical college is 1996.

The MATC is just looking to get permission from the board to continue gathering information for the proposed conversion, Duane Dunn, MATC Assistant Director, said.

The school board passed the motion to grant the MATC to continue its information gathering by a vote of four to zero.

The school board also passed a weapons policy that states that any student who is caught on school grounds with a weapon of any kind will be expelled for one year, Associate Superintendent Dave Mickey said.

The policy will make provisions to this rule on a case-to-case basis.

The board also appointed a new member to the board by a ballot vote. The ballot had seven names of people who had sent in letters of interest to the board. The members had looked the letters over to determine who was qualified for the job.

All the members that were present said they were very impressed with all of the letters that had been received.

The board selected Debbie Nuss as the new board member. Superintendent Dan Yunk told Nuss that in order for her to be able to sit on the board at the next meeting, she will have to be sworn in, and other procedures would have to be completed first.

▶ HUMAN RESOURCES

Discrimination reviewed at local level

JENNIFER PETERSON
Collegian

All discrimination complaints filed by K-State employees will now be handled by Manhattan's Human Rights and Services board.

Manhattan Human Rights and Services Board voted unanimously to approve an investigative-services contract between the Manhattan Human Rights and Services Board and the Kansas Human Rights Commission.

The contract will allow the Manhattan Human Rights and Services Board to settle and review all local employment discrimination cases.

Currently, the cases that do not deal specifically with Manhattan go to the state level.

The Kansas Human Rights Commission is overloaded and backlogged with employee discrimination cases, Cornell Mayfield, Manhattan director of human resources, said.

Most of the cases that the state will send to Manhattan deal with the University, Mayfield said.

"We have no jurisdiction over K-State currently, but we will under the agreement," Mayfield said.

Under the new agreement, Manhattan's board will probably see cases from Ogden, Junction City and Wamego because they do not have a human rights and services board, he said.

Manhattan will receive $600 from the state for each employment discrimination case it takes, Mayfield said.

"They are going to give us money for something we've been doing anyway," Mayfield said.

The $600 will go back into the city funds, probably into the Department of Human Services budget, he said.

"We're going to save the state a lot of money on transportation and other expenses, and it will take less time to settle the cases," Mayfield said.

Manhattan residents were concerned that even with the new agreement, settlements would still take a long time.

"If you're going to be getting $600 from the state, you better be doing your job," Ruby Jones, Manhattan resident, said.

It is in the best interest of the Manhattan community to handle these cases at this level rather than going to the state for six to eight months, Terry Van Meter, chairperson of the Human Rights and Services Board, said.

"The members of the Board are serious about human rights," he said.

CLASSIFIED DIRECTORY

TIPS FOR WRITING A CLASSIFIED AD

Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.

Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.

CATEGORIES

To help you find what you are looking for, the classified ads have been arranged by category and sub-category. All categories are marked by one of the large images, and sub-categories are preceded by a number designation.

WE DO NOT USE PHONE NUMBERS OR LAST NAMES IN PERSONALS.

Staff can help mediate students disputes

time a student can file a University report against another student, consult with their hall directors or talk to Housing and Dining.

Hasan said one thing a student can do is approach the other student and try and work the problem out.

This is important, he said, because the problem may be resolved without involving staff or Housing and Dining.

"It is considerate and respectful to try and communicate with the other person," Hasan said, "because most of the time, it is just miscommunication."

On every floor of the halls, there is an RA (residence assistant) or an SA (staff assistant). These people are the first to get involved with students' complaints, he said.

If the problem persists, a good thing to do next is to get your staff involved. The staff person can help mediate discussion between you and the other student, Hasan said.

"If you can, it is always better if you can involve the staff because we are usually not there, and the staff is at the better advantage to help the student," Hasan said.

Shari Peterson, junior in animal science and SA in Ford Hall, said the most common problems are noise after quiet hours and unescorted men in the hall.

Peterson said it would be helpful if students would confront the person before they involved their staff because this makes things easier and creates responsibility within the community.

If the problem still has not been resolved, you can refile another University complaint or talk to your staff again. You will then fill out an incident report, and this will be sent to your hall director, Hasan said.

You will meet with the hall director and discuss the problem. Then the complaint will be sent to the Chief Justice of the judicial board, who is responsible for initiating a hearing, Hasan said.

A judicial board is made up of students from each residence hall. They hear cases of students who may have been in violation of a hall policy and decide if they are in violation or not, Hasan said.

If the student is found in violation, they are sanctioned. If the person is found not guilty, the next step is to appeal the board's decision to the Student Governing Association, Hasan said.

This is a good time to contact Housing and Dining. Again, you can contact Housing at any time, but it is easier to handle problems when they have been put through the proper channels, Hasan said.

Students may also experience problems with a staff member, Chuck Werring, director of Housing and Dining Services, said.

It helps when the student talks to them because usually it can be solved without involving outside help, Werring said.

"If a student is having a problem with staff, I hope the student could sit down and talk one-on-one with that person," he said.

Students can talk with their hall directors if the problem persists and then to Hasan if necessary, Werring said, but it is easier if you use the proper channels.

Some students do not realize that some rules exist because the University has to follow city ordinances, state laws or the Kansas Board of Regents, Werring said.

This makes it hard to change some of the existing rules, but it does not mean all rules are set in stone, he said. There are ways to go about amending some rules.

A good place to start is to work with your HGB and staff or the Association of Residence Halls to get organized, he said.

Werring said the student should make a recommendation to him about how to work out the problem.

"Students have a multitude of resources available to them to voice their concerns and opinions," Werring said. "These are available through staff, ARH and the student government groups."

"We want to create workable, positive solutions that meet the common good for the students."

Peterson admitted to hospital

LISA ELLIOTT
Collegian

Student Body President Jeff Peterson is receiving medical treatment at Wesley Medical Center in Wichita.

Peterson went to Wichita Tuesday for a doctor's appointment and was admitted that evening, Tricia Nolfi, coordinator of student activities, said.

Peterson is receiving medication for an infected pressure sore, or decubitus ulcer.

His treatment will include surgery and a period of recuperation of four to six weeks, Nolfi said.

The doctors are waiting until Peterson has regained some strength before the surgery. They should be able to perform the surgery in about two weeks, she said.

Following his recovery, Peterson will be able to slowly take over his former responsibilities, she said.

Brad Finkeldei, student body vice president, and Chief of Staff Mike Zamrzla are managing Peterson's campus schedule during his absence, Nolfi said.

Nolfi is working with Bernard Franklin, assistant dean of student life, to set up a communication system to keep Peterson informed of campus issues.

"I don't think students need to worry that he isn't in touch with what's going on on campus," Zamrzla said.

Peterson will be using a Zenith lap-top computer from Tom Rawson, vice president for administration and finance, Finkeldei said.

Finkeldei and Zamrzla are setting up time schedules for conference and one-on-one calls to Peterson.

"We have direct access to him," Finkeldei said.

"We are in contact with him at all times."

Student government is still looking into ways to pay for the communication system, Zamrzla said.

"We're looking into some areas in student life and the student body president's discretionary account," Zamrzla said.

Right now, they aren't sure how much they can spend or where the money will come from, but they are still working on it, he said.

▶ ESCORT SERVICES PROTECT K-STATE STUDENTS FROM ATTACKS

SERA TANK
Collegian

While no one is completely out of harm's way, there are certain precautions a person can take to reduce the risk of being attacked.

Scott Hagemeister, junior in criminal justice and the escort chair for Haymaker Hall, said the campus escort programs were born out of necessity.

"It all got started because some members of the residence hall community decided that campus — especially at night — wasn't too safe anymore," Hagemeister said.

Strong Complex, Haymaker and West halls are the only residence halls with escort services in them. Anyone who needs an escort can call those halls.

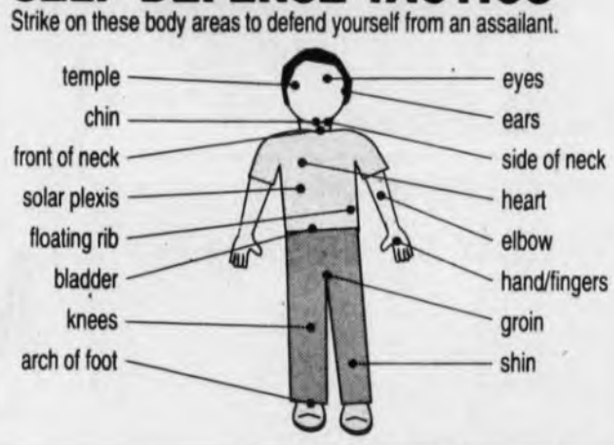
There is a screening and training process involved in becoming an escort to ensure the safety of the people who are being escorted, Karla Gebhardt, sophomore in psychology and chairwoman of the West Hall escort program, said.

The first step the escorts had to go through was an informational meeting, Gebhardt said.

"We let them know what's involved in becoming an escort and let them fill out an application," she said.

After the applications are reviewed, the escort committee chooses several candidates to interview.

"We have some of the people who have used the escort services there so they can tell us whether they would feel comfortable having this person as an escort," Gebhardt said.



There is also a background check for all the applicants.

The recent incident in Smurthwaite House has raised some concerns among students about security in the residence halls.

"It's kind of scary," Beth Baalman, freshman in environmental design and West Hall resident, said.

Moore Hall has developed a safety-and-security task force. The idea was conceptualized on the fifth floor of Moore Hall and began with seven women and two men.

"The residents are worrying to an extent," Joelene Keeney, freshman in human development, said.

"I feel safe, though," Keeney said.

The KSU and Riley County police departments have been unable to establish a definite link between the rape at Smurthwaite House and the rape earlier this semester on Vattier Street.

"We've had lots of people report seeing people who look similar to the composite," Capt. Robert Mellgren said.

No positive identification has been made. To the best of their knowledge, no two suspects have been the same, he said.

"We've had anywhere from 10 to 15 calls from different people who say they sighted someone who matched the composite," Mellgren said.

Mellgren said he thought a lot of education needed to be done as far as how to prevent a similar situation.

"There are a lot of good programs being done out there, but programs are only as good as they are adhered to," Mellgren said.

▶ CRISIS CENTER ASSISTS SEXUAL ASSAULT, RAPE VICTIMS

LISA ELLIOTT

Hysteria can be a damaging thing, because it can downplay a rape, a Crisis Center Inc. educator said Thursday.

The only way to combat rape and the hysteria it causes is education, Melissa Divine, Crisis Center group and community educator, said.

"Rape is a crime, like any other crime, with one exception — I think it's more devastating," Divine said.

When people are robbed, they don't hesitate to call the police, but in the event of rape, women often choose not to call, Divine said.

Divine said that if a woman is unwillingly penetrated by a finger, a penis or any object, it is legally considered rape.

Any degree of penetration is rape, Divine said. The incident does not have to include orgasm to be considered rape, she said.

Sexual battery is when a person is touched by another without consent, Divine said. Aggravated sexual battery is when a person is touched by another with any object such as an ink pen, she said.

There is no penetration involved in sexual battery, Divine said.

Rape and aggravated sexual battery are felony offenses. Sexual battery is a misdemeanor.

"I'd hate to say we live in a society that says if there was no penetration, nothing happened," Divine said.

When a victim comes to the Crisis Center, she is counseled and given the positives and negatives for reporting the rape.

"For taking legal action, you get some power back in your life," Divine said.

Other benefits include a measure of safety and closure to a chapter in the victim's life, she said.

One of the biggest drawbacks to reporting rape is that a victim must re-tell her story to many people, Divine said. The victim must have a pelvic exam, give up her clothing as evidence and answer questions that could be invasive, she said.

A victim must also face disbelief from her family, friends, the police and society.

"If you don't have to continue to relive it, you can put it behind you," Divine said.

Divine said she thought it was very important to encourage women not to blame other women for getting raped.

The Women's Resource Center and the Dean of Student Life office have continued to help the women of Smurthwaite House deal with their emotions

Wall dominates Senate meeting

J.R. PRATHER & AMY SIMON
Collegian

It looks like the wall is coming down.

Student Senate voted down a motion Thursday to add a resolution to the agenda asking the administration not to tear down the wall between Farrell Library and Lafene Health Center.

Senator Tim Kukula received information that the wall would be torn down before Parents Weekend and drafted with Steffany Carrel, Faculty Senate representative, a resolution to support students' use of the wall for free expression.

The Collegian received an anonymous tip that the wall would be torn down at 11 a.m. today.

The resolution stated that "this sort of creative expression should be wholeheartedly endorsed and boldly promoted in the University setting."

It was further resolved that "K-State Student Senate strongly encourage — nay, demand — that the administration of Kansas State University allow the wall to live on in dignity and honor."

Senate voted 14-34 not to add the resolution to the agenda.

Michelle Smith, special projects director for Farrell Library, said she had been working with groups in the art department and the College of Architecture and Design in an effort to decorate the wall with murals.

"Now that we've done all this work, there's talk of taking the darn thing down," Smith said.

She said the controversy over the wall was getting blown out of proportion.

NEWS BRIEFS

▶ 1993-94 COLLEGIAN NOMINATED FOR SECOND-STRAIGHT PACEMAKER AWARD

The 1993-94 Kansas State Collegian has been nominated as a finalist for the Pacemaker Award.

The Pacemaker, offered by the Associated Collegiate Press, the Newspaper Association of America Foundation and the Association of College Media Advisers, honors university daily papers that have excelled in content, coverage and reader service.

Ron Johnson, news adviser to the Collegian and director of Student Publications Inc., said it's a chance for the hard work of the Collegian staff to be recognized on a national level.

Ten finalists are recognized as the top-10 college papers in the country.

The top-five finalists win the award, which will be announced at the Fall National College Media Convention this November in New Orleans.

The 1992-93 K-State Collegian was honored with the Pacemaker Award in the fall 1993.

▶ AMERICAN DIABETES ASSOCIATION SEARCHING FOR VOLUNTEERS FOR WALK

The American Diabetes Association needs teams to walk for diabetes Sunday, Sept. 25.

The Walk for Diabetes begins at 2 p.m. at Memorial Stadium. Deadline for registration is 1 p.m. Sunday at Memorial Stadium.

Money raised goes to diabetes program services, professional education, patient education, community service, research, support services, management and fundraising, Mick Cayless, events coordinator, said.

Three years ago, the walk started out in three sites nationally, Frankie Francel, executive director, said. This year, it is in 11 sites.

Jack McCarthy, of Wichita, started a river walk in which he raised money for diabetes, Francel said.

Because of time commitments, he was unable to continue the walk, Francel said, so he asked the American Diabetes Association to pick it up.

At the same time, the national chapter wanted to start a walk for diabetes, Francel said.

To form a team, one must pick a captain and a team name and recruit at least five people to be on the team, Carol Leiszler, chairwoman for the Manhattan area, said.

Registration forms can be picked up at drug stores, beauty shops and the Saint Mary Hospital, Leiszler said.

Fill in the team information section on the registration form and mail it in or take it to Memorial Stadium at 1 p.m., she said.

To help make check-in go smoothly, make sure each team member sends in an individual registration form, Leiszler said.

Team members must be preregistered in order for their pledges to be included in their team's pledge total, she said.

Walk-on team members' pledges will go toward individual prizes only. Forming a team is optional.

"The neat thing is that the team that brings in the most money gets a party at Lucky BrewGrille," Leiszler said.

If you raise at least $50, you'll receive an official "Walk for Diabetes" T-shirt, she said.

Raise $100 or more, and you'll receive a gift certificate and catalog from Lilian Vernon or Spiegel, depending on the amount of pledges you collect, she said.

▶ KNOXBERRY RESIDENTS VOICE CONCERNS ABOUT NEW SCHOOL BOUNDARIES

The boundary committee for Manhattan-Ogden USD 383 met Thursday night with about 30 upset residents from the Knoxberry addition in attendance.

The residents were there to voice concern about two proposed plans that would bus their children to the new Frank Bergman school instead of keeping them as walkers at Northview. The plan was formulated and presented last week.

Cindy Hutchinson, Knoxberry parent with two children in Northview, said she wondered why boundaries had to be readjusted.

"Each of my kids has 24 students in their class," Hutchinson said. "They have an aide from the University, plus their teacher. They get plenty of individual attention."

Most of the Knoxberry parents wanted to know why they weren't represented on the committee.

Mike Penrod, Northview representative, told the Knoxberry parents they were informed in June about the possibility of some Northview students being bused. At that time, the children to be bused were from the Dix and Gross additions.

"We sent out fliers, it was on KMAN and in the paper," Penrod said. "We organized, and primarily the only parents that showed up were from the Gross and Dix additions. We organized because we were threatened. You're here tonight because now you are threatened."

Penrod said it was the general consensus of most Northview parents that the school was not currently overcrowded, but space was needed in order to improve some of the programs available to students.

"We need to free up space in order to have an art and computer room," Penrod said.

Other Knoxberry parents said if busing had to be done, it would be smarter in the long run to send them to Bluemont School rather than across town to Frank Bergman.

Dave Mickey, associate superintendent for USD 383, said the committee would definitely think about that possibility.

"We are going to review the modifications suggested tonight," Mickey said. "We will consider busing the Knoxberry students to Bluemont rather than Frank Bergman."

The next boundary-committee meeting will be at 7 p.m. Sept. 29 at the Robinson Education Center, 2031 Poyntz Ave.

▶ K-STATE-SALINA

Salina campus gets facelift

HOLLY CHEGWIDDEN
Collegian

Separate but a part may be the best way to describe the K-State-Salina campus.

The College of Technology, K-State's ninth college, has experienced many changes over the years, and the growing pains aren't over yet.

The campus began when Shilling Air Force Base became the Shilling Institute for Technical Education in 1965. The name was changed in 1969 to Kansas Technology Institute, then was changed to the Kansas College of Technology in 1988.

K-State merged with the Kansas College of Technology in 1991 when Gov. Joan Finney signed the bill.

The campus hasn't totally shed the appearance of its air-force base beginnings, but the facelift is underway.

Working with bonds and the $5.4 million raised by a half-cent sales tax increase on the residents of Salina, the campus is beginning to look more like the quality college it is, Mary Calentine, K-State development officer, said.

"Building the stone entrance gates was the first change we made. Everyone used to joke that they were the gates that led to nowhere," she said.

But now students and residents seem to be pleased with the changes being made, she said. Improvements on the campus include new boundary roads and a library addition to double the library space. she said.

The newest addition to the campus is the completion of the residence hall that can house up to 100 students and resident assistants, Calentine said.

Walls are going up now for the new campus center, which will hold administrative offices, a cafeteria and food court, a bookstore and an auditorium, Calentine said.

She said until the auditorium is built they have to have large seminars in one of the aeronautics hangars or in Salina.

The College of Technology isn't limiting its changes to just the surface.

The college offers two bachelor's degrees and 13 associate degrees.

It has three departments — engineering technology, aeronautical technology and arts, sciences and business.

The college has Kansas' only nationally accredited associate degree engineering-technology programs and the state's largest FAA-certified pilot degree program.

"We feel like we are an asset to K-State," Calentine said.

Building tradition is one challenge the college is now trying to tackle.

Jack Henry, dean of the College of Technology, said there is a need to create a better atmosphere for students.

The distance from the main campus can make that difficult, he said.

"I think our students miss out on a lot of the social activities," Henry said.

However, the faculty there are very supportive, and the new buildings will also help create a traditional environment, he said.

Dean: College a student service

HOLLY CHEGWIDDEN
Collegian

The back of the business card says "College Vision: National Preeminence, Delighted Customers."

The front reads "Jack C. Henry, Ph.D., P.E."

Henry is the dean of K-State's ninth college, the College of Technology at K-State-Salina.

Henry said he believes college is a service and the students are the customers.

"He believes good service is what the customers say it is," Mary Calentine, development officer at K-State-Salina, said.

One of the first changes Henry made on campus was getting rid of reserved parking for faculty. Now the students can park wherever they want, she said.

Henry is not a typical dean in several ways.

He said with a smile that he dabbled in education in the past. Actually, he taught five years at the Air Force Academy, two years in Pakistan, and three years at Texas A&M.

He earned his Ph.D. while teaching at Texas A&M, and in his spare time, he did some research in robotics that landed him a position with IBM, where he developed a Machine Vision System that allows robots to see.

Henry

"I believe people can do most anything if they put their mind to it," he said. "I like to work with the students on that. I hate to hear them say they can't do math."

Henry is on a leave of absence from IBM, after working there for nine years, in order to be the dean for K-State-Salina.

"I think it's a natural thing for us to want to help the next generation do well education-wise," he said. "I think my experience helps me to tailor programs for students."

He said he focuses on two main customers: the students and their prospective employers.

IN OUR OPINION

By the Collegian Editorial Board

Wall does not need to be taken down

The wall is a place for students to express themselves. Removing it would be a great injustice.

The wall. Everyone knows what those two words mean now. The wall is graffiti central. The latest additions are Beavis and Wefald-head and Gargamel from the Smurfs. The wall is the campus canvas. And it will be going down.

University Facilities is considering tearing the wall down. It already has been painted once. A day later, more artwork returned. All the paint did was change the background color.

Of course, Parents' Weekend is around the corner, but there are only a few vulgar and offensive things on the wall. The rest is just eye candy. It's a part of K-State. Leave it up for everyone to behold. Parents' Weekend might necessitate cleaning the bathroom and throwing away all of our liquor, but it shouldn't mean changing the face of the campus. The wall is entrenched and should remain as it stands.

If for no other reason, the wall should stay up because it is unique to K-State. People walk around naked on campus in California, and the most excitement we get here is about a plywood forum for cutting loose with a little artwork.

It doesn't need to be torn down. It doesn't need to be painted over. As more layers of graffiti and art are added, the face and the attitude of the wall will change.

The face of the campus has already been changed.

TOLES

Wall's great for free speech

Free speech took another shot in the gonads Monday.

SCOTT ALLEN MILLER

The graffiti on the Farrell Library construction wall was covered up by the University on Monday at a cost of only about $400 to you. The one unregulated forum for public speech on campus was hastily destroyed.

In this bottleneck of plywood, concrete and limestone, creativity exploded. Under the cover of night, anonymous messages sprang from nowhere. One of the first scrawlings appropriately christened it as The Wall.

Many, probably most, large American universities have forums for unregulated public free speech, usually bulletin boards on which anyone can post anything.

All K-State bulletin boards have a gatekeeper who regulates what is and isn't posted. The Wall had no such restrictions. As a result, free speech blossomed as it should at a college.

Local gangs tagged it in part of their attempt to make Manhattan look like the ghetto they seem to long for.

Lesbians and gays probably shocked the daylights out of naive freshmen fresh off the turnip truck with messages claiming that homosexuals are everywhere. Such an idea must be terrifying for some people to ponder. That's free speech for ya.

One group calling itself the Bugah Boys, rumored to be K-State art students, painted a striking and clever tag. They used sign language to spell their name until someone else came along and changed the letter "b" to "the bird" and ruined it.

There were many more messages too numerable to mention. Some were baudy, others were uplifting; some were ominous, some benign. Some were obscene and crude. All of it, however, was free speech.

At issue here is the policy against vandalizing campus property. Such a policy is obviously sound, but The Wall is an exceptional situation.When a permanent building or other facility is vandalized, it has to be repaired so that it can be used in years to come without being an eyesore.

The Wall, on the other hand, is only temporary. Scrawling graffiti on The Wall is a victimless crime because it causes no permanent damage to K-State property. It doesn't prevent The Wall from protecting pedestrians from construction hazards. It doesn't even obstruct the sidewalk. Except for libel and obscenity, graffiti on The Wall should be permitted.

The University is hereby challenged to allow people to make graffiti, post bills on, and otherwise decorate The Wall indefinitely as long as no one writes libel, overtly obscene messages or vandalizes the properties around it.

If the University agrees to this, people writing on The Wall would be challenged not to deface other properties or write obscenities or libel. All it would take is one jerk to ruin The Wall for everyone. Maybe libel and obscenities could be painted over by students looking out for The Wall's welfare instead of by the University.

Unfortunately, if The Wall or some other forum isn't available, the next media of self-expression may be more permanent ones now that students have had a taste of the power of free speech.

K-State needs a permanent medium for creative and unregulated speech. While absolute free speech is a recipe for disaster, bulletin boards where anyone can post a message would be a reasonable step forward in promoting self-expression within the campus community.

If you don't think there's a need for such an outlet on campus, you didn't read the writing on The Wall.

Scott Allen Miller is a junior in radio/television.

Word usage not the call of teacher

English teachers can be the most difficult people in the world.

CHRISTY LITTLE

You can never please any two English teachers, you see. Some will nitpick on grammar, others on creativity, others on structure and yet others on length. A few are firm believers in incredibly complicated footnotes or bibliographies. I'm not certain they actually read the paper — they're just the special breed who enjoy examining attribution with a magnifying glass. And my ninth-grade honors English teacher tried to get me kicked out of the program for turning in a handwritten paper without indentions large enough for her to see.

After completing 30 credit hours of English classes here at K-State and tutoring countless numbers of college students, I've learned to go with instructor idiosyncrasies. But some teachers go beyond the norm, wherever that is.

Some would like to see their personal beliefs literally spelled out in their students' papers.

Take the instructor last fall who gave my tutee a very low grade solely because he did not use "womyn" throughout his paper.

He used "women" instead. "Women" is found objectionable by some people because it comes from the stem, "men."

Womyn is a nice statement, if you've got one to make. For those of us who make our statements in other ways, what's wrong with "women"? Is women wrong now? Did that instructor's grade make this student use "womyn" from now on, or did it just make the student lose respect for the instructor?

In that case, it was definitely the latter.

Marking a student's paper down for opposing a personal crusade is downright petty.

The feminist (womyn's?) movement is not what I'm attacking. It could be a race movement, a religious movement or an eggplant-eater's movement.

The instructor's decision to grade a paper in such a manner brings down what other feminists are after. When one is making a statement for the rest of a group, he or she ought to do it a little more responsibly.

Even for a nitpicky English teacher, "womyn" only is a little out of line.

You can respect where the instructor is coming from. By using "womyn," the instructor made some students aware that a lot of women (womyn?) like being called womyn. Womyn is actually becoming pretty common usage. And some students I tutor use "womyn" all on their own. Fine. But let's remember that womyn is one possibility, not the only possibility.

That same instructor would probably be outraged if a superior marked the instructor's work negatively for using the word "womyn." It's an attack on the instructor's beliefs. But conversely, it's an attack on the student when an instructor marks him or her down for refusing to play along with the instructor's personal political agenda. Or for simply forgetting to play along, as my student did because he did not realize using the dreaded "women" would bring him so much misery.

My tutee used the word "women" to differentiate them from men, animals, trees and dictionaries, among other things.

He did not use it spitefully or even thoughtlessly. The instructor's response will probably not help the evolution of "womyn" along any faster.

If we're trying to avoid words stemming from the male gender, we could make more combinations like boy and girl, which have no relation to each other.

I'm going to be one of those English teachers who grades high on creativity. If one of my students differentiates gender by calling women tomatoes and men eggplants, that's fine by me.

But let's remember to be open-minded no matter what.

▶ HAYMAKER HALL

Residents have not been given a voice

Dear Editor,

Being a resident of Haymaker Hall for six years and a staff assistant for three years, I've seen many things come and go with the way things operate in the residence-hall system. The latest issue concerning the 24-hour closed-door policy is one that brings up some concerns about the way the system is operating. Even though my position limits what I can and cannot say, I feel that this issue is something that concerns me enough to write about it.

From the first day that we become staff members in the residence-hall system, we are told that without the residents, our jobs are basically non existent. They also instill into our minds during meetings, training and our day-to-day activities, "the resident always matters." We hear of customer-service and allowing the residents to participate in decisions that concern them and invite comment. But for this issue, the opinions, comments and concerns of the residents are not considered.

It has been said that inconvenience is one of the arguments for keeping the doors unlocked by the residents. But does it not also inconvenience individuals delivering packages, mail, newspapers and gifts as well as parents visiting their son or daughter? All that was requested by the petition that was submitted to the Haymaker HGB was that only the front doors remain unlocked certain times during the day.

Before the implementation of this policy, all the gaps should be plugged within the system so that it can be somewhat effective. For example, anyone wanting to get into Haymaker can do so by going through Derby until the doors are locked at night. If a person wants to get in, they will most certainly find a way.

By enacting a policy without taking into consideration the views and concerns of the residents goes against the very base of what we as staff are trained to follow. I support the fact that safety and security are being addressed, but should we not consider the views and opinions of those who will be affected most?

People will always return to a place that is pleasant and conveys a feeling of home. If we close and lock up our home, can we still call it home, or will it be identified more as a fortress?

▶ THE WALL

Graffitti is a disgrace to campus

Dear Editor,

I am ashamed by the graffiti-covered wall on mid-campus. This is pure and simple vandalism. What was once a deep purple barricade is now reflective of a block from an inner city.

The greatest travesty on campus is the confusion between freedom of speech and vandalism. If you don't directly own the material, then you can't "express" yourself, according to the law. We cannot ignore the law or cast it off at our discretion no matter what the circumstances may be.

Another problem is the vandalism that personally attacks the administration. Dean of Student Life Pat Bosco has gone above and beyond the call of duty to help students with their problems on several occasions. He is quite possibly one of the most understanding deans on campus, yet some choose to ridicule him because he is part of the administration. To criticize Dean Bosco degrades everything he has done to build up our University. Perhaps people should look into all the issues before committing their spray-paint crimes.

As we all grapple with a tuition increase, the issue of cost must be addressed. The money has to come from somewhere. It costs money to put up the plywood to protect students from construction, and it costs even more to paint the wall purple so as to cover up certain vulgarities. I helped pay for that wall, so please keep your thoughts off of it. I don't want to pay more to clean off your trash.

It seems that the only way to solve this dilemma is to put up a chain-link fence to further prevent the senseless vandalism of this year. But the best solution to the problem would be to send off these First Amendment-ignorant, vandalizing morons to KU where they belong.

Creation of wall committee needed

Dear Editor,

If you paint it, they will come.

What to do about the purple wall? I assume the wall is to remain in place for all the years it will take to finish the library. It's time to form a wall committee to supervise the graffiti.

One drawing on the wall has a slash over free speech. We certainly don't want to inhibit the students from expressing themselves.

I'm a non-traditional student who has been in the business for 30 years, so I can see both sides of the issue. I don't want to have the University wasting more money than we already do.

It's time to rid ourselves of the Us-Against-Them mentality. The University is here for students. Because of the students, the instructors, administration and a lot of other people have jobs. The wall can be a unifying factor.

I'm serious about a wall committee. It could screen graffiti artists and find volunteers to paint over offensive scribbling. The Purple Wall Art Exhibit would be a great and unique addition to the University architecture.

▶ RESPONSE

Columnist was not clear about point

Dear Editor,

All right, I've just about had it with Scott Allen Miller's incredibly cynical and nonsensical writing for the Collegian. This time, he should be put on probation.

It is one thing to apologize for an article that was printed despite some glaring errors, but it is quite another to indignantly defend it, stating that K-State's standards for spell-checked articles is nothing but elitism. Lovely. That gets your point across loud and clear, Mr. Miller, and your usage of a single term so effectively squelches any possibility of debate.

Hold on, though. Could this be what I think it is? Oh yes, there it is. The true meaning of elitism — blatant waving of a ridiculous, irresponsible ideal in the faces of Collegian readers. If that was your point from the beginning, Mr. Miller, then I'm sorry I missed it. Nice way of driving the point home that elitism is bad, exhibiting it yourself.

Parking improved at games

BOB MACHA
Collegian

Record crowds at K-State football games have prompted parking officals and community members to take measures to improve parking.

The parking for the Rice game improved since the first game with Southwestern Louisiana, Bramlage Coliseum Director Charlie Thomas said.

The USL game not only had a record crowd for an opening game, it was the first game for which Bramlage handled football-game parking.

At the second game, which was Band Day, there was a crowd of 36,973 as compared to 38,216 for the opener against USL.

"It went pretty well, but we were kind of screwed up by the 118 buses last week," Thomas said.

Thomas said the KSU Stadium parking lot will open at 1:30 p.m. Saturday and will cost $3 per vehicle. He said when the lot is filled, officials will direct people to other lots.

One place Thomas said people can park is in the Saint Mary Hospital lot. Dale Staatz, director of maintenance for the hospital, said the hospital lot will open at 3 p.m. for the game this week, and there is a $3 charge. He said the lot was full at 12:30 p.m. for the 1:10 p.m. game against Rice. Staatz said the hospital lot fills fast when the stadium lot is filled.

Thomas also said there are lots north of the stadium, which are run by the agricultural extension areas.

College Avenue United Methodist Church also offers parking for $3, youth director Kail Katzenmeier said. He said the church lot will open at 4:30 p.m. for this week's game.

He said the lot did not fill for last week's game, but he thought that was mostly because it was Band Day.

Rusty's Last Chance Restaurant & Saloon also offers a free shuttle that leaves a half hour before the game, assistant manager Dustin Britt said. Britt said it leaves from the front of Last Chance, and no registration is required.

Director of Parking Services Dwain Archer said Parking Services will offer a shuttle in cooperation with Bramlage.

Dave Amaro, programmer for public safety, said five different buses will run at 15 to 25 minute intervals starting at 4:30 p.m.

Buses will leave from the West Stadium parking lot and the B-3/B-16 area north of Weber Hall. It will cost $2 per vehicle to park and $1 per person to ride the shuttle round trip. Archer said Parking Services will continue to offer it as an alternative to parking in the stadium lot.

"As long as it will help, we plan to offer it for the remainder of the home football games," he said.

Scientists to lead Konza Prairie hikes

KIMBERLY HEFLING
Collegian

The Konza Prairie Research Natural Area may be one of K-State's best-kept secrets.

But recent publicity concerning research there has sparked interest about the prairie.

Konza Prairie will be host to an open house from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Saturday.

Konza Prairie Visitor's Day features van tours into an area inhabited by bison, haywagon rides, demonstrations of research projects and a videotape talking about prairie.

Hikes led by scientists will allow visitors to interact with the prairie's scenic beauty.

Because of research projects taking place at Konza Prairie, the site has received much more publicity this year than in the past, Jim Richmond, director of Konza Prairie, said.

As a result, about 1,000 to 2,000 visitors are expected on Saturday, compared to about 1,400 people in the past for the event, which is held every other year, Richmond said.

Konza Prairie contains 8,616 acres of land owned by The Nature Conservancy and is leased to K-State for ecological research. There are 120 research projects taking place at Konza Prairie, using about $6 million in grants, Richmond said.

Research concerning topics such as the effects of fire and grazing on the prairie and water quality are researched at Konza Prairie. In 1987, Konza Prairie purchased bison to further enable research about the natural prairie.

During the van tours, and possibly the hayrides, visitors will be able to see some of the 220 head of bison living at Konza Prairie.

Reservations are needed in order to take a hayride, Richmond said.

KONZA VISITS

You can reach the Konza Prairie by taking McDowell Creek Road, which is the first right turn after going over the bridge out of Manhattan on Kansas Highway 177.

Carney: Peterson should be at K-State

Patrick Carney said he saw Peterson's absence as a problem.

"The student body president should be at K-State," Carney, senior in political science and history, said.

Situations come up where Senate needs to make decisions on the spur of the moment, and the student body president should be there, he said.

"I thought Brad would take over because Jeff won't be here for two months, although he won't be incapacitated," he said. Another concern would be Peterson being distracted from getting well, he said.

"We make sure that Jeff's top priority is getting well," Zamrzla said. "We want him to be back."

K-State looks for boost against Golden Gophers

WESS HUDELSON
Collegian

After a sub-par performance against the Rice Owls last Saturday, K-State may be in need of a spark.

Enter the Minnesota Golden Gophers, the Wildcats' opponent at 6:30 p.m. Saturday at KSU Stadium.

Last season, the Cats downed the Gophers 30-25 in Minneapolis, Minn.

"The circumstances are similar to last year at this time," Snyder said.

K-State's defense stopped a 12-play, 78-yard drive that ended with quarterback Tim Schade throwing incomplete on the last play of the game.

Snyder said he didn't realize it at the time, but after looking back on the victory, he said, it was probably a key turning point in the season.

"This could have an effect on us heading into the Big Eight schedule, but we have to take care of the needs of the moment," Snyder said. "Regardless of the outcome, we still have to deal with KU and Nebraska and everyone else."

K-State's needs include stopping a balanced offensive attack led by running back Chris Darkins and Schade.

Darkins rumbled for 155 yards on 25 carries and a touchdown last Saturday against San Diego State. Schade connected on 20 of his 33 passes for 213 yards and a touchdown in his first start of the season.

As a team, Minnesota racked up 420 yards offense, 207 yards rushing and 213 yards passing.

"He's operating with a lot of confidence right now," Snyder said of Schade.

Snyder compared Darkins' attributes to K-State running back J.J. Smith's.

"He's got a burst and awfully good speed," Snyder said. "You have to defend the run first if you're going to be successful, but that's no different from any other game."

The Gophers return seven starters on offense from a team that set school records for yards per game (411.6), passing yards (3,277), most passing touchdowns (22) and first downs (237).

Defensively, the Gophers ranked last in the Big Ten Conference in total defense (417.4 yards per game).

However, Minnesota coach Jim Wacker said he looks for the defense to be improved.

After allowing 689 yards against Penn State, the defense rebounded by holding Pacific to 141 yards and four first downs.

Last Saturday, defensive backs Juan Hunter and Justin Conzemius both tallied interceptions against the Aztecs. San Diego State passed for 236 yards, but its running attack was limited to 73 yards.

"The lack of game experience at linebacker is a concern right now," Wacker said.

Two starters were lost to graduation at the linebacker position before the season.

Last season, May completed 16 of his 30 attempts for 247 yards against Minnesota.

May said he enjoyed playing in last year's offensive shootout.

"I like to go out and throw a lot, but I don't like to do it when we're behind," May said.

DUI charges dropped

WESS HUDELSON
Collegian

Charges against junior fullback Dederick Kelly for driving under the influence of drugs or alcohol were dropped Thursday.

Bernard Irvine, prosecutor of the case, said the evidence in the case was not substantial enough to convict Kelly.

"The police acted in an appropriate manner, but after analyzing the facts of the case, we have decided not to pursue a conviction," Irvine said.

Irvine would not divulge the facts of the case that led to his decision not to seek a conviction.

Irvine is in charge of the prosecution in the case of free safety Steve Hanks, who was arrested Sept. 8 for DUI. A diversion hearing involving the prosecution, the defense and Judge Patrick Caffey is scheduled for 2 p.m. Oct. 13.

The hearing is not open to the public.

Both Hanks and Kelly will be suited up for this Saturday's home game against Minnesota.

Hanks will back up Chuck Marlowe at free safety, and Kelly will remain at his usual fullback position.

Coach says playing away from home not a problem

CRESTON KUENZI
Collegian

The K-State volleyball team puts its 7-1 record on the line this weekend.

The Wildcats travel to Arlington, Texas, to take part in the University of Texas-Arlington tournament.

Standing in the way of double-digit victories for the Cats are Virginia Tech, Oral Roberts and Texas-Arlington.

Volleyball coach Jim Moore said he isn't worried about playing away from Manhattan, because he doesn't believe in a home-court advantage.

"Being on the road is insignificant," he said. "It doesn't mean anything.

"I don't see any reason why we shouldn't have as good a record away as at home."

Moore also said the tournament should be less stressful than the one they participated in at Oregon.

"The scheduling is easier this time because we only have one match a day," Moore said.

Virginia Tech went 17-18 last year, but lost only one starter from the team. The Hokies enter the tournament at 4-6.

Moore said Virginia Tech will probably be the toughest competition.

"They look pretty strong," Moore said. "They beat Texas Tech, Kansas in four games, and New Orleans pretty handily in three."

Oral Roberts went 20-13 last year, including a 1-1 record against the Cats. The Eagles lost only one starter and return nine letterwinners.

Texas-Arlington went 11-19 last year. They have four starters and 10 letter winners returning. The Mavericks are 0-7 on the year.

Moore said the tournament will be favorable for his team as it gears up for the Big Eight Conference.

"It's important that we have a good tournament," he said. "Virginia Tech would be a big win, but we'll have to play a lot better than we did against UMKC."

The Cats beat the University of Missouri-Kansas City Kangaroos on Sunday, 15-4, 15-7, 15-10 with a sub-par performance.

Harriers run at Warner Park

JULIE KUHLMAN
Collegian

The K-State cross country team will see some stiff competition this week as it will be host to the K-State Invitational at Warner Park.

The meet, which takes place Saturday at Warner Park, marks the first time since the 1986 season that the Wildcats have had a meet in Manhattan.

The women's team is slated to run at 10:30 a.m., and the men's team will run at 11:15 a.m.

"We will be running against Kansas, which beat the No. 1 ranked team, Arkansas, and Colorado is very tough," Coach Terry Drake said.

The six-team field includes conference foes Oklahoma State, Colorado and Kansas.

Wichita State and Creighton will also be competing.

"Both the men's and women's squads will compete at full strength this weekend," Drake said.

Drake is expecting good things from senior Billy Wuggazer, who has emerged as the Cats' frontrunner.

"I feel like I'm going to be the frontrunner, but the other guys on the team are going to be right there," Wuggazer said. "Last year I would fall back in the middle of the race. I'm responding better when people pass me."

Drake said practice has been hard on the runners this week, and they might be tired coming into the meet.

"We have had two hard-core practices this week, which we usually only have on an off-week," Drake said.

"They've been working hard."

Although Drake said Colorado or Kansas will be tough to beat in the men's division, the women are looking to claim a win.

"It's between us and Colorado," Drake said.

The women's team has had some outstanding efforts from frontrunner Jeanene Rugan. Drake said there are two women who may give her competition for that position.

"Charity and Irma are running with her and are looking better all the time."

"Charity beat the field by 40 seconds in the freshmen meet, and I didn't tell her to start taking the lead until there was a mile left to go," he said.

The harriers will gain some experience from this meet.

"This will prepare us for the Big Eight championships and gauge what it takes to be competitive there," Drake said.

"I imagine a lot of what happens Saturday will be what happens in the conference."

Next week, the team will be going to Arkansas, where it will run against the nation's best.

The course is the site for the NCAA championships, which has teams wanting to run it.

"Besides the championships, this will be our toughest meet," Drake said.

Turner's status remains critical

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) — Randy Roth will take over lead recruiting duties for Ohio State while assistant coach Ken Turner recuperates from a heart attack.

Turner, 48, a former assistant at K-State, remained in critical condition Thursday at Grant Medical Center, hospital spokeswoman Connie Stover said.

Turner had a heart attack Wednesday while jogging near his home, Ohio State spokesman Bob Goldring said.

"He apparently just went down," said Andy Geiger, Ohio State athletics director. "Somebody gave him CPR. Some blessed person saved his life."

Head coach Randy Ayers visited with Turner and his family on Wednesday.

"Basically, it's a wait-and-see situation," Ayers said. "The only thing I can say is that we're all praying for him."

▶ TENNIS

Kuregian trying to return for meet

JAMIE BUSH
Collegian

K-State's tennis team hopes to volley its way into the championship this weekend with strong play and the help of all-America Karina Kuregian.

The netters will be host to the Wildcat/Travelers Express Invitational on Saturday and Sunday at the L.P. Washburn Recreational Area.

The four-team tournament will get underway on Saturday at 8:30 a.m. and will conclude with the singles final on Sunday at 9 a.m., followed by the doubles final at 1 p.m.

Kuregian, a sophomore from Yerevan, Armenia, who was sidelined with a back injury last spring, will play in only the doubles competition for the opener.

Coach Steve Bietau wants to make sure she has her strength completely back under her, after having her back surgery, before playing her in singles competition.

"She doesn't have her strength back to a level where it needs to be, but it is at a level where she can compete," Bietau said.

Kuregian won't make the journey alone. She will be backed up by five other Wildcats, some of whom are making an immediate contribution to the team.

"We are happy to have Karina back and back into competition, but we also have two freshmen, Dinah Watson and Chris Schultz, that are doing a nice job for us so far," Bietau said.

Watson will play in the No. 1 singles spot, followed by Karen Nicholson in the No. 2 position, Martine Shrubsole in third, Chris Schulte in the fourth spot, and Nicole Lagerstrom in the fifth.

Bietau, in his 11th season at K-State, said he feels there will be an equal distribution of talent shown in this weekend's tournament.

"There will be a good range of teams coming this weekend," Bietau said.

"Kansas, who finished seventh in the country last year, will be here, as well as Oklahoma State, who was third in the Big Eight, and Oral Roberts, who have a young team, but will gain two new players in January," he said.

The team has been in the weight room and on the track more in recent weeks to prepare for the season opener, something that Bietau said will change as the season progresses.

"As we get further into the season, we will play more matches and do less conditioning and weight training," Bietau said.

Smatterings

BY ANDREW TOMB

Compiled from Collegian staff and Associated Press reports

Where's Dr. Kevorkian when you need him?

A 410-pound convicted killer who says he's too fat to hang without cruelty got a reprieve Monday when a judge overturned his death sentence on technical grounds unrelated to his obesity.

U.S. District Judge Thomas Zilly ruled that during penalty-phase proceedings, the state court wrongly excluded lie-detector results from a witness the defendant said was the real killer.

Mitchell Rupe, 41, was sentenced to death after his conviction on charges of fatally shooting two tellers during a 1981 bank robbery in Olympia, Wash.

His lawyers fought the conviction with constitutional arguments, including the claim Rupe's weight meant he would be decapitated if hanged, which Zilly agreed with.

Zilly agreed the risk of decapitation was too great to allow hanging in Rupe's case if the state followed its established procedures, but that wouldn't necessarily rule out death by injection or a shorter rope, Assistant Attorney General John Sampson said.

Zilly ruled after hearing a week of testimony in July on hanging and other issues. Scientists said there was a good chance Rupe's head would be severed if he was hanged from a rope with a 3 1/2-foot drop, as the state planned.

Smatterings has learned that an alternative method of execution was being considered.

The court will soon hear arguments from the prosecution that Rupe should be required to watch 100 hours of "She TV," more than enough to kill any man.

Hey kids, time to stock up on those tasty ol' black bear gallbladders

Black bear gallbladders are so popular in Asian medicine that poachers are starting to threaten the species in North America.

Some 40,000 bears are legally hunted each year in the United States and Canada, but it's estimated an equal number are poached, said John Doggert, chief of the law enforcement for the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service.

"We're finding carcasses with the gall bladder sliced out," said Judith Ball, general curator for Seattle's Woodland Park Zoo.

Animal-protection advocates say measures must be taken now or the numbers of bears will become as depleted in North America as they are in Asia.

"This is an opportunity to address a problem before it becomes a crisis," said Ginette Hemley of the Washington-based World Wildlife Fund.

A U.S. hunter can sell a bear gallbladder for $20 to $120.

Asian pharmacies stock bear bile salts as a cure for various intestinal, liver, fever and cardiac-related illnesses. Western science has recently begun to recognize the health benefits of the bear bile, effective as an antispasmodic, poison antidote and anti-coughing agent, as well as a treatment for gallstones and high blood pressure.

A synthetic alternative has been developed, but demand for the real thing remains high, Ball said.

"Gee, Mom, the black bear bile just doesn't taste like it used to."

"Well, honey, this is new Bilex, the environmentally safe black bear bile made from the excrement of freshwater salmon. Your father swears by it!"

Oh, the horror of it all...

Remember 'Attack of the Killer Tomatoes?'

A tomato bigger than his head sat next to Robert Ehigh as they flew — first class, of course — toward fame and, perhaps, fortune in the big city.

Ehigh's hopes were high that his big beefsteak tomato, a 7-pound, 12-ouncer from Oklahoma, would beat the record.

It all began with Frank Sinatra, a heating pad and a little sweet talk.

"I talk to it in the morning to wake it up and talk to it at night to put it to bed," said Ehigh, a former coal miner and baker.

The nurturing gardener played the burgeoning love apple music to grow by, and he kept it cozy inside its own tiny A-frame house in his garden in St. Clairsville, Ohio.

The tomato was to be weighed today on TV's "Live With Regis and Kathy Lee."

If it beat the bruiser in the "Guinness Book of Records," Ehigh and his wife, Lois, were to win $100,000 in Miracle-Gro's tomato challenge.

"'You can only go so far with a tomato,' is what we say," he said. "We were just sitting there saying, 'We can't believe all this, just for a tomato.'

As the tomato was ready to be weighed, Regis Philbin was shocked to see that it was in the exact shape as the head of Joey Lawrence from TV's "Blossom."

Tagging In Manhattan

Story by Kimberly Kircher

Art by Mike Marlett

Design by Dave Olson

Editor's Note: The source's name has been changed to "Bob" because of the sensitive subject material. Other gang members and a homeowner also declined to be named.

Adrenaline-pumped poets and artists run through the night, leaving their marks on anything that will be seen.

Some gang members see themselves as Picassos or poets, and the new graffiti form of tagging is a gang's way of expressing itself.

"It's a way of communication, to show off where we hold our turf," a gang member said.

Police officers see tagging differently.

"Tagging is a graffiti representation of the gang or group," Det. Kurt Moldrup of the Riley County Police Department said.

For the past six years, Moldrup has been a juvenile officer in the Criminal Investigation Division with a concentration on gangs.

Manhattan gangs started six years ago and have become active within the past five years, Moldrup said. Tagging became popular four years ago.

The Fuck Cops Crew, or FCC, has been in Manhattan for about a year now, Moldrup said. FCC is a large tagging crew.

"They tag to say 'I was here, I can do this, and you can't touch me,'" Moldrup said.

There are groups of people, called tagging crews, who set out just to tag, Moldrup said. Members have their own personal identification or tag.

The tagging crews make a job of getting their gang name up and publicized.

Living on the edge by being destructive and getting away with it is what the tagging crews live by.

"It's almost like a addiction," Moldrup said.

Moldrup said tagging is not found to be gang-related.

A 17-year-old gang member, "Bob," has a different outlook.

Bob got into a gang when he was in seventh grade.

"A bunch of friends hung out together, and we sort of started a gang," Bob said.

Bob said he has been shot at during a drive-by shooting and hit over the head with a 40-ounce bottle while fighting.

"If my name or my gang's name get printed, there would be massive trouble with the rival gangs and my own," Bob said.

Bob said each tagging crew has its own alphabet, its own way of writing.

"It is often done in a rhythm pattern, like poetry," he said.

Also, each gang has its own symbol.

The Insane Crypt Gangsters' symbol is blue with a six-pointed star, a gang member said.

FCC prefers to use green.

"Tagging is used to show where they hold their turf and to keep rival gangs off their areas," Bob said.

If a rival tries to cross the line, words or even gun shots might be involved, he said.

Moldrup said gangs do not have a specific territory.

"FCC hardly has any organization in their club," Moldrup said.

The ICGs have a lot of taggers, but they wish their gang was something more, Moldrup said.

An area homeowner said her garage was tagged.

"We don't like the vandalism," she said. "Snotty kids claim their territory on my house. It's obnoxious."

She has painted over the tagging, but other local homeowners have done nothing.

"Some owners cannot afford to have the tagging removed," Moldrup said.

Moldrup is not immune to tagging, either. An area near the police station was once tagged, and the taggers were challenging him to catch them.

The tagging crews tag whenever they want, day or night, Moldrup said.

"Crews tag alleys, schools, street signs, mail trucks, school buses and even homes," Bob said.

Moldrup said examples will be made of people caught for tagging. If there is less than $500 worth of damage, the crime is a misdemeanor. More than $500 in damages is a felony.

Tag banging is a new group of people that do not only tag but act more gang-like.

"They deal with tagging, but narcotics and weapons are now involved," Moldrup said.

"Gangs and tagging crews are more active than they let people think," Bob said. "Who cares, anyway, because the community hasn't done anything about it."

The police department is aware of the tagging crews.

"They are making our city look trashy," Moldrup said. "They're messing with people's property."

Tagging crews like the attention, Moldrup said.

"They know they did the tagging. Other crew members and rivals know who did it," he said. "They gain attention, and they want attention."

New dean helps students

"I want students beating down our doors to get in and employers lined up to take our graduates," he said.

When a freshman from Leavenworth came to the Salina campus for registration and to move into the residence hall, he found that his paperwork had been misplaced and the dorm was already full, Calentine said.

"Dean Henry simply said, 'How can we fix it?'" she said.

He invited the student to stay in his home until suitable housing could be found, she said.

"Mark (the student) has been with my wife and me for about a month now. It was a unique situation, but we knew we could handle it," Henry said.

Calentine said there is nothing pretentious about Henry.

When he interviewed her for her position at K-State-Salina, she said she knew right away she wanted the job.

"Ten minutes into the interview, I knew I wanted to work for this man," she said.

Henry is easygoing, and he really cares about the students, faculty and campus, Calentine said. This attitude makes the difference, she said.

Henry said he wants to continuously improve everything about the college.

He said it isn't how hard we work; it's what we produce that matters.

"Even the person who mows the lawn," he said with a laugh. "I want him to mow the lawn better tomorrow than he did today. I want everyone to think, 'Is this the way that a pre-eminent college in this country would look?'"

Henry said with a chuckle that he is 'happy as a pig in mud' to be in Salina and doesn't plan to leave.

He said a lot of people put in their work to improve a program, and then move on, but it's hard for him to set a limit on what can be done to improve this college.

"Maybe I can move on when we become K-State University with 20,000 students and the University becomes K-State-Manhattan."

Naster and Brow to perform for students, parents tonight

RUSSELL FORTMEYER
Collegian

There's nothing like having your funny bone tickled to turn a cold, boring autumn night into a warm, knee-slapping evening.

Comedians David Naster and J.R. Brow will be on hand Friday evening to be your personal tickler (upon a small admission).

Naster, the more publically recognizable of the two comics, has a routine that includes tributes to John Belushi, old TV shows and physical comedy.

"He has such a reservoir of material in his head," Joey Edmonds, Naster's college representative, said.

He doesn't know what he's going to do until he gets out onto the stage. He adapts his show to meet his audience's expectations, Edmonds said. A professional comedian, Naster has been performing onstage for more than eight years.

J.R. Brow, of Austin, Texas, works on the other side of comedy, impressions.

Brow gained his fame after winning $10,000 in fall 1991 on "America's Funniest People" for portraying a flamenco dancer.

His musical impressionistic talents, accompanied by his own guitar playing, include Dwight Yoakam, Led Zeppelin, and Cheech and Chong, Michele Linden, Brow's agent, said.

"Rich Little was a big inspiration to him," Linden said.

However, Brow does something Little doesn't. Brow records the voices of the person he wishes to impersonate and transcribes it into his computer, which graphs it. Then, Brow graphs his own impression of the person. After his personal graph matches the celebrity's graph, he has a perfect impersonation.

As the youngest performer, Brow participated in the highly prestigious San Francisco International Comedy Competition. The comedy show is sponsored by Union Program Council Eclectic Entertainment.

COMEDY TONIGHT

Comedians David Naster and J.R. Brow will be performing at 8 p.m. tonight in McCain Auditorium. Tickets can be purchased at the door for $6.

Repainting wall every week too costly

"Some groups were offended because of words and phraseology, not because of the artwork."

Because so many groups were interested in doing something with the wall, Smith said it has taken a long time to get them organized.

"The logistics have really stunk," she said. "I'm trying to please everybody, but I can't please everyone."

Bernard Franklin, assistant dean of student life, said he was not aware of a date set for taking down the wall, but said he thought things might already be in motion.

Franklin said the administration was considering removing the wall because the original graffiti had become somewhat racist and homophobic and had begun to offend some people.

He also said the administration thought it would be too costly to repaint the wall, at a cost to the library of $352, once a week.

"We don't have the money to do that," Franklin said.

Franklin said he didn't think the administration had any idea students felt so strongly about the wall.

"I don't think they knew this kind of sentiment was that strong. I think their general impression was that the community was pretty bored with it, pretty disgusted with it."

Even if the resolution had passed, Franklin said he didn't think it would do any good.

"I think if it had come up some weeks ago, it might have," he said. "If there had been some open communication between Senate and the University architects, this might have been avoided."

Tim Kukula, chair of the communications committee, said he was disappointed that the administration had decided to do this without coming to the students.

"We've had a committee working on this for several weeks," he said.

In other business, Nabeeha Kazi, Student Governing Association public relations director, reported on a new student forum planned for Rusty's Last Chance Restaurant & Saloon. The forum will discuss campus transportation issues at 5 p.m. Thursday at Last Chance.

Aaron Otto, arts and sciences senator, reported that the campus will soon have more bike racks. Otto said the administration will spend $10,000 on new bike racks. He said the administration asked Senate to match these funds. A decision will be made at a later meeting.

Little loaves packed with fat

Dear Cassandra,

So, how many grams of fat are in those neat little loaves of bread in the K-State Union Stateroom, anyway? They taste so good, but I'd really like to know if they should be a part of my diet.

Thanks,
Health Conscious but Clueless

Dear Health Conscious but Clueless,

If you're eating those cute little loaves of white bread, you are clueless. Most people think they are cutting caloric corners by eating bread, especially without butter.

The truth is, there are 640 calories in these small, fan loaves you buy at the Union, and they are 14 percent fat. That means there are 89 fat calories (not grams) in each little loaf.

So, you tell me, should they be in your "diet?"

Bosom back in Manhattan

AMY ZIEGLER
Collegian

Bosom, a band made up of five K-State students, has returned to the live music scene after taking a year off to find a bass guitarist.

After a performance by opening act Blind Fly, the band will perform at 11 p.m. Saturday at Charlie's Neighborhood Bar.

"It's exciting because it's our first gig back," said drummer Michael Calloway, junior in construction science management.

The band came together three years ago. Since then, the name has remained the same, but the members and sound of the band have changed.

A new bassist, Larry Hafner, junior in electrical engineering, has joined the band, and one of the original band members, Paul Horton, left. Jason Hutto, junior in radio and television, said the band performs a blend of rock and country music.

"We have rockabilly and twang influences. We're not really known as a hard band. I just think we've gotten more of an edge over the years," Hutto said.

Vocalist Jason McLendon, junior in geology, said he writes lyrics from personal experience.

"I sing stuff I know about," he said. "We usually tell stories from our hometowns. I usually write on my front porch. You can write some good songs out there."

BOSOM

Bosom, a band of five K-State students, plays at Charlie's Neighborhood Bar at 11 p.m Saturday. Blind Fly is the opening act.

Calloway said Bosom writes and produces its own music. The band has one demo and plans to release another in the spring, he said.

"We're not a cover band," Calloway said. "Ninety-nine percent of our music is original."

Bosom plans to sing a few songs off its demo for the concert at Charlie's, but the band is looking forward to playing new material.

"We're excited about our new stuff and think it is better than the demo," Calloway said. "There are no set lyrics, and there are parts in the music which are improvisational."

The members said they enjoy playing in bars and think the key to having a successful night is to have fun on stage.

"You need to have a lot of energy," McLendon said. "If the people are enjoying themselves, you are doing what you need to do."

In addition to playing in bars, Bosom has performed in two outdoor events.

The band placed fourth in the Opus band competition two years ago and performed at the Kansas City Spirit Festival last year.

Calloway said he enjoyed performing at the outdoor festival but wished the event had attracted a larger crowd.

"It was all right," he said. "We had about as much fun as you can on a Saturday afternoon with 75 people in a one-mile radius."

▶ UNDERAGE DRINKING

162 MIPs issued at local bars since start of 1994

KIMBERLY WISHART
Collegian

It's 50-cent draws at your favorite drinking establishment. You take only $2 with you to make yourself come home early. You have your first taste of the cold beer. As you set your glass down, the police enter the bar and zero in on you.

You're underage, and suddenly your 50-cent beer costs you $200. You're not the only one who is fined, though. The bar pays a bigger fine than you do for the minor in possession you just received.

"The fine depends on the amount of citations the bar has had for the calendar year," Dan Riley, assistant attorney general, said. "One MIP will cost the bar $400, and it increases until the bar has nine. At nine, the cost goes up to $1,000 per MIP. Also built in between one and nine is days of suspension. When their license is suspended, they can't sell alcohol that day."

Riley said by the time the bar's number of MIPs reaches the double digits, it has a real possibility of losing its license.

"When an MIP happens in a bar, and a police officer warrants it, the Alcoholic Beverage Control in Topeka does not hesitate to fine the bar," Lieutenant Bradley Schoen said. "The kids are fined for drinking, and the bars are fined for letting them in."

There were 162 MIPs given during the 1994 calendar year through August, Schoen said. Only 45 of these citations were given during the summer months of June, July and August, while 117 were gathered in five months during the school year.

"I think you'll find MIPs fluctuate with student population," Schoen said. "I think what we have here is a unique setting. KU has less problems with underage drinking, but Lawrence doesn't have a setting where so many bars are concentrated."

K-State has problems because Aggieville is packed with bars, all located within a six-block area.

"It's natural that you'll have more problems at the bars due to the small area where they are congested," Schoen said. "When you have 300-400 drunks in that small of an area, you're bound to have problems."

Bar owners agree that the law is more likely to be broken in Aggieville.

"It's more likely for the law to be broken down here, but it deals with what crowd you bring in," Jeff Rome, Champions Pub & Grill owner and sophomore in criminal justice, said. "We start carding when the kitchen closes, and you have to be 21. If you don't follow the law, then we're going to get shut down."

Mike Closson, manager of Lucky BrewGrille, said the bar takes 40-50 licenses from minors each weekend.

The Fish Bowl avoids the same problem by allowing minors in to eat only before 8 p.m.

"It's too hard to watch everyone with only one bartender, one doorman and one waitress," Cindy Walker, manager of The Fish Bowl and senior in secondary education, said.

Duane Pultz, owner of Aggie Lounge, said he thinks minors should be able to go in a bar if they want, as long as they don't drink when they are underage.

"We're open to the public, just like the mall. We have food, games and pop," Pultz said. "I don't want to tell a 20-year-old they can't come in for a Coke and a game of darts."

Pultz said about a month ago, one of his bartenders was issued a ticket for allowing a minor to drink.

"This is something different. The ticket was for allowing, not serving, a minor to drink," Pultz said. "The only thing a person can do to fix that is not to allow anyone under the age of 21 into the bar at all."

Aggie Lounge sells only 3.2 beer, so the bar is licensed by the city, not the ABC.

"We only issue liquor licenses," Riley said. "The city issues a 3.2 license."

All of the money from MIPs goes into a city fund. The Riley County Police Department doesn't see any of the money made from MIPs.

"The MIPs are handled at the municipal court, and the money goes into a general operating fund," Schoen said. "We don't write a single ticket that we retain the funds for. In fact, we even pay for the tickets."

The general fund provides the budget for many of Manhattan's organizations.

"Fines from the municipal court and court costs add up to close to $500,000, but this includes every violation for the year," Curt Wood, director of finance, said. "The general fund is the heart of the city budget. It funds lots of departments like fire, streets, airport, parks, Sunset Zoo and the Riley County Police Department."

The number of police officers in Aggieville has been increased this year.

"We've added the fourth shift. We instituted the extra walking patrol in Aggieville because a few months ago, there were a lot of personal batteries," Schoen said. "We're not telling them to snag some minors when they have some free time, but we're not telling them to look the other way."

Incidents give reality to rape

following a rape early Monday morning, Susan Scott, associate dean of student life, said.

Scott said the student life office distributed photocopies of the police composite of the perpetrator in the Smurthwaite incident to the living groups on campus.

Judy Davis has attended living-group meetings as well as the Black Student Union meeting to talk about rape and safety.

Scott said the only positive side of this incident is that students think about the reality that it could happen to them.

CATEGORIES

To help you find what you are looking for, the classified ads have been arranged by category and sub-category. All categories are marked by one of the large images, and sub-categories are preceded by a number designation.

TIPS FOR WRITING A CLASSIFIED AD

Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.

Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.

Consider including the price. This tells buyers if they are looking at something in their price range.

WE DO NOT USE PHONE NUMBERS OR LAST NAMES IN PERSONALS.

Student opinions on policies vary

Moore Hall's front doors are locked from 11 p.m. to 8 a.m. The back door to Moore is locked at 8 p.m., and the side door is locked 24 hours a day.

"It's futile to focus on those doors, when anyone can walk in from Derby," Bridget Porter, Moore Hall director, said.

"I don't want the doors locked 24 hours," Bill Kleckza, freshman in engineering, said.

"It would be too much of a hassle," Wendall Pickett, freshman in mathematics, said.

Haymaker Hall's doors are locked 24 hours.

"It's not that big of a pain in the butt," John Bacon, sophomore in elementary education and Haymaker Hall resident, said. "Guys need protection, too."

Not all residents shared Bacon's outlook.

"Personally, I'm against it," Kevin Gebhardt, senior in criminology, said. "It's kind of like locking your front door and leaving the patio door open."

The doors that open from the halls to Derby Food Center do not have a Validine system. Derby is locked from 11 p.m to 6 a.m.

Validine systems have been ordered for the Derby Complex, but have not arrived yet.The Validine system allows residents to get into the halls with their student IDs.

"It's a time issue, not a money issue," Porter said.

Ford's front doors are unlocked from 7 a.m. to 11 p.m.

West Hall's front doors are locked from 11 p.m. to 7 a.m.

As of 10 p.m. Sept. 25, Boyd Hall will be under 24-hour lockdown.

The front desk in Boyd is open from 1 p.m. to 6 a.m., as is the front desk in Putnam Hall. Residents with problems are encouraged to go to Van Zile Hall for help after hours.

While security is fairly tight in Strong Complex, the Quik Cats convenience store that is adjacent to Van Zile Hall is causing some concern.

"Our main thing is the doors at Quik Cats getting locked 24 hours" Adriana Luna, junior in management and marketing and Boyd Hall fourth-floor staff assistant, said.

"Quik Cats is being discussed," Aaron McClure, junior in parks and resource management, said. "All the HGBs from Boyd and Putnam are talking about it."

In Putnam Hall, all doors except the front door are locked 24 hours. The front door is locked from 10 p.m. to 1 a.m.

Goodnow has also developed a security task force, which is composed of 12 to 14 residents.

Women added to Haymaker escort service where the applicant lives and is also considering doing a check with the K-State Police, Gebhardt said.

Last year was the first year the women in the residence halls became escorts, Hagemeister said.

"We wanted to make the women who use the escorts feel more comfortable and thought that if we added women escorts to the program, it would help," he said.

Michelle Black, director of West, said another reason the women of West became involved was to help the men with their work load.

The escort services are limited to those students who are living on campus, said Lori Basiewicz, the Strong complex escort chairwoman and a senior in English.

"If someone needed an escort to their home off campus, we would arrange for them to get home safely another way. We won't just leave them hanging," Basiewicz said.

Since everyone has the possibility of becoming a victim, the best defense is preparation to fight off an attacker, said Lisa Emigh, senior in psychology and ethnic studies and a facilitator of self-defense classes.

"Obviously, there are going to be times where you need to defend yourself either physically or verbally, and you need to be ready," Emigh said.

Women often don't feel like they can defend themselves if they are attacked, she said.

"I think women often feel like they are weak and don't feel like they can physically defend themselves. This course can help them build their confidence and knowledge to fight off an attacker," she said.

The Women's Resource Center sponsors the self- defense workshops for women every month, Emigh said.

The next one will start the second week of October.

Officer Lisa Bratton, of the K-State police, said although self-defense is important, the thing she tries to focus on is not becoming a victim.

"We can't 100 percent guarantee that we can protect ourselves, but we can increase our chances," she said.

Bratton said most of the thing you can do to protect yourself are common sense and things you've been told your whole life.

"Almost everything I can tell you, your mom and dad have already told you. You need to listen to them. They know what they're talking about," she said.

One very important thing to remember is to look people in the eye and look at their faces, Bratton said.

"We really don't look at people's faces. We need to do that either to establish that you are not afraid or to later identify that person to the police if you need to," she said.

Emigh said not looking a passing stranger in the eye may also make you a potential target to an attacker.

"Just because you don't look at someone won't make them go away. It may make you seem more vulnerable," she said.

Picking out a stereotype of an attacker may put you more at risk, Bratton said.

"You can't look at race, sex or anything else to determine whom to be afraid of. If you are only going to look at men of a certain race, you are putting yourself at risk. Many rapists are very charming and good-looking," she said.

▶ ADA REGULATIONS

Accessibility demands renovation

KIM HALL
Collegian

This is the first part of a five-part series about the Americans with Disabilities Act.

The construction of various buildings on campus is not only improving K-State's appearance, it is also complying with the Americans with Disabilities Act.

"For any new construction or renovation that takes place, the ADA applies the architectural standards that have to be met," Jennifer Kassebaum, senior assistant University attorney, said.

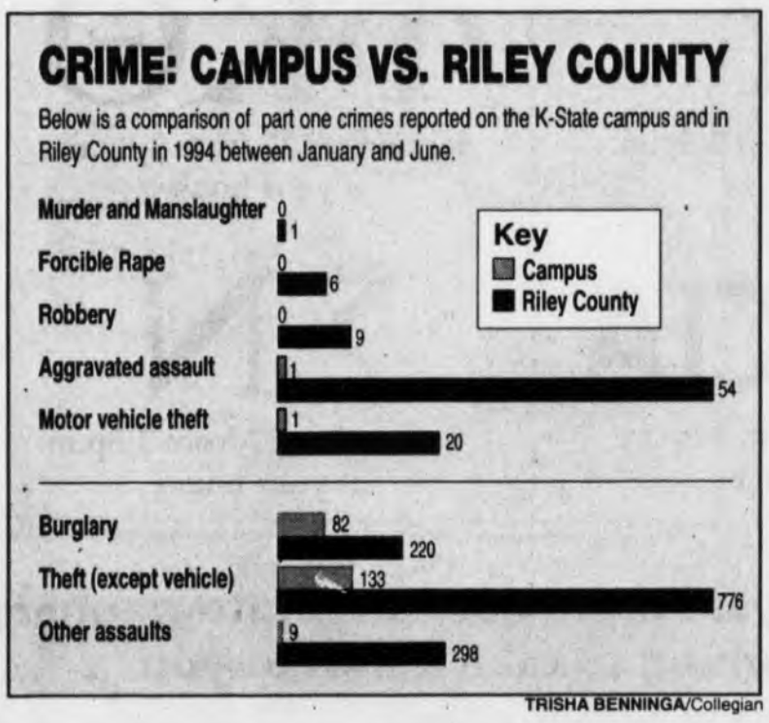
Americans with Disabilities Act

"What we have to do is make our programs, activities and services accessible, which we do on a consistent basis," she said.

Kassebaum said complying with the ADA is nothing new.

"We've been under these rules since the Rehabilitation Act of 1973, under section 504," she said. "We've been under those rules that long."

Kassebaum said complying with the ADA includes ensuring a physically disabled student access to all classrooms.



"If a class is located in a building with no handicapped accessibility, then the class will be relocated," she said.

Jerry Carter, director of facilities planning and University architect, said the Committee for the Disabled has a lot of influence on these projects.

"They establish the majority of the priorities for the projects that we undertake to make the campus accessible for all disabled persons," he said.

Carter said the biggest projects this year include a new elevator in Eisenhower Hall, new accessible restroom facilities for men and women in the basement, first and second floors

▶ CRIME

Campus crime down due to patrols

PRUDENCE SIEBERT
Collegian

Riley County crime has increased over the last few years, but campus crime has decreased since 1991.

The Riley County crime rate showed a 28-percent increase within the decade of 1984-93 and a 7-percent increase from 1991 to '93.

Lt. Rodney Jager, with the records and communications division at the Riley County Police Department, gave reason for this change.

"Manhattan is becoming larger. The population is growing," Jager said. "The more people there are to police, the more opportunity for crime."

Campus crime decreased 41 percent from 1991 to 1993.

Richard Herrman, University detective, said crime trends follow what is popular at the time.

"Crime follows what's trendy or fad," Herrman said. "It's supply and demand. If people out there want Kenwood stereos, then Kenwood stereos get stolen."

Jager said the flood had an effect on the number of calls RCPD received.

Herrman said the types of crimes on campus dealt mainly with domestic issues and petty theft during the flood.

"We had people up here (in the Union) that we didn't normally have," Herrman said.

K-State Police have taken steps to improve safety on campus. Preventive measures already used have become more widespread.

"There are more emergency phones. We've gradually been increasing the number and the locations," Herrman said. "New lights were added to areas that used to be darker."

Herrman said the walking patrol and the bicycle patrol have been helpful in crime prevention and apprehension.

"The walking patrol can get behind housing areas where you don't normally see or get to with cars," Herrman said. "The bicycle patrol can cut through and get to places quicker. They come across things that would've been missed by a patrol car."

Herrman said deterrence was important.

"If you can prevent a crime, it's much better than after the fact," Herrman said. "Then, you're dealing with who committed the crime and restitution."

Statistics can sometimes be misleading, he said, especially when offenses are cited under one large title, and many of those offenses may not be serious.

"Stat-wise, I do not feel K-State is a dangerous university," Herrman said. "Any place, be it in the city or out in the country, is as dangerous as you let it be."

Wet Willie water makes a big splash in market

LEIGH BELLINGER
Collegian

John Fairman sits behind his desk in Anderson Hall and shakes his head in amazement.

One year after being approached by the Collegiate Water Company, the success of Wet Willie, a sodium-free bottled water, still amazes the assistant vice president for University relations, who just happens to have a bottle of the wet stuff on his desk.

Not only can Wet Willie be found in more than 70 stores around the Manhattan area and even more across the state, but the University has received $4,700 as part of product royalty fees that go directly to student scholarships.

"My initial reaction was 'oh, this is interesting — water,'" Fairman said.

When the company pitched the idea to him in the summer of 1993, Fairman said he had no idea there was even a market for Wet Willie, much less that it would be successful.

When the water finally hit the shelves in November, it seemingly rode on the coat tails of the school's Copper Bowl

NEWS BRIEFS

▶ KANSAS CITY POLICE SET UP SPECIAL SQUAD TO INVESTIGATE HOMICIDES

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Baffled by a series of dismembered bodies pulled from the Missouri River, investigators are using new forensic techniques to sift through old evidence in the 8-year-old case.

They have no solid suspects, and they say the slayer — if there is just one — does not fit the typical profile for a serial killer.

But they do know they lack vital clues.

"If we had a wish, our wish would be to give us a crime scene, a weapon, something that we can work on and get grounded in," said Capt. Gregory Mills, commander of the Kansas City homicide unit.

"With a typical homicide, you have a crime scene with a body and some evidence that lets you make some judgment as to what happened," Mills said. But in these cases, "you have no crime scene. It's like assembling a Christmas toy without directions."

Since 1986, the mutilated bodies of three prostitutes and a teen-age girl have been pulled from the river.

More than 30 detectives from 10 different agencies, including the FBI, tried to crack the first three cases.

But when the body of Viola McCoy, 36, was pulled from the river this month, her legs surgically severed as were those of the first three, police made a change.

Kansas City has formed a special squad to investigate all four slayings. The six detectives and a sergeant have been working 12 to 15-hour days, seven days a week since Sept. 14.

"I think this one's different than any other type of serial killer," said retired Kansas City Maj. Gary VanBuskirk. He supervised the last successful serial-killer investigation by the department — the 1990 capture of the Gilham Park strangler, Ray Shawn Jackson.

"When (Beverlie Tracy) was discovered," he said, "we put out a nationwide call for any other similar cases, and there were none."

Past investigations into the deaths of Melody Milliner, 24, Kimberly Rash, 19, and Tracy, 13, yielded hundreds of leads, few suspects and a lot of frustration.

Now, with improved forensic techniques, detectives are checking back 15 years into the victims' lives, looking for fresh clues, new leads and any similarities.

▶ KANSAS HIGHWAY PATROL DRUG BUST NETS 1,800 POUNDS OF MARIJUANA

Trooper Edward Drake stopped the truck about 6:10 p.m. Friday on U.S. 56 on the west edge of Olathe, the patrol said. After the driver gave permission, Drake searched the trailer and found 1,800 pounds of marijuana under some pallets at the front of the truck.

The driver was turned over to the Federal Drug Enforcement Administration, patrol Sgt. Ray Bailiff said.

Bailiff said he believed Friday's bust netted the most marijuana in state history. The driver was hauling the pallets from Texas to Kansas City, Mo., Bailiff said. Trooper Blake Seacat, who assisted in the bust, said the marijuana had a street value of $1.8 million.

▶ 15-YEAR-OLD DIES AFTER SNIFFING GASOLINE FUMES WITH A FRIEND

DELBARTON, W.Va. (AP) — A teen-ager died after sniffing gasoline fumes with a friend, medical investigators said.

Last Wednesday, Shawn Christopher Jessie, 15, and a friend got a can of gasoline and "began huffing gas" on a bridge, Mingo County Sheriff's Deputy J.B. Cook said.

When the friend decided to go home, Jessie was unable to get up and was taken to Williamson Memorial Hospital, where he was pronounced dead.

The state medical examiner's office found Shawn suffered heart failure, Cook said. The youth had sniffed gasoline at least twice before, he said. Delbarton is about 100 miles southwest of Charleston, near the Kentucky state line.

▶ NORTH KOREA THREATENS TO LIFT FREEZE ON NUCLEAR ACTIVITIES

GENEVA (AP) — The United States has accused North Korea of changing its position on agreements intended to remove suspicions that the communist state is developing nuclear weapons.

North Korea, meanwhile, threatened to respond to U.S. pressure by lifting the freeze on its nuclear program and warned Washington not to treat North Korea like Haiti.

"If the United States acts rudely, judging as if the DPRK were a small island in the Caribbean, it will pay dearly," said a Foreign Ministry statement carried by the official Korean Central News Agency and monitored in Seoul.

"If the United States persistently resorts to military threats, we will have no other choice but to lift our temporary freeze of our nuclear activities," the statement said.

DPRK is the acronym for Democratic People's Republic of Korea, North Korea's official name.

In Geneva, a senior U.S. official said the North Koreans had taken "a creative approach" on some issues decided in talks in August, including the question of compensation for energy lost during the freezing of North Korea's nuclear program.

He did not say how else North Korea had changed its position.

Pyongyang agreed in August to freeze its nuclear program after the United States agreed to strengthen diplomatic links with North Korea and help it replace its nuclear plants.

The United States is trying through negotiations to persuade North Korea to open its secretive nuclear program to international inspections. North Korea has denied Western allegations it has produced at least one nuclear weapon, but has refused to let inspectors verify those claims.

Talks are to continue today.

POLICE REPORTS

These reports are taken directly from the daily logs of the K-State and Riley County Police departments. Because of space constraints, not all crimes are listed.

K-STATE POLICE

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 23

At 9:50 a.m., facilities reported damage to a coin-operated machine in a restroom at McCain Auditorium. Damage was $25.

At 10:49 a.m., Manhattan Fire Department responded to 1516 McCain Lane for smoke in the Chi Omega sorority house.

At 11:31 a.m., a two-vehicle accident occurred in Lot D-1W. Damage was more than $500.

At 3:20 p.m., a subject was hit by a bicyclist at the crosswalk between Ackert and Cardwell halls. Subject received injuries to elbows and knees.

At 5:15 p.m., Riley County Ambulance transported a subject that complained of numbness in his arms. The subject was transported to the Saint Mary Hospital from an indoor practice field.

At 11:22 p.m., a citation was issued to a subject for unlawful possession of beer on the sidewalk beside the Natatorium.

At 8:30 p.m., a citation was issued to a subject in reference to petty theft of stolen/misplaced property.

RILEY COUNTY POLICE

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 24

At 5:38 p.m., police received a report of a stray animal at Riley Lane where a bull was running loose. The bull was detained, and the owner, Brian Steele, came and retrieved the animal.

At 7:08 p.m., police were called to investigate a hazard at Butterfield Road and Galloway Drive. The subject reported two juveniles shooting BB guns and urinating on trees. Police were unable to locate the juveniles.

SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 25

At 12:59 a.m., police were called to a fight in progress at Rusty's Last Chance Restaurant & Saloon. Arrested for battery and disorderly conduct was Steven M. Beranek, of Wichita. Bond was set at $500.

At 1:49 a.m., Michael J. Browning, of Fort Riley, was arrested at TW Longhorn's for disorderly conduct. Bond was set at $300.

At 3:40 a.m., Teresa V. Wagner, 316 N. 11th St., was arrested for DUI at Juliette Avenue and Moro Street.

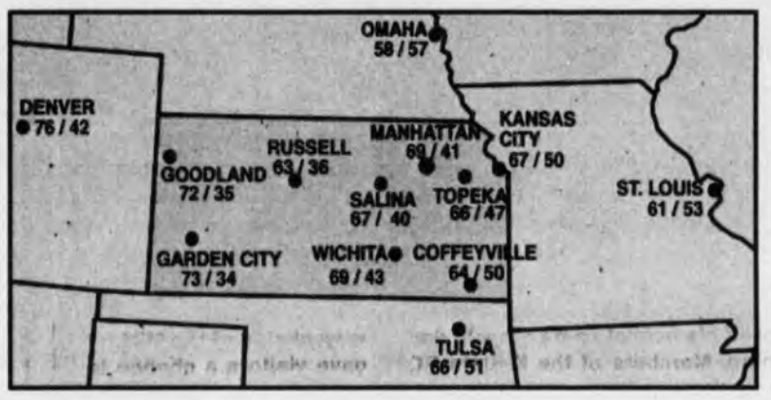
CORRECTIONS



The picture on page three of Friday's Collegian that was labeled as K-State-Salina Dean Jack Henry was not Henry.

The headline on Dear Cassie in Friday's paper was incorrect. Bread is typically low in fat. The fan loaves that the K-State Union sells have 22-percent calories from fat. According to sources in the grain science department, this is within healthy parameters.

In the front page story, "Crisis Center assists sexual assault, rape victims," the following statements were incorrect: "Sexual battery is when a person is touched by another without consent; Aggravated sexual battery is when a person is touched by another with any object." These statements should have said: Sexual battery is when any person is sexually touched without consent; Aggravated sexual battery is when a person is sexually touched by another with any object without consent.

New facilities at rest area

KDOT workers to be honored with memorial

MANDY HANSON
Collegian

The new rest area near the Paxico exit between Manhattan and Topeka on Interstate 70 will be the site for a memorial to honor Kansas Department of Transportation workers who have been killed on the job.

Gov. Joan Finney will attend a groundbreaking ceremony at the rest area at 10 a.m. Tuesday.

The rest area was scheduled to reopen on Sept. 15 after 16 months of construction, but it has been delayed.

Demolition of the original rest area began on April 29, 1993.

The new rest area, which is composed of two contemporary buildings built out of concrete, cost $2,854,000, Sandy Tommer, area engineer for the Wamego Department of Transportation, said.

The rest area was completely reconstructed as a result of foundation problems and the expense of several previous attempts at remodeling, Tommer said.

"Unfavorable weather, such as last year's flooding and problems with the architectural design were two of the main reasons for the slow pace of reconstruction," Tommer said.

The primary contractor for the project is McPherson Contractors of Topeka.

"The necessity of adding new roads along with the large amount of ground work added to the completion time needed for the project," Bill Sims, vice president of McPherson Contractors, said.

The money to build the rest area came from two different funds.

"Ninety percent of the money to build the rest area has come from Federal Highway Administration funds, while 10 percent came from state funds," Tommer said.

Some features of the rest area include an observation deck on the west side and automatic sensors in the hand washers and commodes. The rest area will also have picnic tables with shades.

Landplan in Lawrence contracted Goenn, Livingood and Benzoer Architects, also in Lawrence, to come up with the plans for the rest area, Beena Ramaswami, rest area designer for Goenn, Livingood and Benzoer, said.

The rest area construction was part of a road work contract established between KDOT and Landplan, Ramaswami said.

"We were trying to link the two rest stops to the landscape," Ramaswami said. "I designed the rest stops as semicircles because it flows with your vision as you keep driving."

Once the rest area is reopened, KDOT expects to have 2,000 people stop at the area each day, Anita Helt, public information officer for the Kansas Department of Transportation, said.

Memorial designed by K-Stater

MANDY HANSON
Collegian

A K-State graduate student was selected by the Department of Transportation and Gov. Joan Finney to design a memorial to KDOT workers.

Joe Larsen, graduate student in landscape architecture, designed the memorial to honor KDOT workers who have been killed on the job.

The memorial will be located at the remodeled rest area along Interstate 70 between Manhattan and Topeka, Anita Helt, public information officer for KDOT, said.

Larsen, a KDOT intern in Topeka this summer, said he heard about the internship from a friend in his studio.

"I had to go through an interview process and was assigned to the Environmental Services Division and worked in the Bureau of Design," he said.

Larsen was the only landscape architecture student chosen for the KDOT internship program, he said.

Larsen said his boss asked him if he would be interested in designing the memorial, which was requested by Finney.

"First, I submitted several concepts, and my superiors recommended some changes," he said.

"I made a second presentation board, and they liked it. About a week after that, I made a presentation to Gov. Finney, and she loved it."

The memorial sits on a 15-foot by 30-foot area and is made of five 6-foot by 8-foot cottonwood limestone panels.

The walls of the memorial are sculpted with a mural of two construction workers.

"One of the workers is a flag person, and the other is a surveyor viewing the rolling prairie with a road carved out of it," Larsen said.

The work on the memorial is expected to be completed by the end of the fall semester, he said. However, the memorial will not be displayed at the rest area until the spring.

"I really feel honored to be involved with something like this," Larsen said.

IN OUR OPINION

By the Collegian Editorial Board

Confusion develops over rape reports

In trying to be fair and sensitive to everyone, confusion about the Smurthwaite rape developed.

There has been some confusion about whether a rape took place at Smurthwaite.

Rapes are complicated subjects to report.

They require sensitivity to the survivor of the rape, as well as a responsibility to report to the public the events that surrounded the rape.

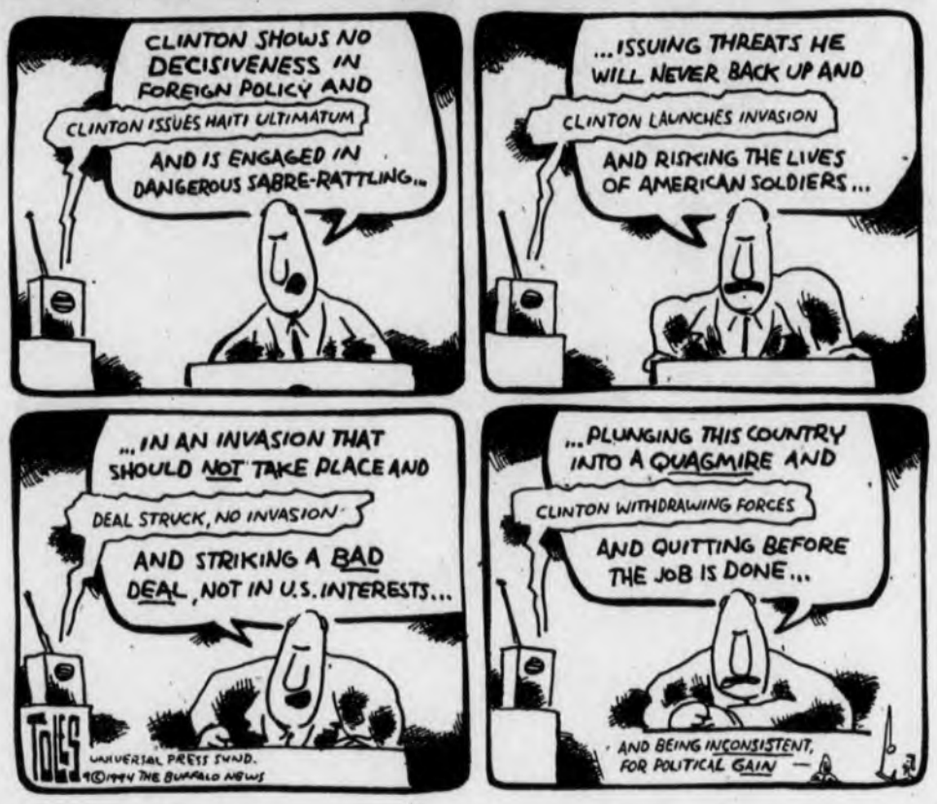
The survivor of a rape should not have to suffer any more trauma than what has already happened, and the public needs to be made aware in order to take the necessary action to maintain its safety.

There is a need to report as much as we can without becoming graphic, insensitive or vulgar.

In trying to maintain a balance, stories can become confusing, which is what might have happened in our coverage of the Smurthwaite rape.

In the first article concerning this particular case, it could be interpreted in a way that the victim's scream prevented the attack.

Unfortunately, this was not the case. The victim's screams caused the attacker to flee the scene only after she was raped.



Both police and hospital reports show a rape did occur.

The police are currently searching for the suspect.

In trying to be sensitive, we may have caused some confusion.

We are trying to inform our readers without causing fear to run rampant.

TOLES

Lots of arguments on campus

It seems like everyone on this campus is defensive about everything.

You can't swing a constructive comment on this campus without hitting somebody in a defensive spot.

JOHN MEIROWSKY

It's OK to be defensive to a point, but lashing out at the medium or the person delivering isn't really necessary.

The latest episode of this happened Thursday night on DB-92's "A Purple Affair."

Have you ever watched or listened to something just because you wanted to know whether you should be offended?

You'd hate to miss it and have someone else tell you that you should have been offended.

This is often the case with "A Purple Affair."

The show opened with a letter written by one of the moderators about the events of this semester. The first comment was the amount of coverage the Collegian has given to the subject of rape. He thought it was a bit much.

The newsroom went nuts. How dare he question the Collegian in its infinite wisdom.

Collegian members flooded the phone lines. Accusations flowed freely. The show turned into a Collegian vs. "A Purple Affair" fight.

In the end, little was resolved, and everyone was angry.

The Collegian isn't the only group involved in these little battles. You got greeks vs. greeks, students vs. the administration, student groups vs. the Student Governing Association.

Why does everyone get so mad about criticism?

Nobody likes it. We all work hard for our student groups and our jobs with little or no approval from others. Then when you hear something, it's bad news.

It's frustrating. So, you blow off the criticism, whether it's well founded and attack the individual.

"That person doesn't know. That person wasn't there. He probably wears dresses."

You get in the argument mode. You started formulating your argument before the person finishes. So, you don't listen to what the other person says.

You are never able to improve anything because you are spending most of your time defending yourself and attacking the other.

Instead, people need to listen to what others are saying. Use that time when you would normally be spent formulating your argument to analyze what is being said or what is being written.

If after you analyze the argument, you decide it has no validity, then dismiss it. And let that be it.

But lots of times, people go further than that. They attack the person rather than the issue.

You see examples of this in the letters-to-the-editor section often. Readers will attack the writer or the person involved. What's the point in doing that? Besides, it's very difficult to convince people that they are idiots.

In the end, we all need to learn to accept criticism better. That's something the Collegian may have learned after the war with "A Purple Affair."

Sex-offender laws disguise fear

I've been following the struggles of Peggy and Gene Schmidt with interest.

They are the parents of Stephanie Schmidt, who will forever be remembered as the woman who was murdered by Donald Gideon.

LOLA SHRIMPLIN

Stephanie was raped and murdered by Donald Gideon in Pittsburg, Kansas. Gideon was a co-worker who had been recently serving time in jail for raping another college student.

I admire what they have done in the way of the new sex-offender laws in the State of Kansas.

I admire the way they keep fighting for new laws to be adopted.

That's where it ends, though.

Now they are trying to get a 24-hour 1-900 line installed, so that people can call the Kansas Bureau of Investigation to find out if their new neighbor is a sex offender.

Well hell, why don't we just tattoo it on their foreheads?

Whoa, people. Let's stop and take a breath here, OK?

This has left the realms of rules for the sake of protection and has become a sort of witch-hunt.

On the exterior, it sounds like a good idea. Look deeper, though.

Gene Schmidt said that this could apply to a new neighbor or some girl picking up some guy in a bar.

He then added the statement, "Wouldn't you want to know?"

Well, who wouldn't?

In the 1950s, people also wanted to know if a Communist was living next to them.

This led to a national phobia that led to innocent people being convicted for a crime that wasn't even a crime.

Now, things such as rape, incest and child molestation ARE crimes. There's no doubt about that.

But what happens when the KBI gets a name confused or misspelled? (After all, it IS a governmental agency.)

What happens when that name belongs to someone who is innocent?

What happens when there are two John Smiths living in the same town?

Who says that the guy in the bar will give the woman his real name? Should she ask him for two forms of ID?

The Schmidts also want to implement mandatory AIDS or HIV testing for anyone accused of rape.

Accused.

This has gone beyond the realms of sanity.

No amount of change in the laws is going to bring Stephanie back.

While it may well protect some other person, the mission of protecting people is evolving into a hate-filled witch-hunt.

I can't begin to understand the anger and pain that these people must feel at the loss of their daughter.

But there's a point where fighting for a cause turns into a vendetta — when anger and pain blind you to anything other than that mission.

My main problem with these new laws is that they are disguising something.

That thing is fear.

When people are afraid, they cease to think. They allow a leader to do the thinking for them.

In this case, those leaders are Gene and Peggy Schmidt.

After all, no one is better qualified. Gene and Peggy have lost a daughter for no good reason. The lawmakers feel guilty for not having had laws in place to prevent this tragedy from happening.

So with the righteous anger of the suffering, the Schmidts are spearheading the reform movement.

And who's going to refuse them?

After all, if the lawmakers had the sexual-predator law in place, Stephanie might still be alive.

While carrying the metaphoric cross with the picture of Stephanie Schmidt on it for all to see, people are being blinded to the fact that these laws go against everything the Constitution says.

And it's disguised under a simple statement.

"Wouldn't you want to know?"

Lola Shrimplin a senior in political science.

White males are discriminated against

Dear Editor,

This is a response to the article about how the University is hiring minorities over white males, and (yes, that is exactly what is going on here.) this is completely and utterly racist and supportive of discrimination.

I sincerely hope a person who was not hired as a faculty member here because "he" was "white" sues this University for every penny it has. Unfortunately, this will never happen, and even if it did, our guilt-ridden government would side with the minorities.

Why must people today pay for the sins of a century ago? This, I would like a "diverse" faculty member to explain to me. Why are people who are qualified, passed over for someone of color? If you can't see the racism here, then you are so blind as to never see daylight. The hiring of people of color and women leaves out only one type of person: the white male. Can no one but me see this as blatant racism?

This all-out effort is not so much to hire minorities as it is to keep out certain stereotypical people away from jobs they worked long and hard for. Just because there are a lot of white male professors does not mean they were hired because of this. I wonder how the faculty that were hired for their color feel to know they are only a statistic.Why can't this University open its eyes and see this hiring practice causes the same racism it is trying to eliminate. What kind of dumbass hires on the basis of sex and color?

Since the University is going to hire a lot of minorities to teach on a mostly white campus, I wonder how they figure out who is under-represented? Do they compare minority student numbers to the number of minority professors? If they did it this way, the numbers would be very close or even slanted in the other direction.

Learning math, science or engineering does not depend on the color or the sex of the teacher. Isn't this what the educators of this nation have tried to teach us? This University is doing the opposite. Having an artificially diverse faculty shows the white male one thing — that he will be the new black man of society. He will be discriminated against by socialist liberals, guilty public servants, and college administrators who kiss minority ass.

Finally, yes, you can have excellence without diversity. The Greeks did it for ages and so did this country for two centuries. If we have diversity, it is a plus not a must. It is the quality of the person, not his skin color. This I believe, even though this University thinks otherwise.

Please someone, wake up the president of this University before he makes a complete ass out of himself.

Mike Braman
senior in history

▶ JEFF PETERSON

Comments were taken out of context

Dear Editor,

In beginning my remarks, I would like to express my deep concerns about the article that was printed about Jeff Peterson in the Friday edition of the Sept. 23 Collegian.

As a student senator, I was approached by the Collegian to respond about Jeff Peterson, and while I am an elected official to the Student Senate, I, as one person, do not represent the entire voice of the Student Governing Association.

I would generally encourage the Collegian in the future to seek more than one source from the Student Senate in writing articles on issues that affect the entire student body or its student government association.

In addition to that issue, I was also disappointed with the style in which my remarks were made about Jeff's presence in Wichita. In the phone conversation I had, I went to great lengths to show support for our student body president and concern over his recent hospitalization. In no way do I lay any blame on Jeff Peterson in his becoming sick and not being able to be on campus.

My remarks, as I gave them during the interview, were to raise concern over the possibility of issues arising on campus that would be immediately addressed by the office of Student Body President, but because Jeff was in Wichita, what was going to occur next.

Furthermore, when asked about the issue that Jeff Peterson would not be able to fulfill all of his responsibilities, I merely gave a constitutional interpretation which says the vice president, Brad Finkeldel, would then step in and fulfill those responsibilities.

I would like to make it clear as a member of SGA and a student that I am very concerned about Jeff's condition and look forward to him getting well soon and returning to K-State.

To the Collegian, I would like to ask that if interviews and remarks are going to be asked for from any source on campus, they be placed in the correct context so as not to stir any additional controversies, especially when they were never intended in the first place.

Directions made access easier

Dear Editor,

The E-Collegian is a fine idea, and one that shows that K-State is moving more and more into the future. What concerns me is the ad you placed in the paper last week advertising it.

I am an employee of Computing and Network Services, and my main purpose is to maintain the public labs (software, hardware and etc.). In one of this week's paper, you advertised the electronic Collegian and then you gave this parameter — http://www.spub.ksu.edu/

Now I know what that means, and quite a few other computer junkies know what that means, but do you honestly think the campus and staff as a whole understands that parameter?

To clarify this to the rest of the world, http://www.spub.ksu.edu/ is an electronic address that allows the internet tool, Mosaic, to display the Collegian via computer. It allows people all over the world to view the K-State Collegian via computer.

It can be accessed on campus in any of the CNS Public Labs and some of the departmental labs. In the CNS Public Labs, a user can view it by selecting Windows from the main menu and then selecting Mosaic from the second page of the CNS Windows Lab Menu. Mosaic will automatically bring up K-State's "Home Page" and then users can use the pointer to select the Collegian.

The Collegian is a good newspaper, and the Electronic Collegian is a great idea ... I suggest when advertised you should go a little more into detail.

▶ CONGRESSIONAL RACE

Brownback cites differences, qualifications to gain support

BOB MACHA
Collegian

Sam Brownback was in Manhattan Friday, hoping to gain some votes for the 2nd Congressional District race.

The biggest difference between Republican candidate Sam Brownback and his Democratic opponent John Carlin is that Brownback is for smaller government, Brownback said.

"Probably the biggest issue is the different view of the role of government," he said.

He said he is for privatization and reducing the role of government while Carlin is not.

For example, he is against tax increases while Carlin raised taxes six times in eight years as governor, Brownback said.

He said government needs to be made more efficient. He said this could be accomplished by changing processes.

Brownback said it is not realistic to point to specific programs to be cut.

"People want me to say these 33 programs over here. No. I can't do that," he said.

"We need to agree on a fair process and stick to it," he said.

He gave the example of the military base closings in 1988. Congress debated it and took an all-or-nothing vote. A yes vote meant the representative wanted to close the 23 bases, and a no vote meant the representative was against it. Those bases were closed because of that vote, and that was the end of the matter, he said.

Brownback said the military is one of the core functions of government, so he is for keeping the army at it's full 12-division strength.

"I heard John Carlin issue a statement a day or two ago about how he is the best man to save Fort Riley," Brownback said. "I think that is a ludicrous statement."

He said he doesn't understand that statement because of Carlin's strong ties to Bill Clinton.

President Clinton had supported the cutback of the military from 12 divisions to 10, which put Fort Riley in jeopardy in the first place, he said.

Carlin said he supported it, and therefore Carlin would simply be another vote for Clinton, Brownback said.

Brownback said there are two things on his résumé that qualify him to serve in Congress.

The first is his background. He is from Parker and has lived in the district his entire life, he said. Brownback was also a state and national Future Farmers of America officer.

He earned a bachelor's degree in agriculture economics at K-State in 1979 and a law degree from Kansas. Brownback taught agricultural law from 1983 to 1986 while working as a farm broadcaster for K-State. He also co-authored two books on agricultural law.

He served six years as state secretary of agriculture and was a White House Fellow with U.S. Trade Representative Carla Hills.

Brownback said he would help the K-State community because he had lived in Manhattan for 10 years and is familiar with the area.

He said he would work for research grants for K-State so new uses could be found for farm commodities, such as making plastic from wheat.

His background would help him to do this because he understands agriculture, he said.

Registration process takes little time, effort

BOB MACHA
Collegian

People in charge of two campus political groups said absentee voting is easier than most think.

"Most people think it's a hassle. They don't realize how easy it is," Becca Korphage, chairperson of College Republicans and junior in political science, said. "They don't think their vote counts."

Michelle Smith, president of Young Democrats and senior in political science, said she has voted by absentee ballot.

"It took 10 minutes, which is about as long as it would take if I went in to vote," Smith said.

Ilene Colbert, county clerk and election officer, said students should apply for an absentee ballot in early October. Students may go in and apply, or have someone do it for them. Colbert said the easiest way is to have your parents go in for you, but you need to make sure that you and your parents talk about what you are doing so you don't end up with two ballots. The ballot needs to be at the polling place by 7 p.m. on election day.

VOTER REGISTRATION

The deadline to register is Oct. 24, and the election is Nov. 8. There are a few basic requirements to vote. You have to be 18 by Nov. 8. If you move, you'll have to re-register.

There are 20 places you can register in Riley County, including the Office of Student Activities and Services in the K-State Union.

Marines kill 10 in firefight

ASSOCIATED PRESS

CAP-HAITIEN, Haiti — Haitian soldiers and police abandoned their posts throughout the city as authority collapsed Sunday in Cap-Haitien. Hundreds of Haitians ransacked the stations, carrying off guns, identity cards, even musical instruments.

Haitians took to the streets a day after Marines killed 10 armed men outside a police station. It was the first clash between Haitians and American occupation troops sent to restore the elected government.

The main military barracks, main police station and about a dozen smaller posts were abandoned sometime after the firefight. Word spread to the streets, bringing hundreds out to trash the property of those who had ruled them.

The crowds seized huge caches of weapons. Some shots were heard, but many people appeared to be handing the weapons over to the Marines. At other posts, Haitians pulled out identity cards and firearm permits.

At the main military barracks, Haitians took everything they could lay their hands on, even tubas and trombones. They played the instruments in the streets as crowds gathered outside.

Marines, hearing the sounds of some guns that were apparently being fired in the air, stormed the main military barracks, met no resistance and secured it. They set up checkpoints all over the city, trying to keep the collapse of Haitian authority from turning dangerous.

No casualties were seen.

One man displayed tarnished bullets from an M-1 clip in a magazine to a reporter. He was directed to nearby Marines in an armored personnel carrier. He then handed his bullets to the Marines.

"I give, I give!" he said.

"These people are really happy today, but they're still scared," said Lance Cpl. Darin Mendoza of Miami. "They're telling us they want us to stay for another 20 years."

Near police headquarters, a group of Haitians grabbed a man and dragged him into a house, apparently believing he was an attache, one of the civilian strongmen backed by police, said an Associated Press photographer

Asked where the man was being taken, an unidentified Haitian told Deryk: "They will be judged."

In the firefight Saturday evening, American servicemen said the Haitians opened fire first. It wasn't clear whether the 10 dead men were police or attaches.

The firefight was followed by a long siege as Marines tried to persuade two men inside, believed to be policemen wounded in the shooting, to give themselves up.

Marines had cleared the building by Sunday morning, officials said, although it wasn't immediately clear what happened to the two holdouts. Outside the building, Marines spent the morning washing down the blood on the street.

Maj. Steve Little, a Marine spokesman, said 10 Haitians were killed. Another Haitian who was seriously wounded was flown to the USS Wasp, a helicopter assault ship, for treatment. Two 38-caliber handguns and an M-1 assault rifle were seized.

Lt. Col. Steve Hartley, the battalion commander who arrived on the scene minutes after the deadly clash, said the platoon from Echo Company had stopped across the street from the station on its evening patrol.

When armed men came out of the station, words were exchanged, and there was gunfire, Hartley said.

Cpl. Mike Arnett, a member of the Echo Company platoon on patrol, said armed men came out of the police station and opened fire.

"Four guys came out from the front desk, saw us and got spooked and lit up their weapons," he said. "And we returned fire."

An E-3 Navy seaman apprentice serving as an interpreter received a flesh wound in the leg and was also evacuated to the USS Wasp Sunday morning, said Marine Gunnery Sgt. Terri Allen, a military spokeswoman in Port-au-Prince.

After the gunfight, Marine interpreters and Haitian policemen in the station shouted back and forth in the darkness as Marines

Golden Gophers buried by Wildcats

Better.

The only word that can be used to describe K-State's 35-0 victory over the Minnesota Golden Gophers Saturday at KSU Stadium.

"I feel a lot better than I did last week," coach Bill Snyder said. "Our players know that they played well.

"That's what's important to get off the field and know that you played well," he said.

The game marked the first shutout by a K-State defense since 1992, when it blanked Oklahoma State 10-0 in Manhattan.

Jim Leavitt, co-defensive coordinator, said stopping Minnesota's running game was important to the Cats' success on defense.

"I don't know how many yards (Chris) Darkins had, but that was a big key," Leavitt said.

The Wildcats limited the Gophers to 195 yards total offense and only 10 first downs.

The Gophers drove to K-State's seven-yard line on Minnesota's opening drive.

Schade floated a pass into the end zone which was picked off by strong safety Clyde Johnson, ending Gophers scoring threat of the contest.

"At that time, it was a big play, and it was a little bit of a lift," Snyder said. "I know this, if somebody comes and gets on the board early in the first quarter, you can't fold your tent and go home, and our players are not going to do that.

"I think if they had scored, our players would still have come back and played the way we did," he said.

Another miscue swung the momentum in the Cats' favor with 2:16 remaining before halftime. K-State was ahead 7-0 when Mike Lawrence broke through the middle of the line and blocked Mike Kimbell's punt out of bounds, giving K-State the ball on Minnesota's 24-yard line.

"There wasn't anything planned," Lawrence said. "I just saw the opening and stretched for the ball just like the coaches teach us to do."

Three plays later, quarterback Chad May connected on a 24-yard touchdown pass to Tyson Schwieger, making the score 14-0 at halftime.

K-State rode the momentum into the second half, scoring on a five-play 74-yard drive. Wide receiver Kevin Lockett scored for the first time of the season, catching a 23-yard pass in the corner of the end zone and extending the Cats' lead to 21-0 with 8:02 remaining in the third quarter.

"Chad put the ball right where it had to be," Lockett said. "I felt good to be a part of the win."

Lockett snared five catches for 64 yards in the game.

"Coach really got on us about how we played against Rice," Lockett said. "We knew we had to come out and play better."

May threw for three touchdowns in the game, tying a career high. In his last seven contests, May has thrown 12 touchdown passes and only one interception.

"That's incredible," Minnesota coach Jim Wacker said. "The fact that he never throws any interceptions is really incredible. He's a big-time quarterback."

The Gophers made one last effort to score late in the third quarter with a 14-play drive to the Cats' 15-yard line. However, the drive stalled after an offensive pass-interference penalty, a sack by defensive end Nyle Wiren, and a delay-of-game penalty the Gophers found themselves on the K-State 39-yard line.

After another holding penalty was declined by the Cats, the Gophers came up without any points and punted the ball on fourth and 32. The scoreless drive consumed five minutes and 17 seconds.

K-State extended its lead further at the beginning of the fourth quarter on a 42-yard drive capped off on a 1-yard plunge by Rod Schiller, making the score 28-0.

Matt Miller rounded out the scoring on a 1-yard quarterback sneak, making the score 35-0. Running back Leon Edwards carried the ball five times on the six-play drive. Edwards finished the game with 40 yards on seven carries.

"This win means a lot to us," running back J.J. Smith said. "It means a lot because it says we are getting better."

Smith eclipsed the 100-yard barrier for the second consecutive game with a career-high 137 yards on 23 carries.

The Cats open the Big Eight Conference schedule against the University of Kansas on Thursday, Oct. 6, a game which was on the players' mind even during the Minnesota game.

"I had thoughts about it during the game when the fans started chanting 'Bring on the Hawks,'" Smith said. "It's the most important game right now only because it is our next game."

Defense impresses Minnesota coach with shut-out performance

CRESTON KUENZI

The K-State defense picked up its first shutout in two years with the 35-0 win over Minnesota.

The last one was a 10-0 victory over Oklahoma State on Nov. 21, 1992.

Minnesota coach Jim Wacker said he was impressed by the performance of the Wildcats' defense.

"Give the K-State defense a lot of credit," Wacker said. "We couldn't get anything going, and they whipped us.

"They whipped us in every way they could."

K-State coach Bill Snyder said much of their success had to do with masking their defenses.

"They've got a very sophisticated offense, and that can create a problem if they know what you're doing," Snyder said. "I thought our players and coaches did an awfully good job of being able to disguise our defenses."

The Cats limited the Golden Gophers to 195 total yards in the game and caused them to punt 11 times in the game.

"They took away our game," Minnesota quarterback Tim Schade said. "They took away the outside and made us run between the tackles. They played an unbelievable game, and the scoreboard showed it."

The Cats' defense wasn't perfect, however. The Gopher's receivers dropped several passes, including two that could have gone for touchdowns.

"We were fortunate on a few plays here and there, but that's going to happen," Bob Stoops, K-State co-defensive coordinator and secondary coach, said. "Our guys competed real well and challenged their receivers and quarterback."

Kirby Hocutt, K-State linebacker, said he didn't think the defense played as well as they're capable of playing.

"We had some busts, and we didn't have the pass rush that I thought we should have had at times," Hocutt said. "We made a few mistakes, and we'll improve on those, but overall, we did play a great game and we're very happy with this one."

The Cats limited the Gophers to 108 yards rushing, including 73 yards for the Big Ten Conference's leading rusher, Chris Darkins.

"Darkins is a heck of a running back," Hocutt said. "We knew they had a great passing attack, but our main key was to stop Darkins."

The Cats' secondary kept the Gophers' passing attack to 87 yards and intercepted two balls.

Coach Wacker said he was most impressed with the Cats' secondary.

"They have great quickness," Wacker said. "They graduated all those guys, but this year's secondary might be better than they were a year ago."

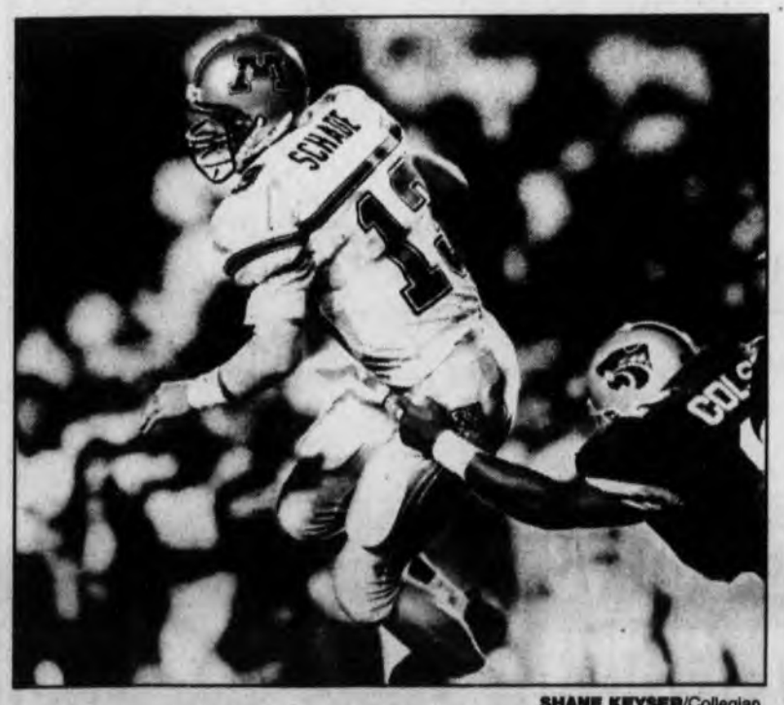
Coach Stoops said he was extremely pleased with the play of free safety Chuck Marlowe.

"He does an excellent job out there of getting people lined up," Stoops said. "One of our guys was out of position one time, and he walked up from his deep position and straightened him out."

GAME NOTES

K-STATE VS. MINNESOTA

✔ Saturday's attendance of 40,002 marked the largest crowd for a non-conference game in K-State history.



✔ With the 35-0 victory, K-State moved its home unbeaten streak to 16 games, its streak over non-conference opponents to eight, its streak of wins over non-ranked opponents to 23 consecutive games and its winning streak to six games.

✔ Chad May extended his current Big Eight passing record to 13 straight games with a touchdown completion.

✔ J.J. Smith's 137 yards on 23 carries marked the sixth time in his career he surpassed 100-yards rushing in a game.

✔ Tyson Schweiger has caught at least one touchdown pass in three straight games. He is the first Wildcat to accomplish this since Greg Washington had a five-game streak in 1988.

✔ Rod Schiller's touchdown run of one yard on one carry marked the first touchdown run of the season for the senior and his eighth as a Wildcat.

Players downplay KU clash

Let the understatements begin.

Every season in the days leading up to the annual K-State-KU clash, players on both sides downplay the importance of the game.

This season's harvest of indifferent comments started shortly after the Minnesota game Saturday night.

"I had too much respect for Minnesota," linebacker Percell Gaskins said. "They (Kansas) didn't even enter my mind."

Granted, I can't tell what goes on in Gaskins mind, but didn't the fans and players chanting "Bring on the Hawks" start the fire just a little bit?

However, some players were willing to admit they had been thinking about the Jayhawks, but still found time to downplay the enormity of the contest..

"It's always a big game," running back J.J. Smith said. "But it's our biggest game only because it's our next game."

The importance of the game cannot be denied. Remember 1992 when the Wildcats were crushed by the Jayhawks 31-7 at Lawrence. The game devastated K-State.

Three straight losses followed, including a 28-16 loss to Utah State, a 54-7 loss at Colorado and a 16-14 loss to Oklahoma.

K-State pounded out two wins over Iowa State and Oklahoma State for a 2-5 record in the Big Eight Conference and 5-6 overall.

Last season, the Cats beat KU 10-9, lost to Nebraska 45-28, tied Colorado 16-16 and beat Oklahoma 21-7. K-State finished the season at 4-2-1 in the Big Eight and 9-2-1 overall.

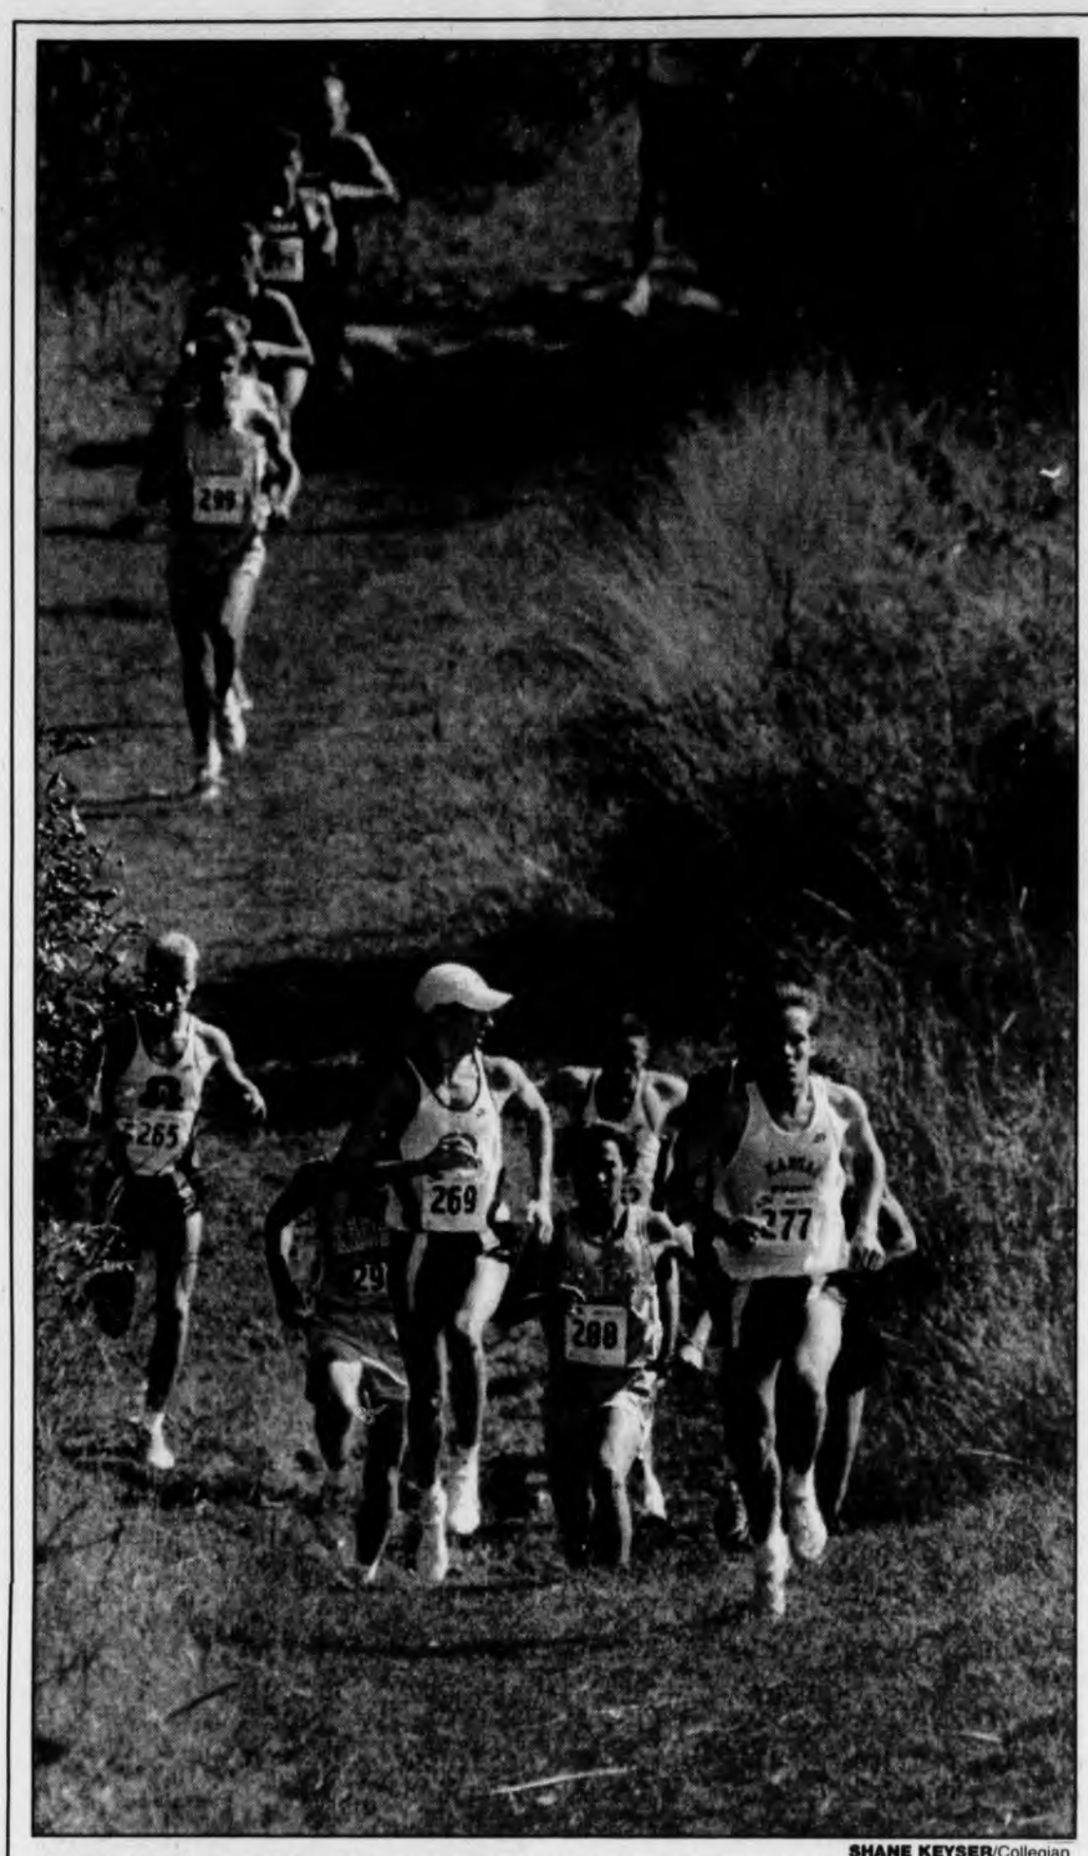
In 1991, K-State defeated the Jayhawks 16-12 in an emotional victory at Manhattan. The Wildcats finished the season 4-3 in the Big Eight and 7-4 overall.

This season, the KU game is followed by Nebraska at home. From there, K-State must travel to Colorado and Oklahoma. A demanding task for any team, let alone a discouraged one.

Quarterback Chad May said he understands the importance of the game.

"It's going to be a tough game," May said. "It's going to war.

"We're going to prepare hard,and do things right — we've got a great chance of winning," he said.



If nothing else, the fans make the game important. The game is guaranteed to be a sellout every year. Fans from both schools argue year-round about the contest, chickens die, students get intoxicated on the hill — not to mention ESPN is televising the game.

If the game weren't important to both schools then why do they both have the same amount of time off before the game every year?

This season both teams played lower-level Southwestern Conference and Big Ten Conference opponents like Rice, Houston, Texas Christian, Minnesota and Michigan State.

This is obviously done with the other team in mind. The Jayhawks' scheduling blunder against Florida State last season damaged KU's confidence all year.

It is almost unfair this game has to be played at the start of the Big Eight season, because if a team's season has to be destroyed, it just seems like a lot more fun to do it at the end of the year rather than the beginning.

Fatigue hurts team's finish

JULIE KUHLMAN

The KSU Invitational proved to be a struggle for the K-State women's cross country team.

The team had its invitational Saturday at Warner Park, but familiarity with the course wasn't enough.

Tough competition and fatigue from intense workouts proved to take its toll on the Wildcats' finishings.

"I really thought we'd do better," coach Terry Drake said. "I may have run them too hard this week."

K-State's top runner, Jeanene Rugan, placed 13th, which was considerably lower from what Drake said he thought she would finish.

"I thought Jeanene could win the race," he said. "She has been running more miles than anyone else, so she could have been tired."

Freshmen Charity Swartz was the team's top finisher, claiming third place for the Cats.

Drake said it wasn't a big surprise to him that his young runner placed so well.

"She's always had the talent, but I guess I didn't know just how good she was because of the probation last year," he said.

Runner Irma Betancourt also placed in the top 10 for the Cats.

"This was my first real race, so it was a good way to prepare me for the Big Eight," Betancourt said.

The top four teams were represented by the Big Eight Conference with Colorado winning the meet with 20 points, and Kansas finished second.

"Colorado was unstoppable today, and Kansas beat No. 1-ranked Arkansas," Drake said.

K-State was third with 72 points, and Oklahoma State followed with 95.

Rounding out the team standings were two Missouri Valley Conference teams — Wichita State and Creighton.

The men's team finished fourth out of six teams with 103 points.

Oklahoma State won the meet, followed by Colorado and Kansas. Wichita State finished fifth, and Creighton placed sixth.

The Cats were led by Billy Wuggazer, who has emerged as the Cats' front runner this season.

Wuggazer, who finished sixth running the course in 25 minutes and 19 seconds, said he owes much his success this season to his off-season training.

"I started training about the middle of June and ran all summer instead of waiting 'til August," he said.

K-State runner Geoff Delahanty, who placed 16th for the Cats, said Billy is doing a great job being the leader of the team.

"He's filled the shoes of being a leader well," he said.

Delahanty said he hopes to run with Wuggazer by the end of the season.

"Hopefully, I'll be right up there — our whole team should be better by the Big Eight meet," Delahanty said.

Drake said he was happy with both harriers outings.

"Billy continues to run well, as did Geoff Delahanty," Drake said.

Drake said to prepare for Arkansas, he will keep the intensity level lower this week so the teams will not be as tired for Arkansas.

"I'll still probably have them run as many miles, because it won't get any easier," he said.

Wuggazer said the meets are anything but getting easier.

"The competition was much tougher this week and next week will be even tougher," Wuggazer said.

Tennis team disappointed with effort

JAMIE BUSH

Inconsistency plagued the K-State tennis team throughout the Wildcat Traveler's Express Invitational at the L.P. Washburn Recreational area Saturday and Sunday.

"I was real disappointed with the way we looked today," K-State coach Steve Bietau said.

"On Saturday, we had some times where we looked good and sometimes where we didn't — you could call it inconsistent," Bietau said.

K-State all-American Karina Kuregian, seeing her first action since last spring, battled her way to the quarterfinals with teammate freshman Dinah Watson.

The duo was halted by two University of Kansas players, Kimberly Webster and Bianca Kirchhof, in a hard-fought match 3-6, 6-2, 6-4.

The Jayhawks, after a strong showing in the NCAA Championships last season, dominated throughout the two-day tournament.

They placed two doubles teams into the finals and won each of the three singles competitions.

"Kansas was the dominant player here," Bietau said.

Jayhawk Jenny Atkerson won the No. 1 singles 6-4, 7-5, defeating Big Eight foe Kym Hazzard, of Oklahoma State University.

Atkerson wasn't done yet though, as she paired up with teammate Christie Sim to reach the doubles final.

The duo was to play Jayhawk teammates Kirchhof and Webster, when the four netters elected not to play the final.

Kirchhof won the No. 2 doubles final, with a victory over Oklahoma State's Jacqui Gunthrop, 6-2, 6-0, while teammate Chessa Bieri dominated in the No. 3 singles match.

Bieri rolled to an easy victory over Catherine Johnson of Oral Roberts, 6-2, 6-0, to complete the sweep by the Jayhawks.

Freshman Chris Schulte provided the lone spark for the Wildcats though, as she served and volleyed her way through the No. 2 singles losers' bracket to record two impressive debut wins.

"I was pleased with the play of Chris Schulte this weekend," Bietau said. "She has really made some progress in the last two weeks, and led the team in competitiveness."

The netter improved her record to 2-0, with victories over Oral Roberts' Natalie Feinstein, 6-1, 6-0, and teammate Martine Shrubsole in three sets, 4-6, 6-3, 6-2.

K-State's Nikki Lagerstrom fought her way through the losers' bracket as well to capture a 6-1, 6-1 victory over Oral Roberts' Boyana Malvic in No. 3 singles action.

Although the Cats recorded several victories, coach Bietau said some things need to be addressed before going into Big Eight play.

Rams shut out Chiefs; Montana battles virus

Jerome Bettis gained 132 yards on 35 carries. It was the third consecutive game he gained 100 or more yards.

Kansas City fumbles first game

ASSOCIATED PRESS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — What Chuck Knox calls the best team in the NFL wasn't even the best team in Kansas City on a rainy day when Joe Montana has the flu.

Montana, fighting what Kansas City Chiefs' officials called a viral infection, played his worst game of the year and saw his team shut out for the first time in a 15-year career.

Willie Anderson scored on a 72-yard play off a deflected pass, and the Los Angeles Rams shocked the previously unbeaten Chiefs 16-0 Sunday.

The Rams (2-2) were heavy underdogs, and their coach knew it.

"This is the best football team I've seen in the NFL this year," said Knox, repeating what he's been saying all week.

"We're playing the best passer in pro football," Rams tackle Jackie Slater said.

"We beat probably one of the best teams in the AFC, maybe the best team in all the game."

In another historical oddity, it's the first time the Chiefs were shut out at home since 1985, when the same team beat them by the same score.

The Rams seized a 13-0 lead after the first quarter and maintained command throughout.

The Chiefs had opened the season with victories over three NFC West teams who were all favored over the Rams — the Saints, 49ers and Falcons.

"I don't think in your worst nightmare you could imagine the performance we put on out there today," Chiefs coach Marty Schottenheimer said.

Montana said his illness was no factor on his performance — 18 for 37 for 175 yards and three interceptions.

In a storied career that includes four Super Bowl titles and the highest passing percentage in NFL history, he had never before failed to guide his team to a score.

"That doesn't mean anything," he said. "I felt fine," he said.

"I didn't take any (medication) today."

Jerome Bettis, the Rams' 243-pound running back, picked up 132 yards on 35 carries, going more than 100 yards for the third straight game and helped the Rams (2-2) get rolling on their first possession behind second-team quarterback Chris Chandler.

"I don't think in your worst nightmare you could imagine the performance we put on out there today."

MARTY SCHOTTENHEIMER
Chiefs coach

Tony Zendejas hit a 29-yard field goal for a 3-0 lead, and a few minutes later, Louis Aguiar's 45-yard punt put the Rams on their own 28.

Chandler dropped back and fired over the middle to Jessie Hester, but the pass was high, and Hester leaped and tipped the ball higher.

It flew squarely into Anderson's arms at the 45, and he romped untouched for a 72-yard touchdown play, silencing the sellout crowd and giving the Rams an improbable 10-0 lead with more than three minutes left in the first quarter.

"If you're not playing at the top of your game, this can happen to you," Chandler said.

"We had the tipped touchdown. We got some lucky breaks.

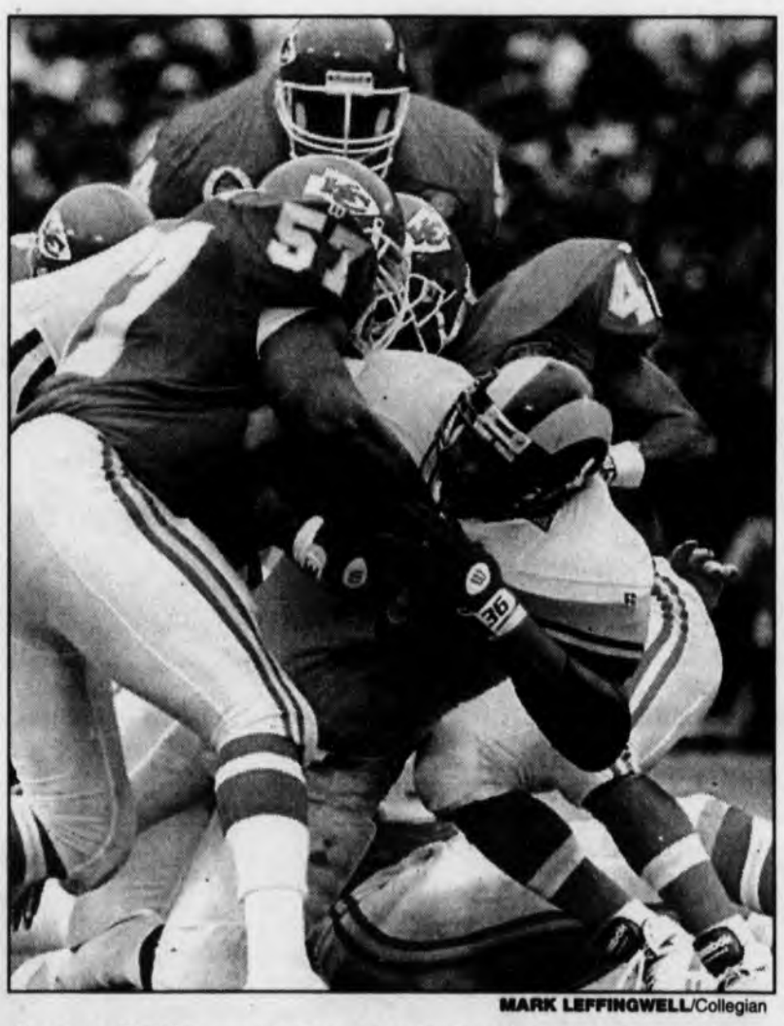
"We got some tipped ball turnovers that you don't normally get against Joe Montana," Chandler said.

"It was one of those days," Schottenheimer said, "that they throw a ball and we're closing on it and it deflects off the receiver's hands and goes to a guy who's running loose behind it. It was miserable."

Less than a minute later, Montana, under pressure all day, tried to throw the ball away.

But Roman Phifer made a diving interception as he fell out of bounds at the Kansas City 20.

"That was stupid," Montana said. "I should have thrown it in the ground."



Zendejas turned the mistake into a 23-yarder with 1:17 still to go in the first period.

The half ended with the Rams feeling red-faced over terrible clock management.

Driving from their own 29, they had a second-and-goal from the Chiefs' 2 with nine seconds left. But Chandler was sacked on the third down, and with five seconds left, the Rams tried a touchdown pass instead of a field goal and got nothing.

Chandler drove the Rams 39 yards in nine plays to set up Zendejas' third field goal, a 28-yarder that made it 16-0 with 3:51 left in the third.

Montana drove the Chiefs deep into Rams' territory twice in the fourth period, but one pass was tipped into the hands of Marquez Pope at the goal line, and another was picked off by Keith Lyle.

A large crowd took advantage of the beautiful weather this weekend to stroll on the tallgrass prairies of Kansas and watch the bison roam.

"It's just nice to get out in the fresh air," a retired K-State professor said. "It's cool and sunny, just like I hoped it would be."

Konza Prairie Research Natural Area opened its gates to the public Saturday for the biannual Visitor's Day.

Small children waited anxiously, sitting on hay bales, waiting for their turn on the hay ride.

Other children were excited about the displays. They stared at the rattlesnakes enclosed in glass containers and petted the prairie chicken and coyote displays.

Volunteers, called docents, stayed busy guiding cars down the dirt road to the temporary parking lots between the old barn and bison corral.

The bustling crowd was unusual for the Konza Prairie. The grounds are normally closed to the public to protect on going research projects, Brad Elders, docent, said.

Before the hikes, docent Chris Herald warned the visitors not to pick flowers along the trails.

"We had a problem with it earlier," she said. "People are picking somebody's research."

Docents led the visitors down the trails, along the fence containing the bison and into the prairie hills.

A loud huffing noise startled the hikers and drew their attention to the bison walking toward the wire fence.

Joe Gelroth, a tour guide and fifth-grade teacher, did little to reassure the hikers.

"The fence can control a docile herd," he said, "but it wouldn't even slow down a stampede."

During the tour, the trained volunteers shared Konza Prairie's history with the visitors and identified some of the 500 plants and species found on the prairie.

"Oh my, look at this," a tour guide said. "It's a real big momma!"

The hikers crowded around the tour guide to find a large brown spider carrying about 50 babies on her back.

Some of the hikers were disappointed not to find something larger, like a mountain lion, after the tour guide's excitement.

The view for the hikers was similar to the one that drivers experience on Kansas Highway 177, but at a much closer range.

Visitors also went on 1-1/2 hour van trips, which took them into the heart of the prairie, where the land is untouched by civilization.

It was a scene described by the song, "Home on the Range." The bison peacefully grazed the prairie under a blue sky.

Students from the University of Kansas said the van trip was their favorite.

"I enjoyed it because I could see things firsthand, instead of reading about them in a book," Kristen Chowning, senior in environmental studies at KU, said. "I could see how the land looked before it was settled."

"The tour guides for the hikes were informative," Bob Leeman, senior in environmental studies at KU, said, "but the van trip was my favorite because we were right next to the buffalo."

Gelroth said bison are occasionally pulled to maintain numbers.

"They make tasty burgers," he said, smiling.

Although some elderly bison are used as meat, most of the extra bison are sold to people interested in raising them. Numbers are kept at about 160 head of bison, Gelroth said.

Visitors also toured the Konza Prairie headquarters, which were the original limestone barn and house of the Dewey Ranch, constructed in the early 1900s.

The Nature Conservancy purchased the Dewey Ranch in 1975 for K-State, with funds from a donor.

"The Nature Conservancy is a private, nonprofit organization," Elders said. "The main purpose of the organization is to purchase land to keep it from being developed."

Katharine Ordway, who donated millions of dollars to the Nature Conservancy and is called the mother of the grasslands, asked for the site to be named after the Kanza Indians, the original inhabitants of the prairie.

"They are the same Indians who the state of Kansas got it's name from," Herald said. "The variations in spelling is because they didn't have a written language."

K-State manages the Konza Prairie and uses it for ecological research, Gelroth said.

Graduate students gain hands-on experience in conducting research, he said.

It also is a benchmark, used to compare the effects of the human toll on developed land, he said.

"We do research because research is fun," Gelroth said. "We want to learn about the prairie."

Sex magnet tells woes of being a college gigolo

Dear Cassandra,

I thought I'd write you, sexy French girley.

All of these women want me.

I mean — THEY WANT ME.

I'm not some cocky, chauvinistic dude or anything, but the signals are more than loud. They're downright deafening. Even my roommate sees it.

Like when we go out to the bars, they just SEEP out of the woodwork to say, in their own subtle ways, "Hey, you're too cool and I WANT you."

So, what's a single, average-ly endowed guy to do?

Signed,
Sexy Xer

Dear Sexy Xer,

This is heavy — I mean HEAVY.

I'm not sure what your "endowedness" would have to do with this, but concerning "all of these women," who are after you, I recommend you go with the flow.

You don't need to take every chickadee home with you, but you don't have to ignore the lavish attention being thrown your way, either.

Just look at this as an "uptime" in your attractiveness to the female species — one that is sure to be followed by some "downtime" — and play it cool.

Sexy French girley, eh? Yeppers.

Big Apple ballet comes to Little Apple

RUSSELL FORTMEYER

Sprightly, imaginative, masterful and enchanting, the New York City Ballet has become a cornerstone of American culture.

The McCain Auditorium season officially opens with the Tuesday performance of the Principal Dancers of the New York City Ballet.

"The Principal Dancers of the New York City Ballet was a once-in-a-lifetime shot," Richard Martin, director of McCain Auditorium, said.

"It's kind of like a very special event," Luke Kahlich, professor of dance and theater, said.

"They represent one of the finest world class companies that this country has ever produced," he said.

In 1933, Lincoln Kirstein was eager to start a purely American ballet company, instead of using foreign dancers in productions. He conceived a ballet that trained its own dancers.

In that same year, Kirstein met George Balanchine, then a professionally trained, Russian dancer in London.

"Balanchine carried his Russian tradition to America, creating his own tradition," Kahlich said.

"Balanchine is a major figure in 20th-century choreography," he said.

The Ballet has performed to prominence in the capitals of Europe, the former Soviet Union, Australia, and Japan, besides it's successful performances in the United States and Canada.

BALLET

The Principal Dancers of the New York City Ballet will perform at 8 p.m., Sept 27 in McCain Auditorium. For more information, call the McCain Box Office at 532-5870.

Among the twenty principal dancers, Lourdes Lopez has been performing with the Ballet since she was 16 years old. She was promoted to a principal dancer in 1984.

Heather Watts joined the ballet with Balanchine's invitation in 1970, when she was 17. Over the years, she has originated many roles in Martins' productions.

In 1979, Watts performed with Mikhail Baryshnikov at the White House.

Watts will be celebrating her birthday the night of the performance at TW Longhorn's, Kahlich said.

"Dance may not be the most popular thing that's presented in the McCain series," Martin said.

"To have people from the New York City Ballet is probably as close to getting a lot of people enthusiastic about dance as we can come," he said.

"Maybe Swan Lake would do a little better, I don't know," he said.

After the Ballet performs, the dance department is offering a reception for them at Longhorn's, Kahlich said.

Anyone is welcome to join the reception for a $5 admission.

Naster, Brow mock rural, campus life in routine

RUSSELL FORTMEYER
Collegian

Comedian David Naster entertained a crowd of about 350 people Friday night by lampooning college life and rural living.

Naster, performing after comedian J.R. Brow, had McCain Auditorium laughing out loud at his wildly hilarious routine.

Certain jokes struck a chord with the audience.

"I was jogging across campus, to the other side, where all the big cattle buildings are," Naster said.

"I met a guy, and he asked me what other sororities I had been to," he said.

Insane audience applause and laughter, coupled with a few boos (perhaps, sorority members?).

Country music seemed to be a big theme of the evening.

"If that stuff was any simpler, Barney would be singing it," Naster said.

What about country-line dancing?

"It looked like motor development skill night," he said.

Naster describes the best feeling in the world as, not sex, but speeding on Interstate 70 and having a highway trooper pass you to stop the guy in front of you.

If you are stopped by a police officer, Naster has a certain phrase he likes to use:

Highway-patrol officer: "Do you know how fast you were going?"

Naster: "Before or after I saw you?"

I don't know if I would use this in the near future.

Naster closed with a blues tribute to John Belushi.

Naster is a gifted comedian. His act was in every way professional.

"I had a great time here," Naster said.

"This is the second or third parent's weekend I've done and each time I leave, I feel funnier," he said.

Based out of Kansas City, Naster has performed many times in Manhattan. This closeness with the city definitely helped his routine, by offering familiar anecdotes to students.

"I used to perform at Bushwackers," Naster said. Bushwackers was a comedy club in Aggieville that closed down about three years ago.

"It's more rural and remote out here. You get more of a turnout of people for comedy than you do for KU," Naster said.

Naster said he changes his act for each audience. With parents and students in the audience, Naster did not want to get too racy.

"I mainly talk about what I want to talk about," Naster said.

Naster said many changes have been happening in the world of comedy. He cited the many television shows that give people an idea of what good comedy is like.

"I can't fool you guys. You guys have seen too many comics," Naster said.

"Audiences have become more aware of comedy," he said.

"You can't rip off other comics anymore," he said.

Naster was far funnier than J.R. Brow's off-centered, roller-coaster ride of jokes and songs.

Brow, who specialized in impressions, was no Rich Little.

His comedy was "ha ha" funny, but it just didn't get much deeper. Not really the sort of insightful, college-minded entertainment I was interested in.

He voiced Granny, from the "Beverly Hillbillies." It was a pretty good impression. His Cheech Marin, of "Cheech and Chong" fame, wasn't that bad either.

The problem lied in his development. Sure, he could sound like a few people, but the way he utilized his gift was boorish.

Most of his impressions were part of songs with lyrics changed.

"Gin and Juice" a la Droop Doggy Dog. Do I need this?

Bosom returns to limelight

AMY ZIEGLER
Collegian

People were tightly crowded in Charlie's Neighborhood Bar Saturday night for a concert by a band which disappeared from the live music scene for a year and is now back in business.

Bosom, made up of K-State students, has seen a lot of changes over the year but still has the rhythm and melody which drew in the audiences in the past.

The band had a solid sound, but for their performance on Saturday night, the vocalist's lyrics were drowned out by the loud guitars and drums and the buzz from the speakers.

Songs about vocalist Jason McLendon's grandpa, hunting, gangs and life in general were fuzzy and indistinguishable.

Instead of the band working together, they all seemed to be going in different directions.

The words were lost in a muddied sound of the three guitars and the drums, and it all came out as noise instead of music.

All the band members obviously had talent, but the sound system constantly worked against them.

Dressed in a short sleeve Co-Op shirt and dress pants, McLendon struggled to sing over the accompanying instruments, but the result was an overpowering blend of sounds which made each song sound like the next.

With animated facial expressions and by clutching on to the microphone, it was clear McLendon was intensely concentrating on the lyrics, and it was a shame most of the cleverly crafted words were lost in the background.

The band's strength was highlighted during the slow and dramatic songs.

When Bosom slowed down the tempo, the audience could easily and clearly appreciate McLendon's strong and impressive vocals, guitarist Jason Hutto's work on the guitar, drummer Michael Calloway's beat and rhythm, and new bassist Larry Hafner's contribution to the band.

After an hour of playing alternative style music, Bosom took a short intermission.

In between the two parts of Bosom's performance, Brent Jackson, junior in English, history and theater, walked through the crowd in his brown overalls playing a bagpipe.

By jumping up and down and wildly dancing during Bosom's time on stage, Jackson seemed to be bursting with energy and enthusiasm for Bosom's music.

For the second part of the performance, Bosom's country and twang influences came through when they used a harmonica.

They sang a song from their demo titled "Country" and also performed a traditional cover song named "La Radio" from the Rave-Ups.

Overall, Bosom put a lot of energy and feeling into the performance, and it gave them a good start on coming back into the Manhattan music scene.

President Clinton appeared at the Ritz-Carlton in Kansas City, Mo., Saturday. Clinton was in town to campaign for U.S. Senate candidate Alan Wheat, and appeared at a $1,000-a-couple reception and a $5,000-a-couple dinner.

Clinton on 4-state tour to raise funds

ASSOCIATED PRESS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — In a fund-raising appearance Saturday evening for Democratic Senate candidate Alan Wheat, President Clinton implored contributors to send Wheat to the Senate to continue the president's agenda.

"Alan Wheat's important to Missouri, but he's important to the country, not because we will always agree, but because he will show up for work in the morning. Too many of them (Republicans) show up for talk," Clinton said.

At a $1,000-a-couple reception, Clinton cited his own achievements: an improved economy and passage of the North American Free Trade Agreement, a crime bill and a budget.

"We have brought real change. We're moving in the right direction. We don't want to turn back now," said Clinton, who is on a four-state tour to raise money for Democratic candidates.

Wheat, a Democratic congressman from Kansas City, is running against former two-term Missouri Gov. John Ashcroft for the seat occupied by retiring Republican John Danforth.

Also appearing with Wheat were state Rep. Karen McCarthy, D-Kansas City, who is running for Wheat's 5th District Congressional seat, Gov. Mel Carnahan, and Mayor Emanuel Cleaver.

While some Democrats have said they'd rather not have the president campaign for them, Wheat was grateful for the help. Ashcroft ran unopposed in the primary and has a huge financial advantage.

Wheat, in brief remarks before the president spoke, criticized Ashcroft for failures in education and welfare reform during his eight years as governor.

The reception and a $5,000-a-couple dinner that followed were expected to raise $500,000 with more than $150,000 going directly to Wheat, said Tony Lakavage, Wheat's spokesman.

The fund raiser at a hotel on the upscale Country Club Plaza district also benefited other Democratic Senate candidates and Missouri Democrats running in state races.

Lakavage said Wheat, to this point, has raised more than $700,000 and has a goal of about $1.5 million.

While Clinton raised money for Wheat and other Democrats in Kansas City, former Vice President Dan Quayle was scheduled to attend an Ashcroft fund raiser Saturday evening in Springfield.

Wheat said his own polls show him trailing Ashcroft by about 15 percentage points. And his campaign spent every penny it had in the primary fight.

Also running is Bill Johnson, a Libertarian from Springfield.

Tension mounts between U.S. Marines and Haitian forces tried to get the two wounded men to surrender.

"They won't come out, and I'm not going to go in and try to get them in the dark," Hartley radioed back to headquarters.

Five other men came out of the station during the standoff and were ordered to lie down and were searched by Marines. They were taken into custody.

By Sunday morning, the standoff was over. Little refused to give details about the two holdouts, but he raised the death count from nine to 10.

The gunbattle followed a slow escalation in tension between Marines and Haitian security forces. Marine patrols had been increased, and units were given more latitude to take action against Haitian forces following reports that attaches were planning to attack Marines, the Marines said.

Some 1,900 Marines arrived Tuesday in Cap-Haitien to provide security in advance of the U.S.-brokered return of exiled President Jean-Bertrand Aristide.

There had been no incidents between Marines and local authorities before Saturday. But Marines took a Haitian man into custody in Cap-Haitien Saturday, after he fired shots from a pedestrian bridge, Little said.

Plan to show students destination of money

Student Senate Privilege Fee Committee to inform students of fee use on tuition receipt.

The Student Senate Privilege Fee Committee is working on a plan to let students know where their money goes.

The Privilege Fee Committee, which met at 8 p.m. Sunday, reviews each fee students pay.

Each committee member is responsible for reviewing a specific fee and writing a brief summary about that fee, Bryndon Meinhardt, chairman, said.

The summary should include the original bill that started the fee, how long the fee runs, the history behind the fee, why the fee was started and why the fee was increased, he said.

This year, the committee is reviewing a request by the controller's office to have each fee listed on students' fee-payment receipts, he said.

The office wants the committee to break the fees down on a percentage basis, he said.

However, the fees would still be shown as a dollar amount on student-fee payments.

Currently, the student-health fee is the only fee shown on each student's fee payment.

Eventually, all student fees will be listed in the same way, Meinhardt said.

The Senate Allocations Committee will also review the way students' tuition is spent.

Meinhardt said he wanted each committee member to try to think of alternatives for the fee.

He said some schools combine the city and University newspaper as a means of reducing the cost of production for the school.

K-State is compared to other Big Eight schools and peer institutions, Mark Tomb, arts and sciences senator, said.

He said he was going to compare line items with other schools.

Meinhardt said the committee is working on setting up an informative board in the Union that would explain how student fees work and how much money each student pays for the fee.

Rural families, values focus of conference

Rural Family Conference teaches rural health, well-being and family education.

Family well-being, community the topics of keynote speaker

JANELL COE
Collegian

People came from all corners of the United States to attend the 14th-annual National Rural Families Conference Wednesday through Friday in the K-State Union.

Charlie Griffin, rural family support specialist for KSU Extension, welcomed individuals from Alaska to Arkansas and New York to California during the general session.

"It's the only national conference that focuses on rural families," Griffin said.

The conference was established in 1980 as the Working with Families Conference, which focused on resources for family-life education, Griffin said.

The conference adopted a rural theme in 1984 in response to recognition of the farm crisis, but has continued an in-depth focus on the continuing transitions facing rural communities, he said.

"The conference gives people the opportunity to share tools of the trade with others that work with rural families," Griffin said.

Cornelia Flora, director of the North Central Regional Center for Rural Development at the University of Iowa, was the first keynote speaker of the conference.

Flora spoke about rural health and well-being, the family-community connection during the first general session.

"Family is the buffer between the individual and community," Flora said.

She said for a family to succeed, it needs to be part of a support network.

"When the family is valued, they give to the community as well as gain from it," she said.

Flora took a topic that was boring and made it interesting, Joe Johnson said, information network creator of Making a Difference.

"The keynote speaker was outstanding," said Judy Moler, director of local initiatives for Corporation for Change.

Other keynote speakers for the conference were Brian Flynn, chief of emergency services and disaster relief at the Center for Mental Health Services in Rockville, Md., William Doherty, professor in the Department of Family Social Science at the University of Minnesota, and Carolyn Risley Hill, commissioner of Youth and Adult Services for the Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services.

Concurrent sessions on topics ranging from child safety to entrepreneurial marketing are also part of the conference.

CATEGORIES

To help you find what you are looking for, the classified ads have been arranged by category and sub-category. All categories are marked by one of the large images, and sub-categories are preceded by a number designation.

TIPS FOR WRITING A CLASSIFIED AD

Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.

Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.

Consider including the price. This tells buyers if they are looking at something in their price range.

WE DO NOT USE PHONE NUMBERS OR LAST NAMES IN PERSONALS.

Campus construction provides more access of Eisenhower and accessibility for wheelchair students in the basement lecture hall of Eisenhower.

"This project has been budgeted for approximately $250,000," Carter said.

He said the educational building fund as administered by the Kansas Board of Regents gave K-State slightly over $2.3 million.

"That money is earmarked for the repairs and renovation necessary on campus, and that includes new roofs, upgrading of classrooms, sidewalks, and major projects in Eisenhower and Calvin Hall," Carter said.

He said $130,000 of the $2.3 million is set aside for use on accessibility projects.

"Last year and this year, the Committee for the Disabled felt it was necessary to make these improvements and upgrades in Eisenhower," Carter said.

All construction that is done in new facilities must comply with the guidelines of the Americans with Disabilities Act, he said.

"From that standpoint, Throckmorton was designed to be fully accessible to the handicapped," he said, "and with the extensive renovations of the library, we will be able to have the library be 98-percent accessible to the handicapped."

Carter said K-State has been involved for almost 20 years in making the campus accessible to the handicapped and is probably more accessible than most state agencies. He said, however, K-State still has a long way to go.

"There are still buildings on campus that, because of their age and configuration, don't have elevators yet," he said.

"We still have a number of activities to go in order to continue to expand the programs that help people who are visually disabled or have hearing difficulties."

Student Body President Jeff Peterson said the biggest hassles for disabled students on campus include a lack of elevators, ramps in buildings and narrow door widths.

Peterson, a member of the Committee for the Disabled, said the changes are important because they house the College of Arts and Sciences and the College of Business.

"A student enrolled in business should be able to go to the dean's office or the departmental office without problems," he said.

"We're moving physical barriers whenever we renovate a building."

Peterson said once the construction is complete, people with disabilities won't be limited to certain areas.

"All of the existing facilities will be super when we're done," he said. "There won't be one corner in the buildings that's not accessible once those projects are completed."

Peterson said the construction may seem like a hassle for everyone now.

"We've just got to remember that we've got to pay for progress, and it will be better someday," he said.

Athletic club raises funds for surviving quintuplets

ASSOCIATED PRESS

MANHATTAN — A three-hour aerobic workout raised nearly $6,500 to help pay medical bills for four surviving quintuplets born in July.

Mallory, Jordan, Holly and Kasey Morris remain at Stormont-Vail Medical Center in Topeka. Holly is listed in fair condition, the others remain in serious condition. Their brother, Evan, died at the end of July.

In their first public appearance since the birth, the quints' parents, Joan and Shawn Morris, thanked those who contributed to a Saturday aerobathon sponsored by the Manhattan Athletic Club.

The Morrises watched as 11 women and one man exercised.

"I wouldn't say things are getting back to normal," Joan Morris said, "but as long as the girls are doing OK, we're in pretty good spirits."

Kristi Pottroff, club owner and organizer, said she first had the fund-raising idea shortly after the quints' birth.

"I knew this Manhattan couple had a miracle, and Manhattan hadn't done anything to help," Pottroff said.

Bottled water very successful for local distributor bound football team.

"People tie the water in with the success of the football team," Fairman said. "I think our alumni have been very happy. On numerous occasions, alumni have commented on the water. So I think it's been a positive."

The success of Wet Willie has also come as a pleasant surprise for the company that distributes the product in Riley County and five surrounding counties.

Dennis Cook, sales manager for Campbell Distributors Inc. of Manhattan, said they figured it was all a gimmick to sell a few bottles of water, but they soon learned bottled water is a big business.

"We were completely shocked by it's success," Cook said. "Today, it's in virtually every convenience store, most of the grocery stores."

The success of Wet Willie has translated into growth for Campbell, a company that was strictly a beer distributor before Wet Willie, he said.

The operations manager for Campbell, Bob Campbell, said they have worked hard to get the product out to the public, but from the retail point of view, Wet Willie has been embraced by the community.

"I hate to say it, but it's been a pretty easy sale, actually," he said.

"It's a wonderful product. The label sells it once, and the product itself keeps the repeat buying going."

The product, which comes in three sizes, is made with sodium-free water that is purified by reverse osmosis and deionization, said Mike Cerne, the president and founder of the Collegiate Water Company.

The Collegiate Water Company's first product was Haqua for the University of Kansas.

"That's when we saw that everybody came out and wanted to know where their school's water was," Cerne said.

Today, the Olathe-based company distributes 14 different college labels, from Monsooner for the University of Oklahoma Sooners to Gorilla Chilla for the Pittsburg State University Gorillas.

Locally, Campbell distributes both Wet Willie and Haqua, and it is not hard to see which product outsells the other, Campbell said.

"It's Wet Willie by far," he said. "Out of every 10 cases, it's probably about eight to two."

Network helps disabled when applying for jobs

KIM HALL
Collegian

This is the second in a five-part series about the Americans with Disabilities Act.

The needs of disabled people for employment opportunities are slowly but surely being met by Title I of the Americans with Disabilities Act of 1990.

Title I of the ADA gives equal employment opportunities to all disabled people.

Americans with Disabilities Act

An estimated 49 million disabled Americans are protected under the ADA.

The Job Accommodation Network, located in West Virginia, is the only national service to consult businesses and disabled people on the Act.

Eddie Whidden, a human factors consultant at JAN, said Title I is the largest section of the ADA.

Whidden said a lot of disabled people think that questions on interviews are discriminatory.

"Many times there will be a question on an application that will say, 'Do you have any of the following physical conditions?' and will have a listing of things like cancer and heart disease," Whidden said. "It's totally illegal to have that on there."

An employment application should not contain any questions that would disclose whether the person filling out the form has a disability, Whidden said.

"You're not allowed to say, 'Are there any physical limitations that would prevent you from doing this job?'" he said.

If you do encounter this question while filling out an employment application, Whidden said you do not have to answer the question.

"Under the law, you're not required to tell an employer that you have a disability unless you know that you're going to need some kind of an accommodation or assistance," Whidden said.

He said employees are also

Grant to help prevent drug abuse

LEIGH BELLINGER
Collegian

K-State will receive a $20,000 grant next year from a special fund designed to address the problem of alcohol and drug abuse in the community.

The money comes from the City of Manhattan's Special Alcohol and Drug Programs Fund. The money comes from a state-wide liquor. drink tax.

The Director of the Alcohol and Other Drug Education Service on campus, Bill Arck, said the grant will be used to pay staff salaries and produce various reports, posters and a newsletter.

"The money is extremely important to us," Arck said. "It gives the office more flexibility on how much we can do."

The City Commission approved the fund allocations at its meeting on Sep. 6. A total of $150,000 will be distributed to five other agencies.

Manhattan-Ogden USD 383 will receive $86,500, Pawnee Mental Health is allocated $26,000, Sunflower CASA will receive $10,000, the Little Apple Task Force will get $2,500, and the Boy's and Girl's Club will receive $5,000.

K-State has received the grant since 1982.

K-State students help man with fund-raising cross-country trek

LEIGH BELLINGER
Collegian

Just 10 days after starting his run across America, Ram Eddings was ready to call it quits.

The social worker from Denver had started his run on July 17 in Inglewood, Calif., to raise money for youth programs sponsored by the Grey Wolves Rugby Club Inc., an all-minority rugby corporation formed in 1991.

Weighed down by a 35-pound back pack, Eddings arrived somewhere in Utah after running and walking for 30 miles one day in late July. He was tired, hot and not sure if he could go on.

"I told myself, 'OK, I'm going home, plain and simple,'" Eddings said, outside the K-State Union Monday afternoon.

But while eating dinner that evening, he befriended a 17-year-old youth. Eddings told him he was running across America to help the country's young people become productive citizens.

When Eddings finished dinner, the 17-year-old paid for his meal and told him some encouraging words.

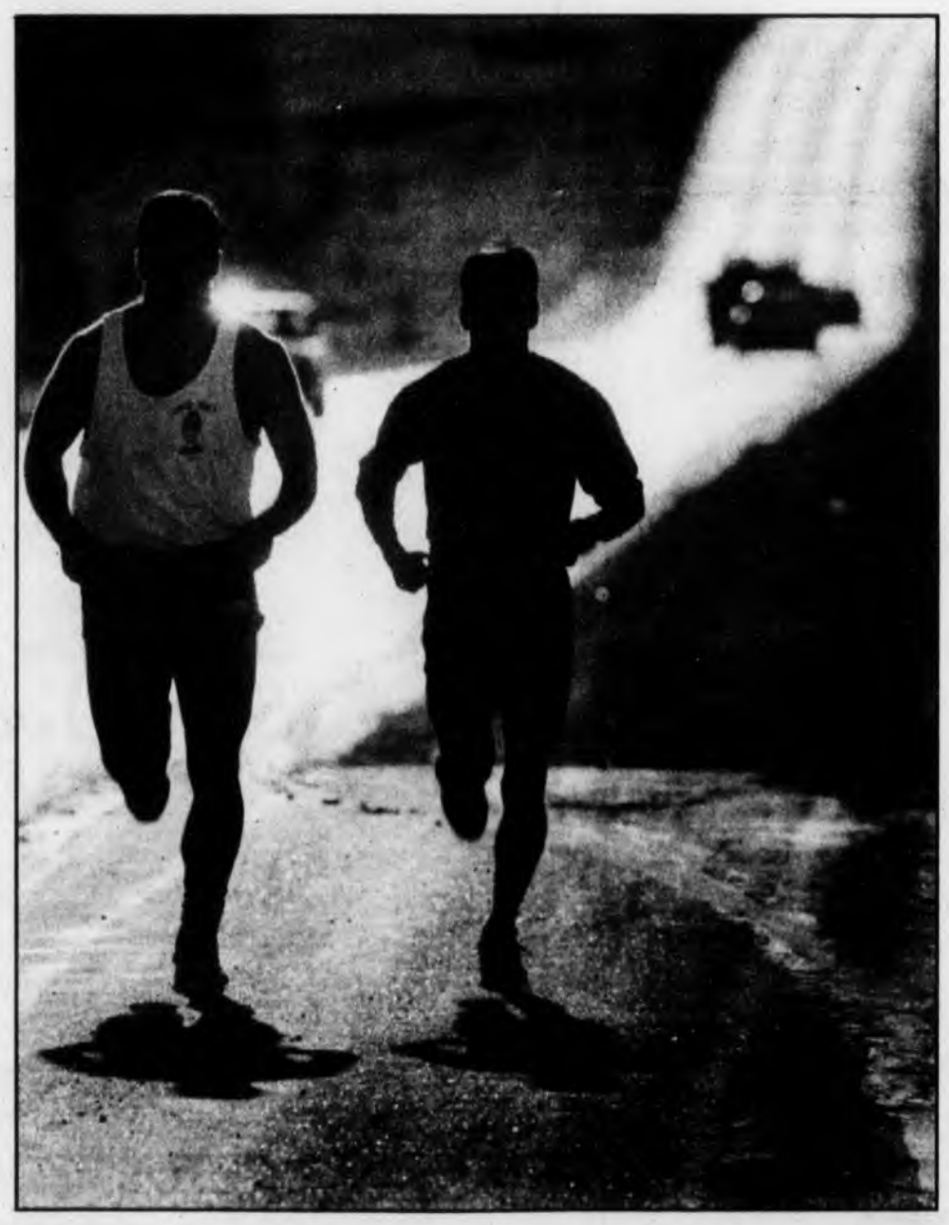
"Hey, I believe in what you guys are doing," he said.

With that, Eddings knew he had to continue his cross-country trek until he arrives in Washington, D.C., next month as planned.

Most of the run has been solo for the 44-year-old. He began in California with another runner, but from Las Vegas to Dodge City he had no help.

"Hell, coming through my own state — nothing," he said.

Once he crossed into the sunflower state, Eddings finally got some much needed relief from some local members of the Grey Wolves. Ramon Fewell, also a member of the K-State/Fort Riley rugby club, met Eddings with a van to take the load off his shoulders and help with some of the run.



"There's no sense in having him do it all by himself," Fewell said.

Along the way, the Wichita and Emporia rugby clubs helped with the run, as did the local rugby club Monday evening.

Nearly 15 members of the men and womens' K-State/Fort Riley rugby clubs volunteered their time to take part in the run to Topeka along U.S. Highway 24.

"This shows we do care about what happens in the community," Tim Harrold,

Resident assistant violates fire codes

MIKE HIND
Collegian

A confiscated fire extinguisher and the threat of closed bathrooms caused some Moore Hall residents to call the city of Manhattan over the actions taken by their residence assistant.

Mark Williams, freshman in mechanical engineering and Moore Hall resident, said the second floor fire extinguisher disappeared after the protective glass was broken in the case where it was kept.

Williams became concerned about not having a fire extinguisher after the vacuum he was using belched sparks and tripped a breaker in his room.

"If the carpet would have caught on fire, it could have been a big deal," Williams said.

Williams said he then brought up the fact that the fire extinguisher was gone at a floor meeting. Williams said he was told by his RA, Snehal Bhakta, that he was keeping it in his room so it wouldn't be stolen.

"The RA said that he knew it was illegal but that we had to learn a lesson somehow," Williams said.

Bhakta wouldn't comment on the situation.

The Manhattan fire department was contacted by Williams. A short

▶THE WALL IS GONE FOR GOOD THIS TIME

Sorry graffiti lovers, "the wall" is down to stay.

"The state architect is allowing us to use a chain-link fence, if we put a fabric covering it on the library side of the wall," Jerry Carter, director of facilities planning, said.

Carter said the wall was not designed as a pallet for artists, but rather for safety, and that's the reason it was taken down.

"The original purpose of the wall was for a building code item," he said. "We needed to keep debris from falling on the students as they walk by there.

"It was evident that the wall was serving a different purpose than we intended."

One student walking along the chain-link fence emphatically disagreed with the decision to remove the wall.

"I think it's the stupidest thing they've done so far," Lacey Cannon, freshman in theater, said.

Another student cited a more economical complaint.

"Sounds like a waste of money to me," Brady Yust, junior in construction science, said.

"What makes them think they won't paint on the fabric?"

Carter said that with construction increasing near the wall within the next week, it was important that there be a barrier of some kind.

▶BAND, COACH HIT WITH FLYING SNACK BARS

K-State football fans now have a new bad reputation.

Several people in the stands were throwing free nutrition bars around KSU Stadium at the game last Saturday.

Some of those bars hit members of the K-State Marching Band, other fans and even Coach Bill Snyder.

Frank Tracz, director of bands, said it was a shame there were students who were giving K-State a bad reputation.

"It just takes a couple of idiots to ruin it all," he said.

The trouble began after half time, Greg Odom, junior in music, said.

One of the rolled-up bars hit and dented a french horn, Russ Carver, senior in music performance and computer science, said.

Other bars pelted and stained the white uniforms of band members, he said.

"We pay enough money to be in the band without extra cleaning and instrument damage to pay for," Carver said.

Abe Smith, tuba player, said he doesn't think the band was a target of the snipers.

"It was just general buffoonery on the part of the students who threw them," he said.

▶ STATE OF THE UNIVERSITY ADDRESS TO DEAL WITH EXPENSES, SALARIES

The challenges facing K-State will be addressed by President Jon Wefald and Provost Jim Coffman at the State of the University address.

The address will be at 3 p.m. Wednesday in Forum Hall, Faculty Senate President Dennis Kuhlman said.

The State of the University address is modeled after the State of the Union address presented by the President of the United States, Kuhlman said. Kuhlman will act as Master of Ceremonies and will introduce Wefald and Coffman.

Wefald said he will address faculty salaries and budgets, accommodations for special building projects, research funding and academic scholarships.

Faculty salaries need to be made more competitive and funds for other operating expenses need to be increased, Wefald said. Other operating expenses include computers, conferences and supplies.

Special building projects will also be addressed, he said.

A bio-engineering building is on the drawing board, Wefald said.

With the construction of the Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art and the reconstruction of Farrell Library, parking and bicycle paths will also need to be discussed, he said.

Although the University recently spent $10,000 on bike racks, he said bicycle paths need to be more accommodating.

Another concern is the lack of classroom space, so it is also on the agenda, Wefald said.

He said the address would look at research funding and the funds for academic scholarships.

"We need to raise more funds for academic scholarships so we can attract the brightest students," Wefald said.

▶ MANHATTAN K MART IS NOT AMONG 110 CLOSING DEPARTMENT STORES

K-State students that depend on K mart as a place of employment won't need to start looking for another job.

The Manhattan K mart will not be one of the 110 stores the company announced to be closing on Sept. 8.

Of the 24 stores in Kansas, there will be five closing.

Kansas will be losing stores in Wichita, Arkansas City, Hays, Liberal and Great Bend.

These closings are part of the 1990 announcement of 150 stores to be closed nationwide.

The 110 closings are planned for early 1995, the company said.

Rose Wyatt, assistant manager at the Manhattan K mart, said she is not worried about this store closing.

"This store is in no danger," she said.

"The only thing that might affect us is that we may be receiving some of the merchandise," she said.

Becky Senff, a sales clerk at K mart, said, "I'm not worried about my job."

Senff has been employed by K mart for the past eight years and plans to be here for the rest of her life, she said.

All the employees at the Manhattan K mart were required to attend a meeting where the closings were announced, she said.

"At the meeting, they announced that we would not be included in the closings," Senff said.

"There was also a video shown. It was prepared by the home office explaining the reason behind the closures," she said.

The recording on the 800 number for K mart explains the closings are due to the stores not meeting the financial standards set.

There was also a recording telling employees at the closed stores they would be offered counseling and pay compensation in many cases.

There was no mention of transfers as an alternative for employees.

Although there were no numbers available, Wyatt said that there were a large number of K-State students working at K mart.

"We're like a family here, I've had high school students work here, and as they grow up and go to K-State, they come back and let me know what's up in their life," she said.

▶ STUDENT HEALTH COMMITTEE IS EAR FOR CONCERNS, VOICE FOR CHANGE

If you have concerns about Lafene Health Center, the Student Health Advisory Committee can act as your liaison.

SHAC is responsible for providing student support to the health center and the University Counseling Services.

Other responsibilities include giving student feedback to the director of Lafene and the director of Counseling Services.

"We are an ear from all directions," SHAC chairman John Bell said. "We listen and make sure that the policies that are implemented are student centered."

The committee, which consists of 12 members, annually works on projects like the student insurance plan, Bell said.

"As students ourselves, we select the plan best suited for all students and then recommend it to Student Senate," he said.

Another area that SHAC is involved in is the use of the student health fee.

"We make sure that the health fee is being used in ways that actually help the students," Bell said.

The main concern of SHAC is student input.

"We voice student concerns. The more students that contact us, the better job we do," he said. "We are a resource that students need to use."

This semester, SHAC is meeting to address issues that are surfacing, SHAC faculty member Katharine Grunewald said.

"Right now, our main concern is health-care reform and how it will affect the services provided at Lafene," she said.

The members of SHAC want to let students know that the more current input they can get, the more information they can pass on, Bell said.

"Over time, as students' needs change, you need to be on the cutting edge of student input," Bell said. "We are here to bridge the gap."

K-STATE POLICE

SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 25

At 1:36 p.m., a report of damage to property was filed on damage done to a vehicle in Lot B-3.

At 2:02 p.m., a subject was arrested for domestic battery at V-12 Jardine Terrace. Steven M. Lee was booked at the Riley County Jail.

At 9:08 p.m., a report of theft was filed on the theft of wallet contents from the east side of the football stadium parking lot.

At 9:40 p.m., a report was filed of a K-State-Salina campus student threatening suicide. Salina Police Department contacted. They were unable to locate subject, but relatives said they believed he was in Canton, Kan., and was OK.

At 11:43 p.m., an unwanted subject was removed from 1835 Todd Road.

RILEY COUNTY POLICE

SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 25

At noon, a female employee of Bowinkle's, 3043 Anderson Ave., reported a past vehicular burglary. The victim was David Norris, 2904 Karen Terr. Taken was a Pioneer AM/FM cassette, portable CD player and eight miscellaneous CDs. Damage was done to a window and dashboard. Loss was $1,000.

At 12:03 p.m., a vehicle injury accident was reported at Tuttle Creek Boulevard and Allen Road, by a male employee of Jerry's 66 Service. The accident was between Timothy Hoffman, 1924 Strong Ave., and Daniel Hume, 1414 Le Gore Lane. Hoffman received a bump to his nose, but refused treatment. A major-damage, minor-injury report was filed.

At 3:36 p.m., K-State Police reported a subject arrested for battery. Bond was $300. The report was filed by KSU, against Steven Lee, V-12 Jardine Terrace.

At 4:47 p.m., at 1101 Woodland, a noise complaint was filed. An officer spoke with James Haywork, who said he would comply.

At 6:45 p.m., Mr. Jones, 1015 Pierre St., reported a blue mini-van going down the street taking down the no-parking signs. Local units were advised. Units were unable to locate the vehicle.

MIKE HIND

The drive through Lovers Lane Monday night was cramped as about seven cars lined the north side of the street.

Most of the cars belonged to dinner guests of President Jon and Ruth Ann Wefald. All were parked illegally.

"We had never been here, so we didn't know," Ted Haggart, dinner guest, said. "We assumed for special occasions we could," he said.

The Hales, of Kansas City, also weren't familiar with the area.

"I thought it was illegal, so I tried to get inside the yellow lines," Joe Hale said.

Jon Wefald said no special permission was given to the guests.

"I guess if they are parked out there, they are parked illegally," Wefald said.

"We encouraged people to park in the driveway," Ruth Ann Wefald said. "I guess we didn't have enough space."

Police were notified at about 7:15 p.m. that there were cars parked illegally on Lovers Lane.

Collegian reporters and photographers went to the scene shortly afterward and did not witness any officers drive by or ticket any vehicles.

Forty minutes later, after most of the guests were gone, the Collegian called the campus police.

"I only have two officers tonight and both are busy," Chris Heigert, K-State Police dispatcher, said. "I don't have a ton of officers."

A campus officer was then dispatched to the area. The one car left was ticketed.

Jim Lehne, K-State police sergeant, said it was unusual for cars to be parked on Lovers Lane at night.

"Students park here in the day for a few minutes but stay in their cars," Lehne said. "Usually people don't park here and leave."

Secondary major offered

JULIE KRAMER
Collegian

K-State students interested in environmental studies can expand their career opportunities by studying natural resource and environmental science as a secondary major.

The NRES secondary major is in its third year, with 115 students enrolled. Every college on campus is represented.

Steve Thien, director of the NRES program, said the secondary major was started because students wanted to study environmental science.

NRES is offered as a secondary major instead of a minor because of the broad curriculum it offers, Thien said. This, along with the depth of study the major provides, is what employers are looking for, he said.

Any undergraduate can enroll in the secondary major. All NRES classes can count as credit toward a student's primary major.

In order to complete the NRES program, students must complete the entry and block elective and course requirements. These include courses in basic, natural and applied science, and social science/humanities.

Students must also complete a capstone course requirement, which is taken in the spring semester of the student's senior year, and includes a natural resources or environmental sciences project.

Thien said 90 percent of the courses offered in the NRES secondary major were already available at K-State, and now new courses are being developed just for the NRES program.

As a result of the NRES secondary major, Kansas State University Environmental Professionals, a new club for students interested in environmental studies, was started last year.

Kenny Legleiter, senior in geography and president of the KSU Environmental Professionals, said the club's purpose was to educate students about different careers that deal with the environment. Any undergraduate can join.

KSU Environmental Professionals has about 15-20 members, he said. The club hopes to increase membership and is currently working to provide students with a resource library to provide information on jobs and classes in the area of environmental science, Legleiter said.

ANNOUNCING TWO NEW CREF ACCOUNTS

YOU'RE LOOKING AT TWO COMPLETELY OPPOSITE, FUNDAMENTALLY DIFFERENT WAYS TO INVEST IN STOCKS. WE RECOMMEND BOTH.

Introducing the CREF Growth Account and the CREF Equity Index Account.

Whether you want a fund that selects specific stocks or one that covers the market, we're on the same page. Our new CREF Growth and CREF Equity Index Accounts use two distinct strategies for investing in the stock market, but both aim to provide what every smart investor looks for: long-term growth that outpaces inflation.*

The CREF Growth Account searches for individual companies that are poised for superior growth. In contrast, the Equity Index Account looks for more diversification, with a portfolio encompassing almost the entire range of U.S. stock investments. It will invest in stocks in the Russell 3000®, a broad index of U.S. stocks.

Like our CREF Stock Account, which combines active, indexed, and foreign investing, and our Global Equities Account, which actively seeks opportunities worldwide, the new funds are managed by experienced investment professionals. They're the same experts who have helped make TIAA-CREF the largest pension system in the U.S., managing over $130 billion in assets.

To find out more about our new stock funds, and building your portfolio with TIAA-CREF, just call 1 800-842-2776. And take your pick.

TIAA CREF Ensuring the future for those who shape it.℠

*The new funds are available for Retirement Annuities subject to the terms of your institution's plan. They are available for all Supplemental Retirement Annuities.

By the Collegian Editorial Board

Students attack band with Power Bars

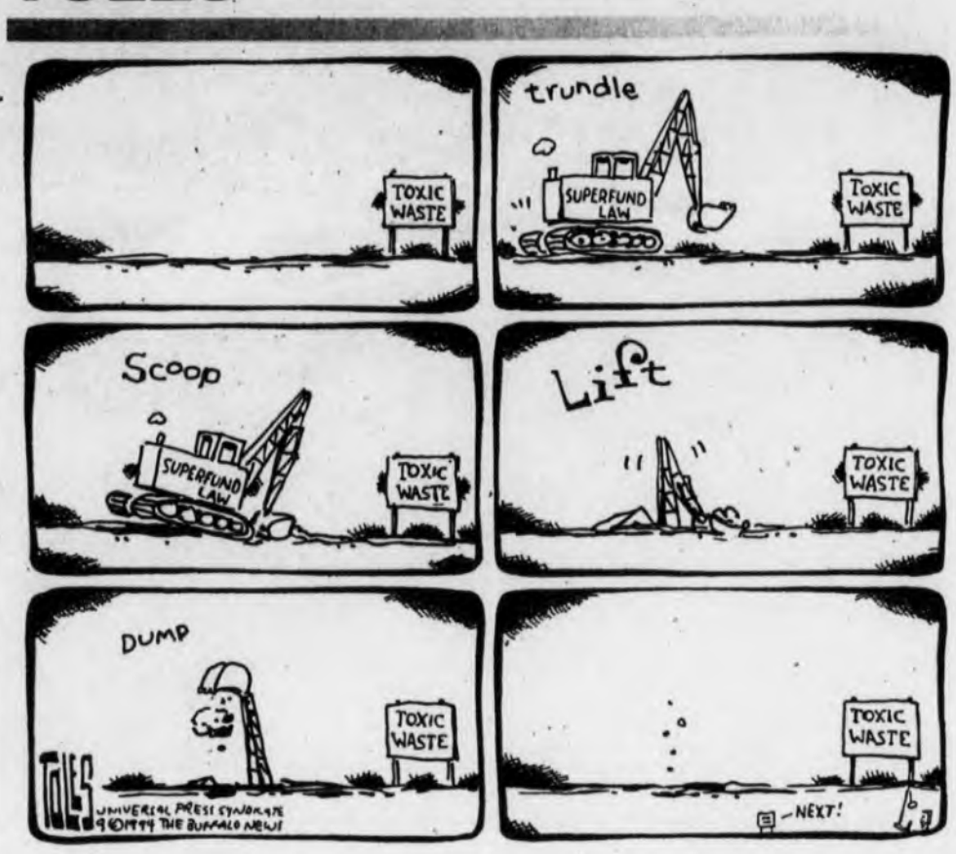
When people attend the next K-State home football game, they will need at least one more thing — protective gear.

Various objects have gotten airborne before at games — beach balls, ice, hats, chickens and even people, but now people have been targeted by in-stadium artillery assaults.

At the K-State vs. Minnesota game Saturday, the student section got too rambunctious and threw around free Power Bars that were passed out at the game.

Things always are going to be thrown, people are always going to be passed up the stands, and contraband will always find its way into the stadium.

But these, Power Bars were wadded up and thrown mainly at the K-State Marching Band. Band members were hit by these bars. Uniforms were stained by the bars. At least one instrument was damaged with the projectile Power Bars. The one thing the marching band doesn't serve K-State as is targets.



Nobody is trying to say that fans should sit there quietly and clap on good plays.

Fans should have consideration for others in the stands. Being bombarded by bars doesn't sound like much fun.

The passing out of the bars should have been thought out more beforehand. It should have been realized that problems could arise from the bars possibly being used for ammunition.

Also with the Big Eight conference games soon approaching, security needs to be checking more diligently for contraband. There is no doubt KSU Stadium will be knee-deep in oranges. And who knows who will be next to be pelted.

Bluemont bell needs to find home

AARON OTTO

At least one good thing came out of the lightning strike to Anderson Hall last year.

The administration discovered a long-forgotten campus secret, the original bell used on campus to signal the beginning and end of classes.

The bell was a gift to Bluemont College by Joseph Ingalls, 1861. Ingalls was asked by Isaac Goodnow, co-founder of Bluemont College, which was K-State's predecessor, to provide $175 for the bell and to ship it from Maine to Manhattan.

Now some of you might remember last year, when I made a suggestion that the huge, ugly light pole out in the Union's parking lot should be converted into a large flag pole, and then a large K-State flag should be put on it. Well, I guess it got someone's attention, because instead of converting the light pole into a flag pole, they destroyed this fine opportunity and tore it down.

Well, I'm hoping my luck has changed this year, and they will not get rid of the bell. Instead, how about building a nice wooden stand for it to be displayed?

Now most of you are probably thinking, "So what?" It's just another bell. I used to agree, until I saw it myself. By a totally unusual sequence of events, I was fortunate enough to end up in the third floor of Anderson Hall and then up to the bell tower. As we went up into the tower, the last door opened and there it was, sitting right where it has been for the last 102 years. It was huge, the size of the U.S. Liberty Bell, and it still worked.

Imagine seeing this huge 513-pound bell in the Union or perhaps in the new and improved Farrell Library. The only problem with this fine little plan is a basic problem with most plans; there is a lack of money.

The University says it doesn't have the money. Which leaves it up to private contributions, and perhaps the KSU Foundation, to find the money needed to build the stand.

And while we're at it, K-State could start a little display of the collection of Bluemont College's rich heritages, which still remain today. In Farrell Library, B.C. (before construction), there used to be the original cement archway that was over the main-gate entrance into Bluemont College. Since construction, they have moved the archway out of the library.

Also, while they were working on Farrell, they discovered the original water pump for the University which use to be outside of Anderson. The handle on the pump was broken, but the rest was in pretty good shape. And with two and one-half years left in the construction of the library, who knows what else they might find.

Despite the lack of funding for some of these preservation projects, it would truly be a great shame for them to go by the wayside again and be forgotten. It is up to all of us, the University, the foundation, the alumni and the students to help save and promote K-State's fine history.

Aaron Otto is a sophomore in political science.

Movie job ushers out an end of interesting era

KRISTIN BRIGHTON

Someone once told me, "Have fun in college. You'll have to work the rest of your life."

Good advice. Maybe someday I'll take it.

You devote your weekends, your holidays, your nights, and your afternoons away from campus to a business. You work dirt cheap just to pay your bills or next semester's tuition. You enjoy the semi-financial independence. Then you must decide if everything is worth it.

You must put up with customers, griping about ridiculous prices you didn't create.

Complaining about what the weather does to the hairspray-frozen curl in his/her hair. Complaining because they are too late for last week's sale or tonight's feature or the special of the day.

Are you beginning to relate?

You must pick up after the customer. You must clean up the chewing-tobacco spit globs beginning to coagulate on the floor. You must sweep up the wet cigarette butts that collect around the front door.

You must scrape off the horrible eight-day-old grape Bubblicious gum that is smeared across the floor, or stuck to the back of a seat or growing mold in the drinking fountain.

Or, like last weekend, you have to wipe out that thrown-up chicken salad deposited in the bathroom sink that was obviously eaten too quickly because you can still identify what it was before.

Or, like a friend once described to me, you must pick up waste left behind in a clothing store's dressing room. Some people just don't understand that sanitary napkins don't belong on those little seats.

But there are advantages to working, don't get me wrong. I'm sure that many of you can relate, and have stories much better than mine (especially if you work in a bar). I don't mean to complain too much.

I just have to get this weight off my chest and let the whole world know that I have decided that 95 PERCENT OF PEOPLE ARE RUDE. Thank you.

Now on to other things.

Last week, I resigned a job I have worked since I was a junior in high school. For the most part, I have loved working there. I have made many dear friends over the popcorn warmer, found love in an unsuspecting place, and had many a laugh trying to describe exactly what the "butter" is made of. Yep, I have worked at a movie theater for a long time ... almost too long.

When you work in theaters, they eventually begin to consume your very being. You think you know as much about movies as Siskel and Ebert. You become a drag to take to Blockbuster because you have seen the entire New Release section.

You find yourself in a daze as you serve people their popcorn, working in an almost robotic trance from the monotony.

You find yourself wondering, "If I had a dollar for every kernel of popcorn I have sold, would I be able to purchase the world?" as you freeze in wonderment because you have buttered a lemonade.

And you truly know you are in trouble when, in a nearly hostile way, it becomes a game of resentment to enforce the student ID rule on people that you know have to be just forgetful students. But hey, they are having fun and you're ... just following orders.

But there are rewards. When a sweet woman comes up to you in tears because she adored the movie you recommended, or when your favorite film is so well liked that one couple will come and see it more than 50 times, you begin to understand the magic of film as a communicative media.

Yes, I'm due for a break from that world of high glitz and low glamour.

I've had a lot of fun, learned a bunch about human nature, met some of the most endearing and eccentric people in this town, and have become a terrific critic of popcorn, but I think my sign-off is overdue.

So long world. After this weekend, I won't see you next time at the movies — unless it's in the row in front of you.

▶ MULTICULTURALISM

Classes could teach reader something

Dear Editor,

I am writing in response to Mike Braman's letter to the editor in the Monday, Sept. 26, 1994, edition of the K-State Collegian.

In his letter, Mike asks for assistance in understanding our multicultural future (as if there isn't enough multiculturalism around us now for us to understand the issues). Although I seriously doubt that Mike was really open-minded enough to even consider the issues pertaining to multiculturalism, I would suggest that he take a class or two out of the many that cover such issues. He could start with women's studies or Native American studies or African American studies. Or, Mike, you could just postpone graduation a semester or two and wait for the diversity overlay requirement to catch up with you — after all, multiculturalism is the way of the future.

Finally, I want to sincerely wish Mike the best of luck in the future. Mike, good luck keeping a job, functioning with your diverse co-employees, and surviving in our diverse society. Good luck because with a bad attitude like yours (as displayed in your letter to the editor) you won't get far.

African Americans bring contributions

Dear Editor,

As a new faculty member to this campus, and as an African American female scholar, I am impressed to comment on Mike Braman's letter of Monday, Sept. 26. Upon reading the letter, my first response was, "I won't dignify this ignorance with a comment." However, Mr. Braman's views and choice of language illuminates an ideology embraced by many throughout academia and reveals the intense threat minorities and women bring to the ivory towers of higher education. It is because of the deeper ramifications of his message that I respond.

Many young white males on college campuses across the nation are extremely concerned with the proliferation of people of color in faculty and administrative positions. While they often include women in the term "minorities," very seldom are they concerned with the employment of white females.

Their worry emanates from the belief that people of color lack the qualifications and excellence necessary for the positions they are allegedly "stealing" from white male professors and/or administrators. What Mr. Braman and others who embrace this view fail to recognize is the changing face of academia reflects an attack on the American ideology of white male patriarchy, which attempts to silence voices and disregard the intellectual worth of minority scholars. Mr. Braman's view also implies an acceptance of hiring white male mediocrity if it precludes the hiring of minority scholars who excel in intellectual prowess.

As a senior history major, I am appalled by Mr. Braman's ignorance of the 19th century, to which he refers as "people today paying for the sins of a century ago." The 19th century reveals the strength, tenacity and defiance of African Americans to educate themselves and invent a "place" for themselves in American history. They attacked white supremacy by debunking the stereotypes and myths of their intellect, beauty, and significance and became the ancestors to the faculty, staff, and administrators you see on KSU campus today. The tradition of African Americans in education systems has institutionally precluded our rich contributions and experiences in the weaving of the American tapestry. Our traditions not only challenge the ideology of white supremacy in education but transcends and recreates an educational environment of critical thinkers who engage in dealing with their own proclivity to racism and sexism.

As the Kansas State University community prepares to celebrate Racial/Ethnic Harmony Week Oct. 2-8, it is this scholar's hope that "privileged ignorance" finds no place in our harmony of voices.

▶ THE WALL

The view of potty isn't the same

Dear Editor,

Okay, I'll admit it, and I'll be the first to admit it. I miss the wall in all its purple glory. Normally, I'm against defacing public property in any way, shape or form, but when the property is temporary and everyone knows it, I guess it's okay. Especially when the alternative scenery is the wasteland that used to be the north side of the library and a Port-A-Potty. Sad.

During our recent bout of nasty weather, I came to look forward to checking out the wall on my way to Algebra class. It glowed. It brightened the day. I liked to see who had swallowed their pride and declared true love for all the world to see. The fact that some real art was put up there proves that we are responsible with free expression.

My favorite piece was the stenciled triangles in the shape of a diamond. I know some offensive material appeared, but it was a vast minority.

Can't we please, please, please put the wall back up? All the parents have gone home, and it made a great wind block. I know I don't want to watch guys in hard hats move piles of rocks around, and I don't think anyone else does either. So how about it? Even though it may be too late, can't the Powers That Be indulge us just this once?

Teacher may have been helping

Dear Editor,

I have to question the facts in the column, "Word usage not the call of teacher." I would very much like to see this paper and look at its content, look at the assignment issued and, look at the ability of the writer to make his points.

I might also add that the sentiment of this article is not "helping the evolution of 'womyn' along any faster." It seems to me the main thing a student should be concerned with is having the knowledge to choose which word to use and understand why she has chosen it. If a teacher is trying to broaden a student's mind by giving alternate options, it should not be used as a crutch for not doing proper work.

Jayhawk quarterback still questionable for Oct. 6 game

CRESTON KUENZI
Collegian

The Kansas Jayhawks may be without a key component of their offense when they take the field next Thursday against K-State.

That component is quarterback Asheki Preston.

Although Preston has been quoted as saying that he will be ready for the Thursday night battle, Kansas coach Glen Mason is not so optimistic.

"I would still list Asheki as questionable, at best, based on the information I've been given," he said.

However, Mason said he wouldn't be surprised if Preston plays, due to the importance of the game.

"He's a very tough individual," Mason said. "Being a fifth-year senior, he'd very much like to play in this game."

Mason said it might be a while before the final decision to play him is made.

"I don't know at this point, and we might not know right up to game-time," he said.

Mason said he was pleased with Mark Williams' performance in the 72-0 win over Alabama-Birmingham. Williams is Preston's back-up.

"I thought that Mark did a nice job for his first game," he said. "He did a good job of making decisions and directing our team."

Mason said his team is starting to feel the excitement associated with the K-State-KU game.

"As this thing unfolds, it will have all the markings of an awfully big football game," he said.

■ Colorado coach Bill McCartney was not optimistic in the closing seconds of the dramatic victory over Michigan.

"I guess I was the last one to think that it could work," he said. "We had run the play with two seconds left in the first half, and we couldn't get any receivers to the end zone in time.

"When Kordell did launch it at the end of the game, I thought, 'doggone, we've got a chance'."

■ Nebraska quarterback Tommie Frazier was taken out of the game against Pacific in the first quarter as a precaution stemming from a leg injury.

"There appears to be a vascular problem in his leg, in the calf muscle area," receivers coach Ron Brown said. "We're doing some tests, and we'll see what comes out of it."

Brown said he was not sure about whether Frazier will be able to play in the next game.

"It's something that I'm not prepared to say yet, because I'm not altogether sure about his status."

■ Iowa State coach Jim Walden said if he's not coaching at Ames next year, it won't be because he quit.

"I'll let someone else make that decision for me," Walden said. "Quitting would be like admitting you're not very good, and I think I'm a pretty damn good football coach.

"I'm just not sure I've got the best people in the world that I'm trying to coach all the time."

Walden said resigning would make him a hypocrite.

Frazier's status unknown

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LINCOLN, Neb. — Nebraska quarterback Tommie Frazier, the heart of the No. 2-ranked team's option offense, was hospitalized for tests Monday on a deeply bruised right calf.

Coach Tom Osborne issued a brief statement confirming that Frazier was admitted Sunday to Bryan Hospital in Lincoln.

"The preliminary diagnosis is that he has a vascular problem in his right calf. We will know more in the next 24 hours," Osborne said.

Frazier

It was unclear how long Frazier would be hospitalized, how many tests he was undergoing, or whether he would be available to play Saturday against Wyoming in Lincoln.

Frazier's symptoms could indicate a blood clot, and doctors want to know the extent of the problem, head trainer George Sullivan told the Omaha World-Herald.

"A big share of the time that's what it probably is, but we don't know yet," Sullivan told the paper.

Quarterback coach Turner Gill, a Husker standout a decade ago, said it could be sometime Tuesday before coaches know the prognosis.

"Until we see some test results, we won't know whether he'll be ready tomorrow or Saturday or when," Gill said.

Gill is no stranger to quarterback injury and pain. On Nov. 14, 1981, as a sophomore quarterback, he suffered a deep leg bruise in the game with Iowa State.

His right leg swelled and damaged a major nerve, leaving Gill with what's called "drop foot," a loss of control of the foot.

Gill said he spoke with Frazier on Sunday.

"Basically, I said he should just hang in there and try to keep his spirits up. It's a down time for you right now, but you've got the best medical people to help you and something good will come from this," Gill said.

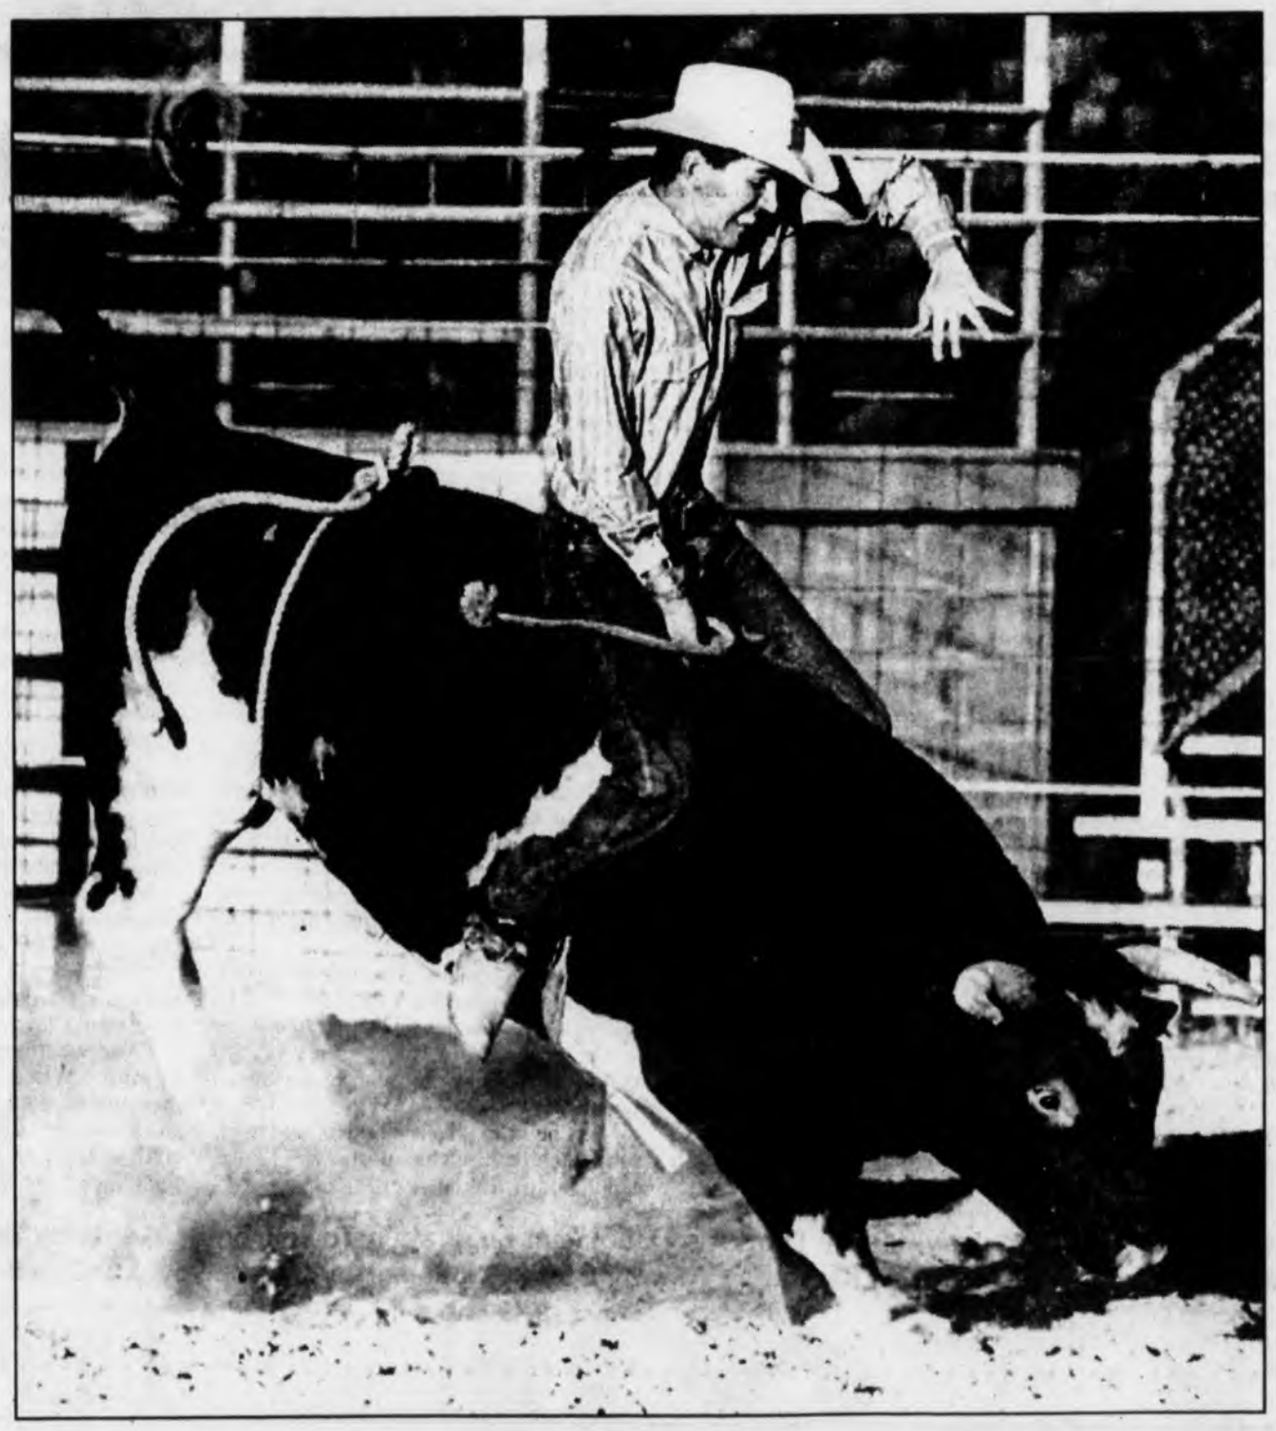
Frazier left practice Sept. 19 on a stretcher with ice bags attached to his calf but practiced full time the rest of the week.

"We knew he had a bruise and was sore, but then you get that every week," Gill said.

On Saturday, Frazier was not declared the starter for the Pacific game until after pre-game warm-ups. Osborne pulled Frazier and most of the starters out of the game early as Nebraska ran to a 70-21 victory over Pacific.

Frazier played in only two series. He led two touchdown drives that took 1:45 and 1:32 in the first six minutes of the game.

"Coach Osborne told me they didn't want to play me very much," Frazier said after the game. "I guess 14 points was enough. That's fine with me."



Osborne said Frazier may have been hurt Sept. 17 during the UCLA game, but Frazier later said he was not sure when he was injured.

Receivers coach Ron Brown, who filled in for Osborne on the Big Eight coaches' teleconference Monday, said he wasn't prepared to comment on Frazier's status.

"It's something we're going to have to get Brook (second-string quarterback Brook Berringer) ready to go," Brown said.

A 6-foot-2, 205-pound junior from Bradenton, Fla., Frazier has been considered a Heisman Trophy candidate.

He has started in every game since his first start as a freshman against Missouri in 1992.

Denver extends its losing streak to 4

ASSOCIATED PRESS

ORCHARD PARK, N.Y. — Buffalo and Denver both know how to lose Super Bowls — seven of the last eight to be precise.

The Broncos, 0-4 and off to the worst start in their history, are learning how painful the mundane losses can be.

And that "nice tries" don't count.

The latest one came Monday night when Thurman Thomas ran for two late first-half touchdowns and Carwell Gardner scored early in the third quarter as the Bills beat the Broncos 27-20.

Buffalo 27
Broncos 20

The outcome wasn't settled until John Elway threw a slippery ball over the end zone from the 4-yard-line on a fourth down with 21 seconds left. That made it the third close loss in four games for Denver — a three-pointer to San Diego and an overtime loss to the Jets along with last week's 48-16 blowout by the Raiders.

"The Bills looked like the same team they've been the last four years. They didn't look any different to me," Denver coach Wade Phillips said. "Our guys played hard, but we made too many mistakes and it cost us the ballgame."

The Broncos, considered Super Bowl contenders when the season started, has started 0-4 only once before (1964). And that got Jack Faulkner fired as coach, a fate that could be awaiting Phillips if Denver fans get their way.

The Bills took advantage of two turnovers during a winning spurt that spanned both halves, scoring 21 of their 27 points in three minutes, 36 seconds.

Thomas, who gained 103 yards in 17 carries before leaving with a right-knee injury early in the third quarter, went in from 16 yards with 1:54 left in the half.

He then scored from the 27 with 18 seconds left in the half after Bruce Smith sacked Elway and forced a fumble that was recovered by Cornelius Bennett. Coach Marv Levy said Thomas' injury "doesn't appear to be real serious."

In addition to his recovery, Bennett had six tackles, two sacks and forced Elway to throw high on the Broncos' final play.

"We did get a momentum swing with the fumble," he said. "But with John Elway at quarterback, you can never say you've got them licked."

But another turnover helped.

Gardner scored 1:42 into the second half after Mickey Washington's interception, the fifth thrown by Elway this year.

Until then, the Bills (3-1) couldn't muster much offense against a team that had allowed an average of 37 points in its first three games and lost four starters to injuries in the first 18 minutes — running back Rod Bernstine, cornerback Ray Crockett, offensive tackle Russell Freeman and defensive end Dan Williams.

K-State finishes second at Texas tourney

CRESTON KUENZI
Collegian

The K-State women's volleyball team won a match, lost a match and finished second place at the University of Texas-Arlington Tournament Saturday and Sunday.

On Friday, the Wildcats faced Virginia Tech in a match that decided which team would play in the championship game.

The Cats dominated the Hokies with the scores of 15-11, 15-2 and 15-7. The Hokies were 4-7 going into the game including wins over Kansas and Texas Tech.

"We basically played well against Virginia Tech and we didn't against Oral Roberts," Coach Jim Moore, said.

Yolanda Young, led the team in kills with 16, and Jill Dugan had 10. Devon Ryning had a big game with 37 assists and five assisted blocks, while Kathy Wylie provided eight digs to lead the team.

The Hokies displayed a dismal .054 kill percentage in the match with only 25 kills. The Cats had a .347 kill percentage with 47 kills.

Then, the Cats geared up for the championship match against Oral Roberts which had beaten Texas-Arlington on Friday.

The Cats could not get on track in the match as the Golden Eagles prevailed with the scores of 15-8, 15-4 and 15-12.

"We won so handily against Virginia Tech, a team that we thought would be difficult, that we thought Oral Roberts would be easy," Moore said. "We found out that it's never easy."

Debbie Miller was one bright spot in the match for K-State as she nailed eight kills with just one error to lead the team. Young managed seven kills.

Ryning led in assists with 22, and Dugan had five digs and four assisted blocks.

As a team, the Eagles had a .358 kill percentage compared to the Cats' .190, and the Eagles dug 38 balls, while the Cats only recorded 17.

The Cats are now 8-2 and will face Wichita State Wednesday, at 7:30 p.m. The Shockers beat the Cats on two occasions last year, once in three games and the other in four games.

"They are a very solid team and they will be a difficult team to beat," Moore said. "We will have to play well to beat them."

The Wichita State match will be the last match for K-State before Big Eight Conference play begins Oct. 1 at Colorado.

Style at a better price

KRISTA COZAD
Collegian

In a room across from campus, a K-State student in a tan long-sleeved shirt that is missing a button, sits staring out his window, and speaks of a passion he has had for years. He leans in closer to explain, and his blue jeans, faded from long hours of wear and tear on someone's body, reflect the sun.

But not wear and tear from his body.

You see, his passion is what he is wearing.

His passion is comfortable and cheap clothing; his passion is often second-hand clothing, and he is not alone in his passion to find cheap places to shop on a student's budget.

Mark Walker, junior in natural resource management, said he shops at second-hand clothing stores and warehouses that have damaged merchandise because he can find comfortable clothes that are cheaper than department stores.

"I shop there because it's pretty cheap and you find a lot of cool stuff there. Like this shirt. It might've been a $5 or $10 shirt. It's just plain, it's not bright, just very earthy and comfy," he said. "I'm not so much for fashion, but my own style. My own style is more important to me."

Summer Johnson, freshman in vet-medicine, said she shops at second-hand stores because the items she finds there are unique and well-worn, so they're the ultimate in comfortable.

"Basically, I look for uniqueness. I buy a lot of flannels and a lot of jeans, corduroy things, bell-bottoms and some polyester stuff. You don't see too many people with brown corduroy bell-bottoms on," she said.

Johnson had a tip for shoppers — shop for seasonal clothing out of that season.

"The best time to go is in the middle of the summer, because then you can get your whole winter wardrobe. All the good stuff is usually gone by the first of winter," she said.

David Smith, junior in marketing, said that he doesn't shop at second-hand clothing stores that much. He said he's found a cheap alternative at the Fort Riley base exchange.

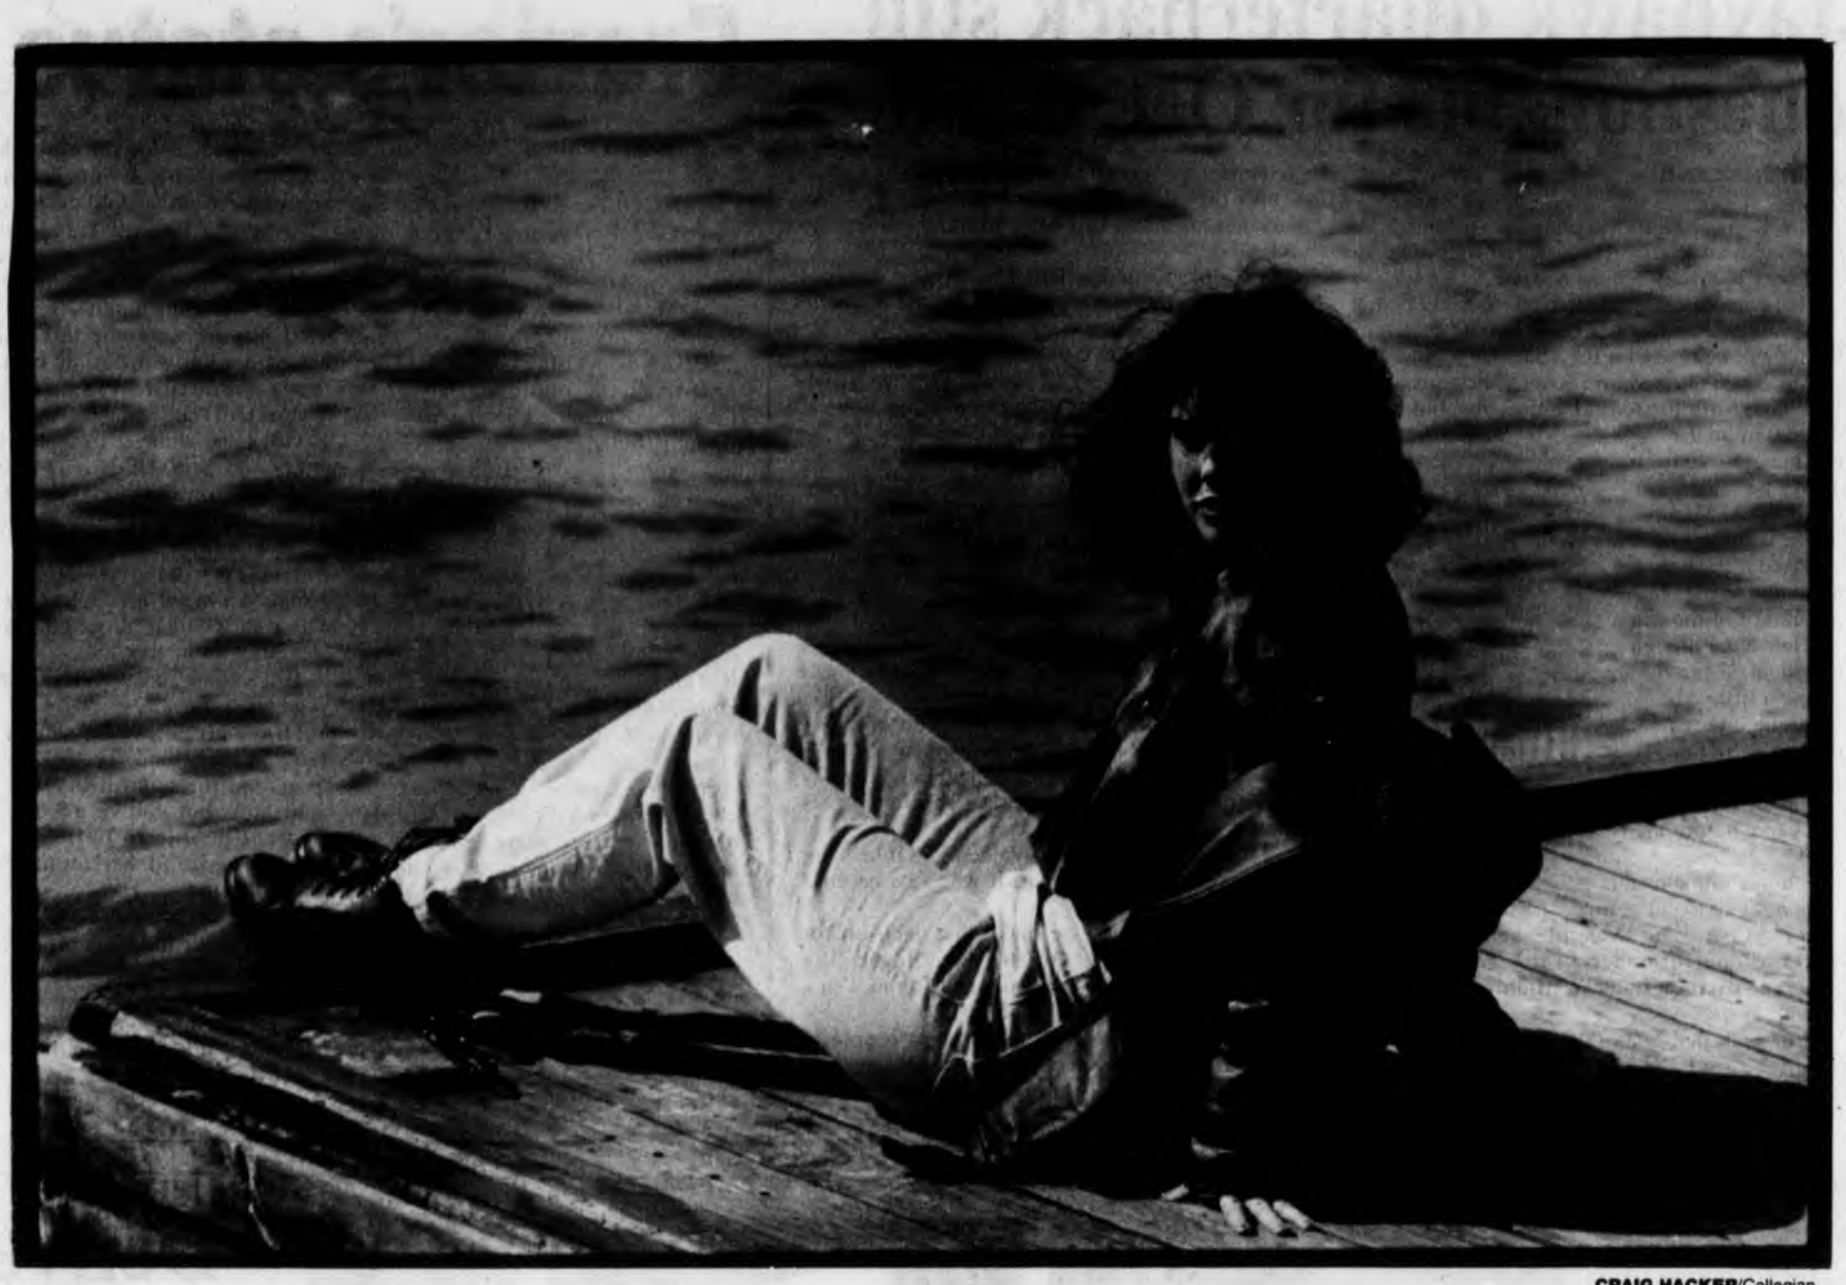
"The PX is a private store operated by the military for people in the military and their families. They sell Polo, Claiborne, and Guess stuff there, only it's like 20 percent cheaper than at regular stores," he said.

Of course one of the drawbacks to the PX, Smith said, is you have to be in one of the branches of the military to take advantage of the savings.

He had another suggestion for the student looking for a cheap clothing alternative — the flea market.

"I've got a hat I call my "Jed" hat because it looks like the hat Jed Clampett wore in 'The Beverly Hillbillies.' I've found it to be a real conversation starter, and everybody always has a comment on it," he said. "I also got a really cool hat that looks like the hat Gilligan wore on the island, only it has the little Budweiser signs all over it.".

Sherry Andres, manager of Grandma's Trunk in Manhattan, said many customers who visit the store are in fraternities and sororities, and they are looking for outfits for theme parties. However, she said she gets many customers who are looking for everyday clothing.



"A lot come in and buy stuff with their friends for parties, but then they might see something they really like and they don't want the others to see, so they'll come back later without their friends to buy it. Then there are the regulars that come in once a week because they don't want to miss the good stuff," she said.

Andres said the allure of second-hand clothing is two-fold.

"You can get the stuff you buy at regular stores here, and people like to look and dig and see if they can find some great bargain," she said. "Because we've got everything, and a little more than we need."

FASHION CONSCIOUS

VESTS, CHINOS, EARTH-TONE COLORS AND PLAID A MUST FOR FALL SEASON

•• BY DEBBIE GILL ••

Cooler temperatures, falling leaves and chilly breezes have arrived. It's officially autumn, and for many students that means a change in their wardrobes as the weather grows colder.

For the more fashion-conscious, this requires keeping up with the latest clothing trends. Stores in the Manhattan Town Center mall began displaying new fall merchandise in late summer.

"We began getting our fall things the last week of July, and will continue to get new merchandise until December," Sandy Lewis, co-sales manager of The Limited, said.

Although clothing stores target different consumer groups, color is one trend that is universal.

"There is a real focus on color this season. The colors we are seeing are hunter green, olive green, navy and burgundy," Beth Dreiling, area sales manager for Dillard's, said.

Dreiling said that in both men's and women's apparel, these earth-tone colors are popular.

"The colors are more muted, but still very rich. Brown is something we haven't seen in a while, but it is also very big this year," she said.

Megan McGlinn, senior merchandising manager at J.C. Penney, said she agreed that those colors are hot.

"Hunter green seems to be our best color this year. Burgundy and navy are very popular, too."

A trend that is continuing from last season is the vest, McGlinn said.

"Vests are going over really well with both men and women. Most of the vests are the knitted type, either sweater or thermal knit. Some women's vests have tapestry patterns or novelty beading," she said.

Dreiling also said vests appeared to be a hit this fall.

"I think people like them because they can totally dress up a more casual outfit, or even get another look out of a basic career skirt and blouse," she said.

Plaid patterns are everywhere, McGlinn said.

"Both men and women are wearing plaid. We see it most often in the plaid flannel shirts, but it's also in sleep wear, and we're even selling plaid bra and underwear sets," McGlinn said.

"People are making a lot of statement with plaid. It's in dresses and jumpers, and even some women's suits," Dreiling said.

At The Limited, Lewis said that the plaid kilt skirts have been a popular item.

"It's a fun look for fall. People are putting a solid-color sweater with a kilt and opaque tights," she said.

Sweaters are always popular in colder weather, but the sweater length which sells the most varies. Lewis said although the tunic-length sweater was big last year, a shorter length is the trend for this fall.

"The sweaters aren't cropped. Instead, they're hitting the wearer right below the waist line. We see this same length in the vests and cardigans as well as the pullover sweaters," Lewis said.

McGlinn said sweaters will be big sellers this winter.

"This looks like a real good sweater year. Most are pullovers, but the newest look is the shorter-length sweater," McGlinn said.

For men's and women's casual wear, simple clothing basics are the best sellers. Thermal knit, long-sleeve shirts, called waffle-knits, are a popular basic, McGlinn said.

"People are mixing the waffle-knits with flannel shirts or henley tops," she said.

Lewis said chinos, a casual twill pant, are another fashion basic this fall.

"Many people are replacing their jeans with chinos, because they're so comfortable. They are wearing the chinos with henleys," she said.

For the more career-minded consumer, dressier clothing has a classic, more-tailored look this fall, Lewis said.

"Cuffed trousers, suspenders, blazers that can mix and match with skirts or pants. These are all more classic looks," she said.

Dreiling also said the career wear is very clean and basic this year.

"The suits especially are very plain, but have rich colors. These are things you could wear for years, and they won't be out of style," she said.

For men, there is more variety in their career clothes, Dreiling said.

"For years, menswear was very basic and all the same. Now it's very fashion-conscious. The ties are absolutely gorgeous these days," she said.

Details on men's dress shirts, such as stripes and French cuffs, are all popular ways to add to the basic suit and tie, Dreiling said. Darker colored shirts worn with ties are also popular, she said.

So, with all the new looks this fall, are people really buying all that much? Dreiling says the answer is yes.

"People are buying right now, particularly women, and will continue to do so until Christmas," she said.

"The weather patterns spur a lot of buying. When it's 80 degrees in September, people don't feel like buying a wool sweater. But, the minute there is a cold, windy day, they start looking at the fall things," she said.

▶ KSU TRENDS

Hate pantyhose and ties? Have no fear, comfort's in at K-State

CHRISTIE WRIGHT
Collegian

K-State has a wide variety of clothing trends, but the one thing that seems to be common among most students is comfort.

One student defined the trend in fashion at K-State as being whatever is comfortable, but slightly on the conservative side.

"I think people here dress in a laid-back fashion," Tony Stanton, senior in environmental engineering, said. "I usually wear hiking boots, T-shirts and Levi's. Nothing too flashy."

Some people don't find their favorite brands or style of clothing in Manhattan.

"I shop in Kansas City," Mike Loritz, senior in accounting, said.

Loritz said he thinks the trends at K-State are fairly conservative.

"Most people like to wear the kind of clothes that never go out of style, like plaid or denim. Navy, white, hunter green or off-white are also popular colors," Loritz said.

Another student said the trends of clothes depend on where you are on campus.

"I think people tend to wear country-western clothes on one side of campus and on the other side it's totally different," Eric Plath, senior in accounting, said.

"I think the trend at K-State is to wear whatever is loose and comfortable," Marcia Drake, junior in hotel and restaurant management, said.

She said no one really wears bright colored clothes.

"I see a lot of people wearing oatmeal-colored clothes," Drake said.

Drake also works part-time at the information counter in the K-State Union.

"I see all kinds of people come in here," Drake said. "The architects that come in usually are wearing T-shirts, Birkenstocks and nondescript colored clothing."

But T-shirts and conservative clothes aren't the only things seen at K-State.

"The other day, I saw some guys in the Union with mohawks and one with blue hair," Drake said.

Drake said she sees all kinds of people on campus and in the Union so it's hard to see one certain trend.

Some students find their style of clothes at thrift or army surplus stores.

"I usually get my clothes in Kansas City, but sometimes I like to go to the army surplus store in St. Marys to get Carhart clothes," Mark Illausky, junior in horticulture, said.

According to Illausky, the style of clothing at K-State is comfortable and loose-fitting.

"I think people just wear whatever is comfortable, like jeans and T-shirts," Illausky said.

One student said he likes to dress up a little more when he is on campus.

"I usually wear polo shirts with a collar and jeans to class," Andy Dykstra, sophomore in mechanical engineering, said.

Dykstra said it's trendy at K-State to wear baggy clothes and to never tuck shirts in.

Some students don't like wearing the latest fashion.

"I have never been very big on clogs and bell bottoms and I wish they would have never come back in style again," Aimee Aust, sophomore in landscape design said. "I like to shop in Kansas City at the Gap and The Limited."

"The architects that come in usually are wearing T-shirts, Birkenstocks and nondescript colored clothing."

KIMBERLY WISHART

"You don't know anything about a man until you've walked in his shoes."

This phrase is not easy to do, so you might as well get your own shoes.

Over the years, shoes have been through several changes and then back again.

Tennis shoes went from using shoe strings to using hook-and-loop fasteners. Heels have varied from spiked to pumps to square. Birkenstocks have outlived Dr. Scholl's, clogs are back in style and the men's work boot is no longer just for work.

"The work boot is the most popular for women, men and kids," Kim Lillibridge, assistant manager at Famous Footwear, said.

The work boot is a six-inch boot with lug soles that comes in a chamois color.

"As a trendy thing, the work boot is probably the most practical," Clyde Scott, owner of Brown's Shoe Fit, said. "They can be worn with casual clothes or dressy clothes."

Scott said earth tones were the most popular colors besides basic black.

"The outdoor-type shoes, like the work boot, are so popular because people are so concerned with the environment today," Scott said, who has been selling shoes for 37 years.

One shoe that has been popular for years is the plain white canvas tennis shoe.

"We've had Keds ever since we opened," Lillibridge said. "They pretty much stay popular all-year round."

The K-Swiss tennis shoe has also become popular within the last few years.

"I think my favorite shoes are my white K-Swiss tennis shoes," Jeff Balthrop, senior in political science and secondary education, said. "They're the most comfortable shoes I own. I never have to untie them. I've had them for 2-1/2 years so they're broken in, and I can slide them right on, and they fit like a glove."

Birkenstocks are also popular for comfort.

"Birkenstocks have been popular since the '60s. I think it's because of their comfort. It's just taken some people longer to find them," Dian Olson, owner of Olson's Shoe Service, said. "Some people get them because they are trendy, but once they have them they see that they're really comfortable."

The clog was also popular in the '60s, and even though their popularity died out, they are back again.

"I have a pair of clogs, but I don't wear them that much," Cori Richardson, sophomore in apparel and textile marketing, said. "I'm a plain dresser so they don't go with much, but I do have one outfit I can wear them with."

▶ BACKPACKS

Double strappin' and campin' start a fashion

TRINA HOLMES
Collegian

Whether being used on a camping trip, to carry books on campus, or as protection from the rain, backpacks have become a convenient accessory to any student's outfit.

Vern Cushenbery, sophomore in finance and communications, said although he's had his black EastPak for two years, he only recently realized that his backpack would also serve as rain gear.

"I have weatherproof lining on the inside of my backpack, so in case it's really raining, I can dump all my books out and use it as sort of a raincoat," Cushenbery said.

Carrying supplies when camping was another use Cushenbery said he found for his backpack.

"I use it for a lot of stuff when I'm not at school — especially during the summer," he said. "I usually throw clothes in there. If I'm going camping with a girl, I'll throw in a blanket and food, and if I want to add a little romance, I'll throw in some candles."

The one thing Cushenbery said he would change about his backpack is its attraction for dust.

"I'd like to make it dust repellent," he said. "Black collects a lot of dust if its set on the floor in classrooms — especially on the back."

Cushenbery said although he doesn't have a system to determine if he carries his backpack with one or two straps, he has to be careful not to hurt his back.

"Most of the time I carry it over my right shoulder, but I try to switch it around," Cushenbery said. "If you're carrying a heavy backpack over your right shoulder all the time, you can throw your spine out of line. At least this is what my chiropractor tells me."

Julie Albertson, sophomore in journalism, said she made the switch to carrying her brown, leather EastPak with two straps.

"My shoulder sometimes was giving me problems, and it seemed more comfortable to carry it with two straps," Albertson said. "I think it's okay to carry it with one, though. Sometimes I still find myself using one."

For Casey Ewy, senior in elementary education, a green, JanSport over-the-shoulder bag is the bag of choice.

"I used to have a two-strap back pack and then switched," Ewy said. "I like the bag I have now better — it's much easier to carry and more comfortable."

Ewy said the one thing she'd like to change would be the number and size of the pencil holders inside.

"I wish there were more pencil things because I always run out of room," she said. "Also, some of my pens don't fit in the pencil pouch because the holes are too small."

Cheri Paillet, senior in speech pathology and Varney's Book Store employee, said over-the-shoulder bags like EastPak's Rhode Scholar, $59.95, and Ipswitch, $55.95, were the most popular style of bag at Varney's.

"I think they're popular because you can take the shoulder part off and use it like a briefcase," Paillet said. "If a student doesn't have the time to get a briefcase, it just looks more professional with a leather top handle. The other ones are only back packs."

Paillet said she has a Rhode Scholar bag and has found it to be the most convenient style for riding her bike to campus.

"I like it because if I'm riding my bike and then stop, it's easier to reach into it because it sits on the side of my hip," she said. "You'd have to take the whole back pack off with the other kind. The over-the-shoulder kind are more accessible."

Paillet said mallard, olive, moss

SUCCESS is right at your FEET
Payless Shoe Source is the nation's largest footwear retailer, operating over 3,800 stores in 49 states and Puerto Rico. Sales during 1993 were $1.97 billion, with 180 million pairs of shoes sold. In the coming year the company will continue its aggressive growth, opening an average of one new store every business day.
This growth has created outstanding opportunities at our corporate headquarters in Topeka, Kansas. We offer the fast-track Corporate Management Associate Program and a compensation package competitive with any industry. Payless Shoe Source will be interviewing for December graduates Corporate Management Associate positions on:

Reader asks Cassie to rumble with announcer

Dear Cassie,

The Cats are on their quest for another successful season in football, but one thing disturbs me at the games.

I was wondering if you could speak with the announcer of the game to stress his significant role in getting the fans involved.

His opening lines are as much a tradition as the band playing the Wabash Cannon Ball.

The announcer does a good job during the game, but he always seems to be a little shaky on his opening.

Would you please ask the announcer to practice saying: "Cats, are you ready?" and "Are you ready to RRUUUMMBBLE?" Cassie please speak with him.

Signed,
Ready to RRUUUMMBBLE!

Dear Ready to RRUUUMMBBLE,

I too am a football fan, and last week's "Are you ready to RRRUUUMMMBBBLE" sounded great to me.

As a matter-of-fact, I was still in the depths of the parking lot (attending to some pre-game partying), and I heard the announcer loud and clear.

Perhaps you should run up to the press box, grab the microphone, and give the announcer a run for his money.

▶ REVIEW

Singer's emotion obvious in music

SARA SMITH
Collegian

The Lied Center at KU put McCain Auditorium to shame Friday.

Don't get me wrong. McCain is nice and all, but the Lied Center is not only a better facility, but it resides on a campus that has enough live music clout to draw (and sell out) an act like Tori Amos.

I hope I can live to see the day when Tori will come to K-State, but I don't think I will. I also don't think I'll live to see a more compelling live performance by any single artist.

It's not just because she sat alone at her piano, perched precariously with one leg bent backward, keeping up with and improving on everything she accomplishes on her albums.

It's not just because she let the audience hear every gasp of breath she took before her voice filled the place and pressed everyone back in their seats.

It's not just because she opened with the Beatles' "She's Leaving Home" and went on to back into her version of "Smells Like Teen Spirit" using the first verse of "American Pie."

It's because she gave the audience the same thing that comes across on her CDs — herself.

Stuffed animals dotted the stage and piano and grinned down at Tori as she played her most-loved songs from "Little Earthquakes" and "Under the Pink," her latest release. Tori laid out tales of religion, angst, joy and heartbreak with every song, and it doesn't take too long before you realize what makes Tori an important artist and why so much emotion comes through in her music.

She is singing about her life.

Unashamedly, proudly, she sings of her insecurity as a child, her estrangement from a lover and the acquaintance rape she experienced as a young girl, the same rape that she chronicles a cappella in "Me and a Gun."

Tori picked up her microphone and sat on her piano bench under the glare of one spotlight, staring at a point beyond the back of the auditorium. Her face betrayed nothing, and her voice told everything as she sang, her voice strong and unassisted.

Me and a gun and a man on my back
But I haven't seen Barbados
So I must get out of this.

"Me and a Gun" is one of the tracks on "Little Earthquakes," the album which is widely (and wrongly) taken for Tori's debut album. Her first album, Y Kant Tori Read, is a collector's item and now sells for around $300. "Little Earthquakes" also has a track on it, which has been called the anthem for the 90's, "Silent All These Years."

This track is one of the few of Tori's songs that broke into the mainstream early, and more recently she has been recognized for "Cornflake Girl."

"Cornflake Girl," by the way, is about multiculturalism and anorexia, according to Tori. You have to listen to Tori to understand her.

But you don't have to be a musical genius to realize that she is probably the most important singer and songwriter to make herself widely available in this decade.

To help you find what you are looking for, the classified ads have been arranged by category and sub-category. All categories are marked by one of the large images, and sub-categories are preceded by a number designation.

TIPS FOR WRITING A CLASSIFIED AD

Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.

Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.

Consider including the price. This tells buyers if they are looking at something in their price range.

WE DO NOT USE PHONE NUMBERS OR LAST NAMES IN PERSONALS.

ADA helps disabled employees protected under Title I.

"The unions like to call the ADA a law for injured workers," he said.

"But it's not just for people who were, for example, born with a disability," he said. "It's also for workers who have back injuries, carpal tunnel syndrome and things like that."

Employers cannot fire someone simply because they have a disability, he said.

"You're supposed to try to make an accommodation to allow them to continue doing their job," Whidden said.

"It's a very important law. It's too bad there has to be a law to make sure people are guaranteed these freedoms and privileges, but there is a need for it."

Stacia Weilert, community advocate and job development specialist at Three Rivers Independent Living Resource Center in Manhattan, said employers must make reasonable accommodations for employees on the job, in the interviewing process and job descriptions.

Weilert said her job includes talking to employers about different ways of interviewing individuals with disabilities, accommodations they can make on the job and sensitivity training.

"We listen to a tape which plays different pronunciations, different sound levels or what it might sound like with a hearing aid, and I have the people write what they hear," she said.

"Then they can understand that people with disabilities still have the same wants, desires and needs, but they have to go about it a little different way to get the same thing," Weilert said.

She said an employed disabled person receives the same protection.

Weilert said something like moving office furniture so that a person in a wheelchair can access a room may be a reasonable accommodation.

"Or it might be an accommodation of lowering the toilet-paper roll so that a person could reach it," she said.

"Simple, little accommodations like that may get employers scared because they think they'll have to spend all this money, but really they're small accommodations and hardly cost any money at all."

Weilert said an employee should always ask if they do need certain accommodations.

"Sometimes there's no way for an employer to know, and you can't go around second guessing everything," she said.

Karl Russell, Kansas Farm Bureau employment manager, said the new Manhattan building was constructed in 1989 with the idea of the disabled person in mind.

"We have wheel ramps, spaces for handicapped vehicles and van accessible spaces," Russell said. "We also have buttons on doors so that they open automatically."

Russell said the building also is accessible for people with hidden disabilities.

"The elevator buttons have braille signs underneath them, and we have bells for the blind so they can tell which floor they're on."

Russell said the biggest change was the reconstruction of the job descriptions.

"We've rewritten them to include more specific detail of the job characteristics," he said.

"ADA is the law of the land, and it's certainly appropriate," Russell said. "We support what it's intended to do."

Athletic shoes trendy

Another trendy shoe that has been around for years is Chuck Taylor's Converse.

"They were the original basketball shoe," Corwyn Welton, employee at Ballard's Sporting Goods, said. "Now they come in a low-top shoe, and you can get them in a plaid, stars and stripes, green or just about any color."

Welton said athletic shoes have become less specialized.

"Cross-trainers have become a very big deal," she said. "It's especially nice for students who go to the rec center because before they had to take two pairs of shoes for basketball and running."

Black has become a common color for basketball shoes.

"I think the number of black shoes is amazing," Welton said. "All of our basketball shoes are black, and the running shoes are mostly white."

Besides choosing colors and styles, there are always different brands to be considered.

"On shoes I go for quality, but with clothes it's not that big of a deal," Richardson said. "I spend the money on shoes."

Scott agreed that there is a parallel between prices and quality.

"Price wise, if you stay with the branded shoes, like Eastland or Dexter, they are going to be worth the money. They'll stay around for years and years," Scott said. "There are a lot of copies, but they wear out soon. You can make a lot of things look the same but not feel the same."

People keep runner going senior in theater, said in the Union parking lot before the run. "We're just not brutes hitting heads. We want to help them out."

Steve Jackman, graduate student in secondary education, said he was running for two reasons — to support the rugby club and to support the Grey Wolves.

"I'm going to do at least 10-miles straight," Jackman said. "Then I'll see how I feel."

Standing next to him, Eddings smiled. "I love people like that."

Eddings, a graduate of Huron College in South Dakota, prepared by running an average of 40 miles per week and lifting weights. He said before leaving California he met with a doctor who recommended a list of vitamins he would need to take each day.

As for his diet, that has remained basically unchanged since starting the run. It consists mainly of fruits and vegetables.

"But if a Big Mac sounds good, that's what I'll have," he said.

Already, Eddings has gone through one pair of running shoes and his body is beginning to feel the strain of running and walking halfway across the nation in temperatures that were as high as 110 degrees in the desert.

One thing that has kept him going is the reaction he's gotten from people he has met. He said they have not had one single hassle.

"The American people have been extremely good. They've been supportive and shown real concern for young people."

On the journey, Eddings has kept with him two rugby balls signed by people he has met along the way. He has the signatures of the Colorado governor and Karl Malone of the Utah Jazz.

He said when they arrive in Washington D.C. next month, they hope to have President Bill Clinton run with them for the final stretch towards the Lincoln Memorial. Once finished, they will present one of the signed rugby balls to the president.

Grant will help alcohol education the City Commission, Linda Spielman, executive secretary to the city manager, said. The committee reviews each of the proposals and decides how the money is distributed.

Because of the grant, the office can get out and work with agencies off-campus, Arck said. The Alcohol and Other Drug Education Service, which falls under University Counseling Services, is involved with the local chapters of Mothers Against Drunk Drivers and Students Against Driving Drunk.

Arck said they also provide presentations to different organizations and groups around the community.

The majority of the grant money the University receives pays the salary of the Assistant Director who works half-time, Arck said. With Roxanne Ayotte, the Assistant Director, in the office, they are able to accomplish most of the things they want to do.

"It's a difference of one person working alone or two people working together to get the job done," he said.

With the extra person in the office, they can now stress the importance of education when it comes to alcohol abuse, he said.

"Although it is a legal drug, there are significant negative effects of drinking too much abusively," Arck said.

When alcohol or drugs are misused at K-State, the entire community has to deal with the consequences, he said. Everything from bad grades to run-ins with the law can be a result of alcohol abuse.

Even though they do try to educate and help everyone in the community, he said, it's hard to say just how many people they actually reach.

"Unlike a dentist, it's tough to put a number on how many people we help," Arck said. "Prevention doesn't work like being able to say how many cavities you filled."

Back packs with leather popular at K-State and espresso were popular colors this fall because they are the neutral colors, which are coming into fashion.

She also said back packs with leather bottoms are popular because of their durability.

"The ones with leather bottoms hold up more," Paillet said. "Instead of going straight through the threads, there is an extra layer of protection."

The leather option is available for most back pack colors, Paillet said.

"A lot of our bags are duplicates — one has leather, and one doesn't," she said. "Then if you don't have the money for the leather one, but like the style, you can get the cheaper kind."

Because of the EastPak lifetime guarantee, Paillet said Varney's offers students loaner backpacks, for a $10 insurance deposit, while their bags are being sent in for repair or replacement.

The K-State Union Bookstore also offers students loaner bags, Maria Latham, Union Bookstore sales clerk, said.

"People usually don't choose to use the loaner bags," Latham said. "They're the old red and blue nylon EastPaks that say Eastpak, Eastpak, Eastpak all over them."

Latham said prices of back packs range from $21 nylon bags to $80 leather bags, with the JanSport MVP style of over-the-shoulder bag being the most popular.

"There are a lot of new styles and color combinations, but most people get navy blue and black bags because they go with everything," she said.

Bathroom threat angers residents time later, the glass was repaired and the extinguisher returned.

Donald Francis, Manhattan fire marshal, said extinguishers are not to be removed unless they are to be serviced. Keeping an extinguisher in any place other than its case is a violation of fire codes, Francis said.

"If it continues to be a problem, they will find themselves in court," Francis said.

Another incident that had residents fuming was the possibility that the second floor bathrooms could be shut down.

Rolley Bateman, sophomore in computer science, said water-balloon fighting in the bathroom had caused Bhakta to threaten to close the bathroom to everyone until someone confessed.

"It's time for the residents to stand up to the housing department," Bateman said. "The staff says they have the right to shut down the bathrooms anytime they want. I pay a lot for rent here so I can have a bathroom to use."

Andrew Pelletier, acting state epidemiologist for the Kansas Department of Health and Environment, said he didn't know the specifics of the K-State case but that a bathroom had to be provided.

"In general, you have to be sure you have a certain number of toilet facilities available to a certain number of people," Pelletier said.

Williams said that the bathrooms were not shut down.

"Probably between the fire marshal and the health people, he decided against it."

The Department of Housing and Dining Services was unavailable for comment.

Conferences pay for visitor parking

BOB MACHA
Collegian

Conference parking at the K-State Union benefits the University, Dwain Archer, director of parking services, said.

The University gets more money from conference parking than if the stall were simply used as a metered stall. He said it costs the conference group $4 per stall per day for a metered stall and $2 for a non-metered stall. It costs 25 cents an hour to park in the metered lot. Parking Services charges people to park there 7 a.m. to 5 p.m. weekdays so the University can collect $2.50 if the stall is used constantly.

It is also good because the conferences bring people into the Union, Archer said.

They spend money, and it goes in the Union operating fund, he said.

Dave Amaro, public safety applications programmer, said he handles conference parking.

They also sell conference permits for $1 per car, but these permits don't come with reserved-stall privileges, Amaro said.

They have to park like everyone else with a permit does, he said.

A recent example of this was last week, when from Wednesday through

Lot closed to build new spaces

From 5 p.m. Friday to 6 a.m. Monday, the lot, east of McCain Auditorium, will be closed for expansion. The lot will also be closed Oct. 7-10 and possibly Oct. 14-17 at the same times.

The expansion will involve removing the grass islands, creating approximately 53 additional parking stalls, said Dwain Archer, director of parking services.

"This is only a temporary repair because, sometime in the next few years, the lot will be totally refurbished," he said.

The expansion is part of the preparation for the construction of the Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art, which will break ground in mid-October. The additional parking stalls created in Lot A-2 will be used to compensate the loss of parking in Lot A-1 while the art museum is under construction, Archer said.

"We have 119 stalls in Lot A-1, which a large portion of construction equipment will use as a staging area," Archer said.

In addition, approximately 28 parking stalls, which now exist on the east side of Mid Campus Drive, will be moved to the west side, Archer said.

Parking Services is also planning to place stalls in front of Mid Campus Drive. These will be located in front of Nichols Hall, which will be redesigned to accommodate angled parking on the west side of the street extending from Lot A-30 to the south drive in the lower unit lot of the K-State Union, Archer said.

City under orders to cut curb ramps

Series update

As a service to our readers, we will run a summary of the previous parts of the ADA series.

PART II

- The needs of disabled people for employment opportunities are slowly but surely being met by Title I of the ADA.
- An estimated 49 million disabled Americans are protected under the ADA.

PART I

- The construction of buildings on campus is complying with the Americans with Disabilities Act.
- All construction must comply with the guidelines of the ADA, said Jerry Carter, director of facilities planning and University architect.

KIM HALL
Collegian

This is the third in a five-part series about the Americans with Disabilities Act.

The City of Manhattan felt a sense of urgency to comply with Title II of the Americans with Disabilities Act when a judge ruled in favor of a lawsuit against the city this summer.

Americans with Disabilities Act

Lewis "Tobie" Tyler won a lawsuit against Manhattan in July, bringing about changes in the city's guidelines.

In addition to the judgements Tyler won, the judge ruled the city must also make the necessary curb cuts to comply with ADA requirements.

Title II of the ADA mandates that all public entities, including state and local governments, school districts and public universities, protect the rights of disabled people.

And Manhattan is doing exactly that.

Edith Stunkel, city commissioner and research associate at the K-State Center for Aging, said that until the judge's ruling this summer, the local government had what it thought was an adequate plan for complying with the ADA.

"In 1991, when I first got on the commission, ADA was something being talked about, but we didn't really pay that much attention to it," she said. "It didn't have any sense of urgency to it."

Stunkel said the main issue Manhattan is paying attention to is the curb cuts.

"The ADA requires that anywhere a sidewalk meets a city street, it must be made accessible unless there is a nearby accessible route," Stunkel said.

She said it is tricky trying to meet the needs of all disabled persons.

"Originally when the ADA was passed, they had a requirement that the ramp itself had to have some kind of surface so the people who were blind would know that they'd reached a street," Stunkel said. "So the regulators came out with something called truncated domes."

She said, however, they interfered with the maneuvering of wheelchairs.

"Therefore, the truncated domes were thrown out," she said.

Stunkel said K-State has tried a different approach.

"They've got the red ramps with the grooves in them," she said. "That's something I think K-State

For five hours a day, Laura Walker, KSU Grounds worker, painstakingly sprays down the KSU Stadium seating aisles. The all-University Career Fair will bring more than 140 companies to campus, Karen Pence, assistant dean of the College of Human Ecology, said.

The Career Fair will take place from 8:30 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. Thursday in the K-State Union.

"All students are encouraged to attend regardless of curriculum or class," Pence said.

"Although more seniors will participate, it would also be beneficial for students interested in co-ops and internships," Pence said.

The idea for a career fair has been discussed since June 1993, Pence said.

"Since the number of companies recruiting on campus is declining, this is a good opportunity for students to make contacts," she said.

After the decision was made to involve the entire University, a steering committee was created, Pence said.

The committee is made up of student representatives, faculty and several staff members from Career and Employment Services, she said.

James Akin, director of Career and Employment Services, said students should consider this a splendid opportunity.

The career fair offers students in all majors the opportunity to meet with prospective employers, Akin said.

"No college has less than 25 companies coming to the Career Fair," he said.

"We had a lot more response than we expected," Gaylene Vierthaler, student representative from the College of Human Ecology, said.

"Last year, I only got to talk with three or four companies. This year, it should be at least twice as many," Vierthaler, senior in apparel and textile marketing, said.

The companies participating in the fair cover a large portion of Kansas and many other states, Pence said.

The companies' information booths will be located throughout the Union. There will be tables on the ground floor, first floor and second floor, she said.

"In previous years, we only had to use the ballroom," she said.

Pence said the sooner students make contacts with potential employers, the better.

"So often, people wait until graduation and then say, 'What's next?' This is a great opportunity for students to start making contacts with future employers now," Pence said.

WHAT TO DO AND NOT TO DO AT A CAREER FAIR

DO

- ✔ Dress professionally.
- ✔ Have answers about yourself ready.
- ✔ Know the names and titles of company representatives.
- ✔ Know something about the employer.
- ✔ Introduce yourself, shake hands and thank the recruiter.
- ✔ Ask questions, maintain eye contact and demonstrate confidence.

DON'T

- ✖ Dress casually.
- ✖ Visit a company that isn't hiring in your major.
- ✖ Stand in long lines.
- ✖ Just browse.
- ✖ Say "I can do everything you want."
- ✖ Put your foot in your mouth — recruiters compare notes; conversations are overheard in rest rooms.

NEWS BRIEFS

▶ VOLKSWAGEN-TYPE CAR SOUGHT IN HIT-AND-RUN ACCIDENT; WOMAN INJURED

A woman was taken to the hospital after an accident on Anderson Avenue near 14th Street, Riley County Police Officer Hank Nelson said.

Nelson said the woman's Chevy Citation was westbound in the left turn lane when an unknown car impacted the rear end of the Citation, causing extensive damage.

Police don't know how bad the female driver of the Citation was hurt, he said.

She was transported to the Saint Mary Hospital, Riley County police clerk Angie Splinker said.

Nelson said the police do not know the identity of the other driver because the vehicle left the scene.

"We have some information, and I am confident that we will be able to solve this," he said.

"We have a bland description of the other vehicle. It's a Volkswagen-type vehicle, tan or off-white," Nelson said.

▶ PRESIDENT APOLOGIZES; GUESTS WILL BE INFORMED OF PARKING PROTOCOL

Future guests of the K-State president's will be informed of legal parking places on the K-State campus in their invitations.

"In the future, if we have something at the house, we will add a post script to the invitation telling the guests where they can and can't park," President Jon Wefald said.

People who were illegally parked on Lovers Lane Monday night did so without knowing that any violation was being committed, he said.

The people were guests of a reception given by the Wefalds.

K-State Police made it to the scene well after most of the guests had left.

"I've already talked to the police department to reconfirm with them that if people are parked illegally, they will get a ticket," Wefald said.

Wefald attributed the late action by the police to inadvertence.

"We didn't notify the police that we were having anything," Wefald said. "They didn't know what was going on."

Wefald said that no matter what the policy, the University would never permit a policy with two standards.

"Whether it's the President of the United States or the governor, you have one law, and everyone should abide by it," Wefald said.

"We are apologetic that this happened, and it won't happen again."

▶ 4 ARRESTED AFTER RACIALLY MOTIVATED ATTACK; VICTIMS RELOCATE

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Four whites were arrested on charges of breaking down a black family's front door and beating a woman and her son with baseball bats while shouting racial slurs.

Joan Smith, 39, suffered broken bones, bruises and cuts. Her 15-year-old son, Walter, had head injuries. Both were treated at a hospital and released.

Three men and a woman were arrested on charges including assault, making terroristic threats, ethnic intimidation and burglary.

The Smiths have decided to move because of the attack, Otis Boone, who lives with them, said. Their windows were broken twice in the last year, he said.

THE GLASS CEILING: STILL IN PLACE

Even though women make up about half of the workforce, they still lag behind their male counterparts in terms of pay and earning high positions.

▶ REVIEW

Ballet thrills KSU audience

RUSSELL FORTMEYER
Collegian

The Principal Dancers of the New York City Ballet opened the McCain Auditorium season last night with an incredible repertoire of phenomenal dances.

Damian Woetzel, dancing with Kelly Cass, thrilled the audience into multiple applause with his exhaustive dancing in a pas de duex from the ballet "Le Corsaire," with music by Riccardo Drigo and choreography by Marius Petipa.

Woetzel's rambunctious display of talent would not stop. His dancing leaps in successive circles were some of the many highlights of the evening.

After the first intermission, the audience was treated to an extra piece, Peter Martin's "Ecstatic Orange," a modern dance number written for Jock Soto and Heather Watts.

Watts and Soto, who are dance partners in the company, have an incredible chemistry that made the calculated moves of "Orange" into a extraordinary, dramatic dance.

Their precise moves to Michael Torice's pulsing music were flawless.

Unbeknownst to the audience, Watts has been nursing a sore knee for the past few weeks. She decided to dance the number after Richard Martin, director of McCain Auditorium, told her he enjoyed her dancing very much.

This was the last chance Manhattanites will be able to see Watts, an incredible, world-class ballerina, perform since she plans to retire in January 1995.

On the traditional side of the ballet spectrum, "Swan Lake" enchanted the audience with its classical music from Tchaikovksky and brilliant choreography by Russian Lev Ivanov.

What an enjoyable evening it was to see both modern and classical dance in the same performance.

The final piece, "Barber Violin Concerto," with choreography by modernist Peter Martins, Ballet Master in Chief for the New York City Ballet, and music by Samuel Barber, strengthened the modern/traditional parallel with its opposing dances.

The piece concerned the meeting of two couples. The man, danced brilliantly by Soto, from one couple wooed the woman, danced vivaciously by Kyra Nichols, from the other couple.

The second segment concerned the second woman, danced hilariously by Stacey Calvert, trying to get the second man, danced by Nilas Martins, who was upset at the loss of his own woman, to go with her.

It's hard to believe that you could laugh out loud at a ballet, but Calvert's and Martins' piece was great!

Calvert hops, bounces and crawls all over Martins, trying to get him to notice her. She is uncontrollable, moving from his left to his right to his behind. It was situation comedy in ballet form — a real treat.

This segment fell creatively to modern dance with its spirited playfulness. It was completely ungraceful and totally amusing.

Ringer covered for the goof, but it was pretty shocking. Huys was off-balance on quite a few of his moves, somewhat destroying the chemistry and innocence of the pas de deux.

Having the New York City Ballet come to Manhattan is the cherry on the sundae of the Fall cultural season. Perhaps this performance will give little girls and boys inspiration to enter the exciting field of dance.

After all, most of the principals dancing in the McCain performance joined the Ballet in their mid-teens.

If only every event this year could be as expectedly wonderful as this ballet company's performance.

Dancers trade ballet slippers for boots

RUSSELL FORTMEYER
Collegian

Following the Principals of the New York City Ballet performance last night, the K-State Dance Department sponsored a reception for the dancers at TW Longhorns.

The event celebrated the ballet and dancer Heather Watts' 41st birthday.

"It's fun. It's so sweet," Watts said. "Our buses are all decorated, and I had a scavenger hunt in the theater (McCain Auditorium) today."

Watts has been dancing with the ballet for 24 years. Watts wasn't scheduled to perform because of a recent knee injury, but at Richard Martin's, director of McCain Auditorium, request, Watts performed with partner Jock Soto in Peter Martins' modern "Ecstatic Orange."

Kyra Nichols said she really has enjoyed Manhattan.

Nichols has been dancing with the ballet since she was 16. She came to the ballet to follow her mother's footsteps as a dancer with the New York City Ballet.

Nichols credits the New York City Ballet co-founder and master choreographer George Balanchine with helping her develop her style as a premier ballerina.

"He was the one who picked me out of the school (Corps de Ballet of the New York City Ballet)," Nichols said.

Balanchine makes you very aware of the music, she said.

"He makes you hear not just the obvious in the music all the time, but all the music, all of the time," Nichols said.

Nichols has also worked with New York City Ballet master choreographer Jerome Robbins.

Robbins has a completely different style, she said.

"He wants you to be a bit more natural on-stage," Nichols said.

Nichols performed in the "Barber Violin Concerto" opposite Jock Soto.

The reception was arranged by Luke Kahlich, professor of dance and theater, and Grace Hwang, part-time pre-law adviser and instructor in the management department.

Hwang, a past K-State dance student, is trying to find ways for dance students to interact with professionals and to raise money for the K-State dance program.

Richard Martin, also in attendance, was in happy spirits to see the McCain season sparkle with its first performance.

IN OUR OPINION

By the Collegian Editorial Board

Food bars cut down on soggy food

Union made a good move when it establish taco and sandwich bars.

Just when K-State Union food was becoming stagnant and boring, the great food god smiled upon the students and gave them the taco bar and the deli bar.

It is a smart move for the Union to try and figure out what the students want to eat.

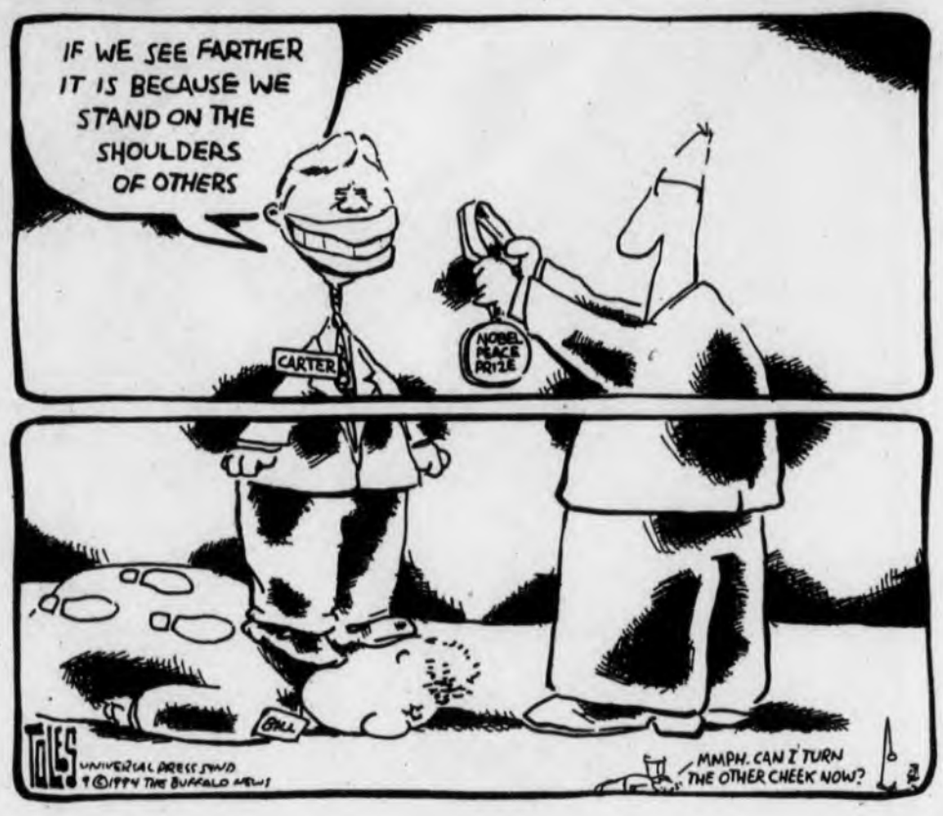
For a while, all the Union had to offer for food stuffs was a few pre-made packaged sandwiches, fruit and loaves of bread.

Consequently, food sales suffered, and students refused to eat meals at the Union.

But now that students are gaining a wider variety, there are actually people lining up to fill their plates once again.

We are able to choose the types and amount of meat, veggies and dressings.

We are free from soggy bread and over-dressed sandwiches.



We now have fresh, crunchy, crumbly tacos to feast upon.

It has been a long time in coming, but the Union has finally shifted from the dull and boring ways of old to a fresher, better-tasting way of life. Way to go.

Take it as a sign of the times.

With the upcoming Union expansion, places like the State Room and Union Station will have to maintain a more trendy mix of foods — especially if they want to be able to compete with fast-food vendors like McDonalds or Taco Bell.

TOLES

Best are hired at K-State

When I decided to pursue my masters and eventually teach at a college level, I was told by many, many people I would have no problems getting into graduate school.

People didn't say it would be because I was smart or because I was talented. They didn't say "Oh Erin, you have the grades and the drive and the ambition to get into any school you want to go to."

No, what many essentially told me was, "You're black, and you're female. You're a shoe-in for any graduate school for sure."

I have never in my life desired to receive anything simply because I am black or because I am female. I have never received preferential treatment as a student because of that, and I hope those will not be the deciding factors in being accepted into a graduate program, or hired as a professor later on.

It is a popular misconception, however, especially here, that minority faculty members at a university where there are traditionally low numbers of minorities in the student body, receive their positions as mere tokens. People think they are hired as a nod in the direction of multiculturalism.

Why else would the University hire minority faculty members if it wasn't to make their numbers look good or perhaps to teach a specialized class students presume needed to be taught by an "expert," like a black person instructing African American music or a woman teaching a sewing class?

It is not considered that female and minority professors hired here may be the best in their respective fields, or even perhaps those hired are the best in the applicant pool. It is instead assumed they got their jobs because of the color of their skin or by the virtue of their sex.

Not only is that misconception insulting to both people of color and women, it is also derogatory toward the University and its reputation.

It assumes minority faculty members are not qualified to teach. Or are, in fact, not as qualified to teach as a Caucasion would be.

It is also assumed female professors have not worked just as long and as hard as any of their male counterparts for their advanced degrees but have instead been allowed to "slide" into jobs technically "belonging" to the men.

I won't even dignify those arguments with a response, considering the response I would give them involves the use of fecal matter.

This University has an incredible reputation for excellence. We have the highest number of Truman, Rhodes and Marshall scholars of any public university. We have three Kansas State alumni running for congressional office and both a former student body president and her running mate working on those campaigns.

We also have athletic teams, academic teams and social organizations that have been nationally recognized.

I hardly think any university official with any kind of brain would place this school's superb reputation as an academic force to be reckoned with, in the hands of those they do not feel were qualified to uphold it, regardless of their race or their gender, and regardless of what pressures they might feel to conform in the fight toward a more racially diverse and gender-acceptable society.

I have only one bit of advice to whomever thinks, for one moment, they would or that they should give people jobs, not because of their abilities but because of their racial identity and gender.

Find a deserted place out on the Konza Prairie, then lie down and cover yourself with a heavy layer of dirt. Then, wait a million years and maybe, if you're lucky, the K-State Archeology class will dig you up with the other fossils that are lying out there.

Let's hope the professor, a woman from the Pacific Islands, dates you from the correct era.

What to do with $17,000

You may remember that a processing error led to your being overcharged at fee payment. While Student Senate voted last year to decrease the Student Activity Fee from $8 to $7.50, the decrease never went through. As a result, Senate will have in the neighborhood of $17,000 to deal with in the coming year.

That is what bureaucracy is all about.

Senate was given two choices: First, it could place the money in an account, with the intention of spending it on one or more projects that benefit the University as a whole, or; second, it could save the money and use it as a buffer to lower fees in the coming year, effectively returning it to the students it was wrongly collected from.

Feeling that simply holding the money back would provide no return for graduating seniors and others who will soon be leaving us, Senate decided to try to spend the money on a beneficial project.

That's where you come in.

Right now, the Allocations Committee is developing a set of guidelines to regulate the spending of this fund, dubbed the Student Life Enrichment Account. When they are done, and those guidelines have been approved by Senate, the Student Affairs and Social Services Committee will seek out and recommend projects to the Senate.

This can't be done without your help. There are some rumblings right now, but many of them can't be taken seriously. Putting a giant "U" on the hill next to the "KS" might provide a more complete picture of the University, but as far as a beneficial project goes, it simply doesn't cut it.

More plausible ideas include the construction of more study spaces on campus, an increase in the number of bike racks, or additional campus lighting and security measures. These, however, are traditionally administrative responsibilities, and there is a legitimate concern about beginning to pay for things with student money that are not traditionally student responsibilities.

A flat payment of $282.53 per senator might be attractive to some, but would certainly raise a few eyebrows. So would the purchase of one Pizza Shuttle two-fer every day until March.But that is the kind of money we are dealing with.

I would venture to guess that there are a lot of people who can think of a lot of ways to effectively spend $17,000. And while erecting a gondola system from Bramlage to the Union to Aggieville sounds like fun and would likely get us some cool news coverage, the final cost would probably be prohibitive.

If you have an idea, share it with your friendly student senator. Each and every member of Senate is required to wear a name tag identifying himself as such on Thursdays; seek those people out and tell them what's on your mind.

You can call the Office of Student Activities and Services, home of the Student Governing Association, at 532-6541, and register your opinion. Ask that the message be forwarded either to a senator from your college or to the student affairs and social services committee.

The possibilities are endless. With more than 20,000 students on campus, we should be able to come up with some fine project ideas.

But 60 people sitting in the Big 8 Room on Thursday night aren't going to do it alone. Neither is the committee.

If you want to put in your two cents, if you want this money spent in the most responsive and responsible manner, you will have to speak up.

Because that is what democracy is all about.

Dan Lewerenz is a senior in philosophy.

▶ AFFIRMATIVE ACTION

Arguments make different points

Dear Editor,

This letter is in response to a recent battle of words between two letter writers, Mike Braman (Mon., Sept. 26) and Olga I. Davis (Tue., Sept. 27). I feel that both of these letters are mostly emotional spoutings.

First of all, I must say that I do not officially know what the University's policy on hiring currently is. However, I do believe that hiring on the basis of sex, race or religion is wrong. If the University or any other institution hires according to one of those factors, then we, the people, are missing out. We don't get to learn from the most-qualified teacher, only one who happens to be of a certain race.

But is Big Brother "kissing minority ass"? No, I don't think so. The government is trying to force employers or university administrators to give minorities a chance that they otherwise might not have without legislation. There are still universities and businesses out there who won't hire someone because of their race. These new laws, supporting hiring based on race, are a sincere and innocent attempt to give minorities an extra edge in a world, which still thinks some of its people are inferior. Unfortunately, two wrongs don't make a right.

I agree with Braman's statement, "Learning math, science or engineering does not depend on the color or the sex of the teacher." However, I disagree with his contradictory opinion of a professor's race having something to do with representation of the student body and his statement about the president of the University making an ass of himself. I seriously doubt he has complete control over any policy as important as this. Davis' letter only partially addressed the issue of racial discrimination in hiring practices. Braman did not write about his and white males' fear of relinquishing power. He wrote about racial discrimination. And because I have been labeled a "young white male" and knowing dozens of other people labeled "young white males" across the Midwest, I can tell you that "young white males" are NOT "... extremely concerned with the proliferation of people of color in faculty and administrative positions."

As for the history of "black" people in America, who can doubt that it has been an uphill battle? Who could refute the struggles fought by King, Douglas or others? Yet through all the muck of racism many people who are called "minorities" still had prosperous families and contributed to the well-being of this melting -pot nation. In America, all people are to be treated equally.

Both of these irate letter writers should read the column written by John Meirowsky in the Sep. 26 Collegian right next to Braman's angry letter. We all should. The solution to this problem is not easy and cannot be legislated. Think about each other during Racial/Ethnic Harmony Week (Oct. 2-8) on our campus. Are we discriminating against our fellow humans? The problem with people is that we call others "young black males" and "young white females." If a person labels another human being something, that person expects that human to think and act like their label. Labels are a way of grouping large groups of independently thinking people into one stereotypical mass. We sometimes judge people by what label we give them — this is where the fault in our logic lies. Let's think stereotypes through and use our brains.

Comments were racist

Dear Editor,

I'm writing in response to a letter in the Sept. 26 Collegian by Mike Braman. In this letter, Braman cried over the theory K-State is hiring minorities over white males strictly because they are minorities. He called it "utterly racist and supportive of discrimination."

I must say I found Braman's comments racist themselves and supporting discrimination. He asks, "Why must people today pay for the sins of a century ago?" I hope Braman really does not think racism and discrimination came to a halt the day slavery ended. I don't know what kind of sheltered life he's led, not to see that discrimination is still a living, breathing thing in the United States. His letter is proof of that.

I don't believe there's a conspiracy out there to keep out the white male. For God's sake, all you need to do is turn on the television and look around to see the white male is still dominating nearly all the jobs in society, especially the most powerful ones. This is exactly why it is important to ensure minorities aren't kept out of the white-dominated system. I also believe in the best person for the job, and the person is very often a minority. I certainly don't believe any of the minority teachers at K-State are just "a statistic," as Braman graciously put it. They are very talented, intelligent people that have a lot to offer the campus of K-State.

Braman's last comments that "you can have excellence without diversity" is laughable. You can only have ignorance without diversity, Braman. You need only to step out of your tight, little shell to see the ever increasing diversity in this world. If you really think that when you graduate from K-State (where minorities are still sadly underrepresented) and step out into the "real world" you won't have to deal with different cultures and people, you're going to be in for a real shock.

Haymaker to set precedent

SACHA HANES
Collegian

Residents of Haymaker Hall voiced their frustrations Tuesday night on the recent decision to lock the front doors 24 hours a day.

There was an open discussion with the Haymaker Hall Governing Board president, the assistant director of Housing and Dining Services, the hall director and other staff members available to answer questions.

"It is a matter of now or later. The end goal is total, full-access control," Shah Hasan, assistant director of Housing and Dining, said.

He said eventually all the doors to the residence halls would be locked 24 hours a day.

"Haymaker was trying to set a precedent and get the other halls to follow," Tyler Simpson, senior in nutrition and exercise science, said.

The main issues involved the fact that Haymaker was the only hall in the Derby Complex that voted to implement the 24-hour locked-door policy.

Even though the front doors will be locked, residents argued it served no purpose if people were able to enter other halls, go to Derby and then enter Haymaker through Derby.

"What good is protection if it allows people to come in behind others or through other doors?" said Curtis Fowler, senior in electrical engineering.

The overall agreement was that safety was important, but it needs to be balanced with convenience.

Residents said they felt it would be more effective if all the halls implemented the policy at the same time, instead of letting each hall vote and implement it at its leisure.

A few members felt the locked-door policy was not necessary and only served as an inconvenience.

"Locked doors are not going to keep people out if they really want to get in. It only inconveniences those who live there," said Jason Rziha, junior in electrical engineering.

Former professor creates art with formulas and vision

LISA ELLIOTT

A former K-State physics faculty member set up a display of his computer-generated art work at the Manhattan Public Library Sunday.

Imam Minyawi quit his job as a research associate at K-State in January to pursue his interests in art.

Two of the 20 prints were not generated on the computer. One is cut and paste, and the other he colored by hand.

"I am not good at drawing, but I have lots of vision," Minyawi said.

Minyawi said he uses his art to show people how beautiful mathematics can be. He said he plans to show the art to high school and college students to demonstrate what can be done with computers and mathematics.

All of the computer prints were generated with mathematical formulas, Minyawi said. He creates the art by generating data and graphing it.

Minyawi said he hopes to put some of his work onto CD-ROM for use by companies. Right now, his main concern iS finding a job.

Gerry Walton, head reference librarian at the Manhattan Public Library, said Minyawi asked the library if he could display some of his prints.

Minyawi's display went up on Sept. 25 and will end Oct. 13.

"He hung the art prints," she said. "We just gave him the space to do it."

Wildcats return home from Lawrence, Iowa

Men disappointed with performance.

BILL MCNALLY
Collegian

The K-State men's golf team returned from the Kansas Invitational in Lawrence with a disappointing outing. The Wildcats finished ninth out of 14 schools.

Big Eight Conference schools represented themselves in good fashion. Kansas took the tournament with a score of 887 (301-292-294), Missouri placed third with a score of 905 (305-299-301), Nebraska came in fourth, shooting 910 (297-305-308), and Iowa State finished fifth (300-311-300) 911.

K-State brought up the tail end of the Big Eight schools in ninth place with a score of 923 (310-308-305), 35 strokes away from the first-place team.

The team progressed throughout the tournament but came up short at the end, coach Mark Elliott said.

"This was a disappointing tournament overall for our team," Elliot said. "If we would have shot a 908, it would have been a good tournament, but if you shoot 80s like we did, you're in trouble."

The tournament leader was Travis Korver, from Iowa State, with a score of 216 (69-74-73).

The Cats were led by junior Jason Losch with a score of 224 (75-75-74) and finished in a tie for 12th place.

Losch was followed by junior Troy Halterman, who tied for 14th with a 225 (74-74-77) score.

Coach Elliott said he is pleased with the way Losch and Halterman are performing so far this season.

"Neither one of them have played a really bad round," Elliot said. "They both are making the most out of the talent they have by working hard."

Scott Hovis shot 238 (81-78-79), B.J. Walter carded a 239 (81-83-75), and Toller Miller shot 241 (80-81-80).

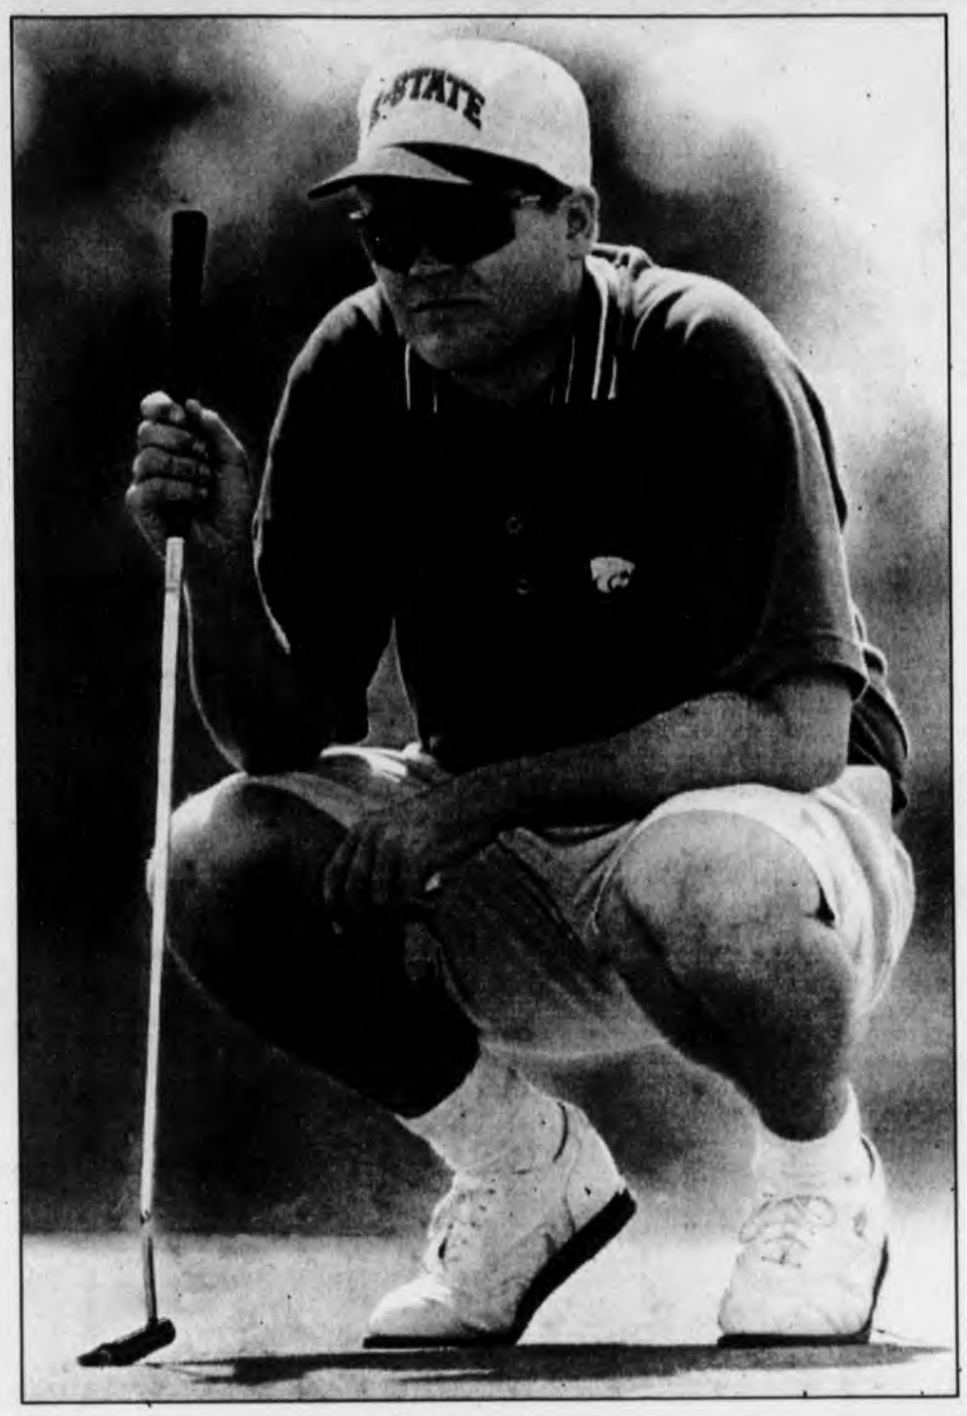
Walter and Miller were participating in their first collegiate meet.

The team members do not have time to rest as they travel to Bloomington, Ill., this weekend for the D.A. Weibring Invitational.

■ The K-State women's golf team shot a second-round 324, a 24-stroke improvement over first-round play, but it still finished in sixth place in the final standings at the Cyclone Golf Classic last weekend in Ames, Iowa.

K-State's two-day total was 672, 41 strokes off the pace of tournament-champion Minnesota. The Golden Gophers fired a 631 (319-312) while Iowa State finished as the runner-up with 635 (323-312). Northern Illinois finished in third place with a score of 662 (328-334).

K-State was led individually by Debbie Crystal, who fired scores of 165 (87-78) in finishing in a 17th-place tie.



Richelle Bond was 20th with a score of 168 (87-81). Mitzi Taylor was K-State's third-best finisher, shooting a 171 (88-83) total score while finishing in a 24th-place tie.

"I thought Debbie really responded well, especially in the second round" K-State coach Tim Jennings said. "She came back and competed well.

"I was also pleased with the way Mitzi competed in the second round. She really began playing well on the back side," he said.

The individual champion was Minnesota's Angie Ause, who shot 155 (80-75). Iowa State's Holly Duncan was second, one stroke off the pace at 156 (78-78).

The women's team will compete Oct. 3-4 in the Husker Classic at Pioneers Golf Course in Lincoln, Neb.

Big game motivates players

JULIE KUHLMAN
Collegian

Eight days until the showdown.

The K-State-Kansas game is a game Coach Bill Snyder said he hopes like the devil they can win at the weekly press conference at the Vanier Football Complex Tuesday.

"This is a game that will heavily motivate players. They see this and say, 'wow what a big game,'" Snyder said.

The intrastate rivalry is one Snyder said is a healthy and excellent one.

"The fans on both sides are into the ballgame," he said.

K-State quarterback Chad May said it's one of the biggest rivalries in the nation.

"UCLA and USC is probably bigger, but ours is right up there," May said.

"I didn't grow up here, so I think it's more for the Kansas people," he said. "But, it's still a big game to me."

A game that could make or break a season?

Snyder said in the past the team was fragile and for them to put all of their marbles in one basket would have been detrimental back then.

"You grow into ball games like this," Snyder said. "We're not as fragile as we were."

Overall, Snyder said he was pleased with his team's performance against Minnesota.

"I think we're playing better," he said. "This was the first team that had a legitimate throw-the-ball mentality, and we needed that."

However, Snyder said Kansas will be the proper test.

"No one on schedule to this point has the strength, the power and the running game as they do," he said.

Does the first time on the road for the Cats against a team of KU's caliber worry Snyder?

"I know it's been an awful long time since K-State won at Lawrence," he said.

Because the game is on a Thursday night, the team will practice right through the off week without any breaks.

"I want our players to understand that it isn't a Saturday game," he said. "We don't have a full two weeks."

Snyder said they are also preparing their defense for the return of Asheiki Preston.

"We have to prepare as if Asheiki will be back," Snyder said.

KU football coach Glen Mason said he wouldn't be surprised if Preston plays due to the significance of the game.

"He's a tough individual," Mason said during the Big Eight Teleconference Monday. "Being a fifth-year senior, he'd very much like to play in this game."

Mason said he is still not optimistic.

"I would still list Asheiki as questionable, at best, based on the information I've been given," he said.

Injuries have also taken a toll on K-State defensive back Clyde Johnson, who injured his ankle against Minnesota.

"We expect him to be back, but we just don't know how soon," Snyder said.

Clot behind knee jeopardizing Nebraska quarterback's season

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LINCOLN, Neb. — With Nebraska's Tommie Frazier still hospitalized, Coach Tom Osborne was hopeful Tuesday that the second-ranked Cornhuskers would not lose their quarterback for the remainder of the season.

Frazier was undergoing treatment to dissolve a blood clot behind his right knee. The junior quarterback probably would remain in Bryan Hospital at least a few more days, Osborne said.

"Tommie Frazier is one of those people I'm positive will not play this week," Osborne said. "I don't think it's a done deal that he'll miss the rest of the season necessarily."

It still was not certain how Frazier developed the clot, Osborne said. Such injuries generally result from a blow that later develops into a clot.

But Frazier couldn't recall taking a hit to the calf area. The clot was discovered Sunday.

Frazier complained of some soreness in the calf the morning of the UCLA game, Sept. 17. He played most of that 49-21 victory, but was on the field for just nine plays in Saturday's game against Pacific.

"I don't think it was something that occurred in the UCLA game," Osborne said. "We nursed it along last week in practice."

Frazier missed practice last Monday, then ran full speed on Wednesday only to have the soreness return the next day. Osborne gave Frazier the option of playing against Pacific, and the junior wanted to go in for at least the early series.

"He did not get hit on the leg," Osborne said. "As far as I can tell, he never was hit anywhere hard on Saturday."

But a trip to the hospital for tests Sunday resulted in discovery of the clot. Medication was started, and by Tuesday morning, the clot had been reduced by 40 to 50 percent, Osborne said.

"I'm not even speculating at this point what action we'll be taking," Osborne said.

Getting Frazier healthy and deciding when he could return to the field was the key, Osborne said.

Pi Kappa Alpha defends early lead, scores first soccer victory of season

DEBBIE PILANT
Collegian

The Pi Kappa Alpha team almost let a win slip away.

The Pikes defeated the International team by a score of 3-2 in intramural soccer action Tuesday, despite a strong second-half effort by the Internationals.

Players for both teams came out with confidence.

Chris Dierks, Pike goaltender, said he thought the game would be a high-scoring one.

"Our forwards are better, but we put really good pressure on defense," Dierks said.

"I'm pretty confident we'll win," Nick Grace, midfielder for the Pikes said.

The confidence showed on the field as Grace was in on all three Pike goals. He had two assists and scored a goal of his own in the winning effort.

The Pikes came out strong in the first half, keeping the Internationals away from the Dierks. Darren Eskridge, forward for the Pikes, started the scoring about 10 minutes into the contest with a pass from Grace.

Then, Grace stepped forward and booted one in with an assist from midfielder Matt Wakefield.

Wakefield scored what became the winning goal near the end of the first half off a pass from Grace.

However, the defense protected the lead through the first half because of strong performances by midfielders Jason Wilson and Jimmy Stothard.

Stothard was all over the field blocking shots and making steals. Eskridge said Stothard is always strong.

"He's all over every play," he said.

The Internationals said they respected that strength.

"They had a very good defense, and I couldn't get through them," said Jouni Koiraner, forward for the International team.

Koiraner was the key to the International's strong comeback attempt. He scored both goals for the Internationals, and almost had the tying goal in the closing minutes of the game.

"It was a good shot, but it just went too high," he said.

He said he thought the Internationals really had a chance to come back after his two goals, but the Pike defense wouldn't let them through.

Darren Hatton, midfielder for the Internationals, said his team was used to slow starts.

"We were unorganized in the first half," he said.

The Pikes said ball control was key to the win.

"We keep open space, make close passes, and hold the ball close while we dribble," Dierks said.

Each team had lost a game to forfeit going into the contest, so a win was essential to both teams.

Dierks said the Pikes received a forfeit for having two club players in a game.

However, the International forfeit was unique.

"We're all used to having 11 players, not nine. So we substituted a female," he said. "We saw the female official and thought it was all right. The officials didn't notice until halftime."

Once the officials noticed, the game was over.

"We went on and played for fun and won 2-0," Hatton said.

He said the team tried to appeal the forfeit, to no avail.

Wichita State trying to extend win streak

CRESTON KUENZI
Collegian

The K-State women's volleyball team looks to break yet another streak tonight.

The Shockers and the Wildcats square off at 7:30 p.m. today in Ahearn Field House.

Wichita State comes to town having won the last six matches against the Cats.

During the four-year period, the Cats have managed to take only two games from the Shockers.

Coach Jim Moore said he isn't concerned with the streak.

"I haven't worried about the past since I've been here, so I don't know why I would now," Moore said.

Last year, the Shockers went 12-16, including two wins over the Cats, once in three games and once in four.

Moore said the Shockers will be difficult to beat, once again, because of their wide range of talents.

"They're a pretty solid blocking team, in fact they're pretty solid in all areas," Moore said.

The Shockers have only two starters and four letter winners returning from last year's squad.

After a disappointing loss to Oral Roberts during the weekend in the Texas-Arlington tournament, Moore said it's important that his team play better as it prepares for the Big Eight Conference.

"It's not critical that we win, necessarily, but I think it's critical that we play well and play hard," he said.

Moore said he is looking forward to the start of the Big Eight Conference this weekend against Colorado.

K-State will travel to Boulder, Colo., to face the Buffaloes Saturday. The Cats will then stay in Boulder for Sunday's match against the North Carolina Tar Heels.

"I'm not looking past Wichita State by any stretch of the imagination," Moore said. "I'm anxious to get started, though.

"People keep saying, 'wait until the Big Eight play starts and then we'll see how good you are,'" he said.

Undergraduate and graduate students who meet any of the following guidelines:

- 25 years of age or older
- Married students of any age
- Students who are parents
- Students who have been out of school for several years

KSU Child Development Center Rates

- The rate to send a 1 year-old is $400 a month. On a childship, that is lowered to $280 a month.
- For a preschooler, (2 1/2 to 5 years of age, potty trained) the monthly rate drops to $300 and $210 on a childship.
- At the other end of the spectrum, a 12 year-old child costs only $150 a month for afterschool care. The childship rate is only $105.

story by Russel Fortmeyer • art by Amy Martin

Going back to college after many years of "normal life" can be somewhat traumatic. Especially when you're labeled a non-traditional student.

Your clothes don't fit the "in" style look subscribed to by the rest of the campus.

Your hair is thinning.

You can't ride that bike quite as far as the rest of the students. And, yes, there's that inevitable belly that, sooner or later, finds its way into your heart (well, actually, just below your heart, about 3 inches).

Hindsight does have its rewards.

Now, being a non-traditional student, you don't party every weekend. You ask questions in class. You study regularly. You have learned many lessons over the years, since that youthful age of 18.

However, there are many services on campus specifically geared towards non-traditional students.

Nancy Bolsen, director of the Adult Student Services Office, offers many ways to help non-traditional students navigate the campus.

"We do a lot of referring to other campus offices," Bolsen said.

If a non-traditional student wanted to find some information, Adult Student Services can lead them in the right direction, Bolsen said.

"The two things we do are the emergency locator and the commuter networking service," Bolsen said.

The emergency locator is a service offered to student parents who might need to be notified if their child has fallen ill or for other emergencies.

The commuter networking service offers a way for long-distance, non-traditional students to find a ride to campus, or at least a car-pool.

Bolsen also said Adult Student Services sponsors a brown-bag lunch from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. every Tuesday and Wednesday in Union Stateroom 1 as an extra social service for non-traditional students.

During fall and spring, Adult Student Services offers scholarships, usually applying to non-traditional students, Bolsen said.

"We've put together a scholarship notebook for undergraduates and graduates," Bolsen said.

The notebook, which can be checked out at the Adult Student Services office for 24 hours, is filled with scholarship information, essay guidelines, and general application information.

Started in 1979 with the name FENIX, the Adult Student Services Office is located in Holton 201.

The biggest issue facing most non-traditional students is where to leave their children during the day or after school.

Adult Student Services offers a listing of all daycare/preschool services offered in Manhattan, with three such services located on campus.

Lorna Ford, director of KSU Child Development Center, offers daycare for children ages 12 weeks to 12 years at building L in Jardine Terrace Apartments.

"We provide child care for K-State students, faculty and staff," Ford said.

The center offers certified teachers, field trips, a pickup service from schools, and developmentally designed programs.

"All of our classes have a planned curriculum," Ford said.

KSU Child Development also tries to create a multicultural atmosphere in the classrooms.

"We have children here from all different countries," Ford said.

"The monthly rates differ depending upon the child's age," Ford said.

The Student Governing Association Educational Opportunity Fund allocates $70,000 a year to provide childships (childcare scholarships) to students in financial need.

Social Rehabilitation Services will also pay part of the monthly fee for childcare if the parents qualify.

Some parents have both the childship and the SRS funding, Ford said.

There are parents who pay only $10 a month or even nothing, she said.

* * *

The Non-Traditional Students Association, now defunct, is living on through the computer listserv designed by Leonard Leeling, office assistant at Division of Continuing Education and junior in business education.

"I'm trying to get the organization started again," Leeling said.

The Association was started with the intent of creating a voice for non-traditional students on the K-State campus.

"If you don't have a voice, you're not heard," Leeling said.

"Apparently, they don't want representation," he said.

Leeling currently represents non-traditional students on the Student Life Council, a council sponsored through the Dean of Student Life office which brings together student leaders on campus.

"I started the listserv so they can exchange ideas," he said.

"It would be kind of nice to know what the (non-traditional) students want since I'm on that council," Leeling said.

The only requirements are an e-mail address and a computer. E-mail accounts can be obtained at no charge through Computing Services in Nichols 126. Computer terminals are located throughout campus.

"Sometimes, our non-traditional students' schedules are so different, we rarely see each other," he said.

The listserv, having just gotten off the ground, is currently being used by about 10 students.

Mixing parenthood with school

RUSSELL FORTMEYER
Collegian

Your alarm clock buzzes. Another day.

You jump out of bed, take a shower, dress, eat breakfast and prepare for your classes.

Then you go wake your son up.

Wait a minute. Son?

You're not a regular college student, you're a non-traditional student.

And if you're a non-traditional student, your life probably is quite similar to Chris Dunn's.

Dunn is a single father, raising his son, Mike, who is 5 years old and attends kindergarten.

Dunn's Jardine Terrace Apartment isn't exactly spacious, but it accommodates two gentlemen very well.

You walk in and, if you can't keep your eyes off of Dunn's surreal PC screensaver, your first eye-catcher is a large fish tank with a bony catfish hovering along the rocky floor.

Mike, usually riding his bike in front of the apartment (Mike just took off his training wheels this week), runs in and out of the apartment, sometimes with friends, getting colors or saying 'hi'.

Having a son makes things more difficult, Dunn said.

"I wouldn't change it for the world," he said.

"I'd prefer to be married, but this is better than being married to who I was married to," he said.

Having Mike around Dunn's apartment definitely changes Dunn's schedule.

"You've got to balance his needs against the school. Sometimes, they both don't get the attention they deserve," Dunn said.

"He knows that when I say, 'Mike, I really have to study tonight,' I don't have time to sit around and color and read the Barney book.

"He understands that," Dunn said.

"He's also a good limiter, too."

"When I get too wrapped up in the studying, I've seen him dump a big bucket of Legos on the floor and say, 'OK, you have to quit,'" Dunn said.

"You don't have enough time. I'd like to give him 24 hours a day and study 24 hours a day."

"There's no way to do it."

Besides managing a household, Dunn is a graduate and research teaching assistant for the geography department. It takes about 20 hours a week.

Dunn, who plans on graduating this December, is specializing in the environmental aspects of geography.

"A lot of folks don't realize that geography isn't just maps and memorizing state capitals.

"I'm more involved in the computer mapping and hazardous-waste management," he said.

Dunn booted up the latest map he has been working on. It was an extremely detailed depiction of a river valley in western Kansas.

"There's a lot of science in it," he said.

This isn't the first time Dunn has attended K-State. In 1981, Dunn began as an undergraduate in nuclear engineering.

After four years of indecisiveness, he joined the army in 1985 and served until 1991. During his term, he served in Operation Desert Storm.

In spring 1992, Dunn entered the geography program.

At 31 years of age, K-State is a very different experience for Dunn.

"To some degree, it's a lot easier," he said. "I find I'm more organized. I get a lot more out of it," he said.

The first time Dunn attended K-State, he fell into the usual undergraduate rut: to go to the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex or to go to class.

"The rec center would win nine times out of 10," he said.

K-State has really been a pleasant experience, Dunn said.

"One of the biggest problems I've noticed is I had zero computer skills when I came back," he said.

When he first attended K-State, Dunn said small word processors were just coming out. Now, Dunn has a PC and Windows, and Mike has his own icon collection of educational games.

It's somewhat unbelievable to see a kindergartner find his way around Windows easier than most college students, Dunn said.

As for free time, Dunn said, "There is a social life, but it's much more sedate."

Dunn said by the time he

Road workers to be honored

HOLLY CHEGWIDDEN

Gov. Joan Finney ceremoniously broke ground on the Kansas Department of Transportation Employee Memorial for a crowd of about 50 people at 10 a.m. Tuesday.

The memorial is located at the Paxico Safety Rest area on Interstate 70 in Wabaunsee County.

"The future memorial is designed as a permanent tribute to all the men and women who have given their lives building and maintaining Kansas' transportation systems," Secretary of Transportation Michael Johnston said, opening the ceremony.

Johnston said it is easy to take for granted the work these people do.

People don't think about the many hazards they encounter every day of their lives to improve the transportation systems all Kansans enjoy and take advantage of, he said.

In 1993, more than 1,700 work-zone crashes were in Kansas, Johnston said.

Of those, 847 were reported injured, and 14 people were killed, including two KDOT employees, he said.

Gov. Finney said the memorial will not only serve to remember those who make the ultimate sacrifice in service to this great state but will help educate the public about the human cost of building and maintaining Kansas' transportation system.

The idea for the memorial came at the request of Kirk Robb, KDOT Equipment Operator at Blaine, following the death of co-worker Allen Maas in a work-zone accident on I-70 in May 1993, Maas' wife said.

"Kirk was his partner and best friend," Maas said., "This rest stop was Allen's favorite place."

The memorials were designed by Joe Larson, a K-State graduate student in architectural landscaping.

Two memorial sites will be developed at the rest area to serve both eastbound and westbound travelers, Johnston said.

Each memorial will consist of five monolithic limestone panels. Three panels will include a mural design depicting highway workers in a work zone against a Kansas prairie backdrop.

One panel will have the inscription: "In memory of the dedicated employees who lost their lives serving the Kansas Department of Transportation and the State of Kansas."

The fifth panel will remain blank for potential additions at a later date.

The memorial is scheduled to be let for construction bids next spring and is expected to be completed later that year, Johnston said.

He said the memorial will be financed by highway construction funds.

ROTC offering military scholarships

STEFFANY CARREL
Collegian

K-State's ROTC is looking for a few good scholarship recipients.

Right now, ROTC is offering 109 new scholarships to college juniors who have completed some sort of prior military service.

"We just have a fallout of scholarships," Capt. Kenneth Wedge, assistant professor for military science, said. "This is an excellent opportunity to get some money for school."

Wedge said the scholarships are essentially on a first-come, first-served basis.

"Timing is everything," he said.

The Category II scholarships have recently been given to the ROTC departments in the 4th Region.

"Really, the easiest way to describe the 4th Region is just to say all the schools west of the Mississippi," Wedge said.

The scholarships provide $2,000 per year for the last two years of a student's college career. This breaks down to $775 per semester in tuition and $225 per semester in books, Wedge said.

"Scholarship recipients also get to start drawing a $100-per-month allowance at the beginning of this semester," he said.

The reason for the extra scholarships, Wedge said, is two-fold.

"First of all, I'm guessing that like all other governmental agencies, ROTC just asked for its money and got more than was expected."

Another reason for the extra scholarships was the original lack of qualified applicants, Wedge said.

Of the 200 scholarships ROTC received, only 91 applicants met the qualifications necessary to be awarded a scholarship, he said.

"Unfortunately, it's difficult to get qualified people to apply."

Jason Lange, sophomore in general engineering, said his ROTC scholarship is a big help.

"For me, my scholarship isn't my make-or-break school money, but it definitely makes it easier for me."

Lange said his ROTC scholarship is different than the Category II scholarships because it covers all four years of his college career and doesn't require him to have completed any prior military service.

Being involved with ROTC is kind of like a fraternity, Lange said, although some parts of it, like the Ranger's Club, are more close-knit than others.

"For a lot of people, ROTC is just a class, but like any other class, it's really about what you put into it.

"The minimum is the two hours per week in class and the 1-1/2 hours per week in lab, but I know people who live there in the Military Science building. There is no maximum."

While there is no specific deadline to apply for a scholarship, Wedge said applications should be completed within the next couple of weeks.

ROTC REQUIREMENTS

Requirements for receiving a Cat. II ROTC Scholarship:

- ★ Be enrolled as a full-time student
- ★ Be of junior status with two years remaining in college
- ★ Be enrolled or able to enroll in ROTC
- ★ Have a 2.5 GPA to be competitive
- ★ Have completed 60 hours
- ★ Have completed prior military service: Basic Training and Advanced Individual Training

Roommate sick of friend's cheating girlfriend

Dear Cassandra,

My roommate is in love with this girl that he's been dating for several years. I don't have any problems with her personally; however, it is a known fact that she cheats on him all the time. Everybody thinks she's a slut and that he's the stupidest person to walk the face of the earth for not knowing what's going on. I've tried to talk to him and have told him of several instances where she's cheated on him, but he refuses to believe it. What am I supposed to do? Sit back and watch him catch a disease from this hussy?

Just Sign Me
Fed Up in the Dorms

Dear J.S.M.F.U.D.

It sounds like your roommate is a complete idiot or is with his girlfriend for the same reason she is with him. Maybe they are in a mutual "let's use each other for sex" relationship.

But maybe he just doesn't get it.

It's hard when one of your close friends is getting raked over the coals, but if you've told him what you know, and he still doesn't change his ways, you need to let it go.

People have to learn things on their own.

He'll have to make his own mistakes.

▶ REVIEW

'Harvey' reveals human nature

RUSSELL FORTMEYER
Collegian

"The Times of Harvey Milk" is a terrifyingly real look at modern politics involving gays and the mainstream.

Milk, the first openly homosexual, elected official in American history, moved into the political arena, gaining prominence and a voice but alienating people along the way.

After beginning a successful career on Wall Street, Milk moved to San Francisco to join the burgeoning homosexual community in the early 1970s.

He opened a camera shop on Castro Street (then the homosexual quarter of San Francisco) and after establishing himself, he decided to run for the San Francisco Board of Supervisors.

Milk gained much support from the homosexual community, but because the elections were city-wide, he failed to win two consecutive elections.

After Mayor George Moscone changed the election laws so as to divide the city into separate voting districts, Milk ran for the board again and was elected.

His campaign incorporated senior citizens, union members and homosexuals. Milk appealed to the common, small-business owner, not just to homosexuals.

The trial that ensued caused great upheaval in San Francisco.

White received a relatively light sentence, causing the nation's eyes to turn to San Francisco and sending the city itself into riot.

The film, directed by Robert Epstein, won an Academy Award for Best Documentary.

The film is engrossing. Having the chance to peek into the political struggles of 1970s San Francisco is revealing of our human nature.

The idea that homosexuals were treated as "fruits," even in San Francisco, is almost shocking for us to hear now, in the 1990s.

The film will open your eyes to how many social changes have occurred in the past 20 years.

Harvey Milk is, to most of our generation (X, 13, whatever), an unrecognizable name. Most of the events in this film happened before we entered kindergarten.

However, timeliness is not an exception to ignorance. Milk is a very important figure in 20th-century politics.

He opened the door of the closet to many other homosexual leaders.

Seeing "The Times of Harvey Milk" would be doing yourself a great favor.

Steps being taken to solve K-State parking woes

Friday there were 76 stalls closed for the National Rural Families Conference.

This Wednesday and Thursday 10 stalls will be closed for the University Career Fair. These stalls will be used for their shuttle buses, Amaro said. He said the company recruiters will fight for spots like just about everyone else.

There will be 60 stalls closed on Friday for the Positive Approach to Challenging Behavior in Young Children Conference, Amaro said.

"Counting everything big and small, there are 247 conferences from Jan. 1 to June 30." Amaro said. "That includes the Chamber of Commerce on Feb. 7. They held a three-day meeting and spent $1,000, all the way down to recruiters."

Amaro said the conferences earned the University $8,997 from Jan. 1 to June 30.

Conference representatives may call anywhere from a week to just one day in advance, usually depending on the size of the conference.

Having conferences makes the parking problem worse, but steps are being taken to help the everyday parking problem, Archer said.

This will lesson parking problems on the whole campus so in the future the conference parking will be less of an inconvenience to people who park regularly on campus, he said.

Archer said the University is in the process of having a professional survey drafted to address the problem. The survey is to get feedback on what to do.

Ron Downey, director of institutional research and analysis, is in charge of the survey. He said the committee is finishing a draft for the focus group.

The focus group is made up of people from different walks of life here at K-State. For example, there are representatives from the parking committee, the student and faculty senates and the central administration and students services employees, Downey said.

He said the survey will be directed at K-State faculty, staff, and students and should be out in the mail near the end of the fall semester or at the beginning of the spring semester.

He said the committee is looking at four possible scenarios that could take place in the next five to ten years, and they expect to release results in early to middle spring.

The first scenario is if the University does nothing. Spaces will be lost to construction if that happens, Downey said. He said there are more high school graduates from Kansas high schools than before so enrollment at K-State will probably be higher.

The second scenario is to build a shuttle service from the outer part of campus to the main campus. The third is to build a parking garage. The fourth is to restrict parking on campus to people who live outside a certain distance from the campus, Downey said.

Road decision postponed

LEIGH BELLINGER
Collegian

The City Commission will vote next week on relocating an intersection when Seth Childs Road is widened to four lanes next fall.

During a special meeting Tuesday afternoon at City Hall, commissioners approved, 4-0, to defer any decision on relocating the intersection of Shuss and Seth Childs roads 400 feet south of the existing intersection until next week's meeting.

The land owner, Jim Johns, proposed moving the intersection farther south to provide easier access and increased visibility for future commercial ventures on the land.

"We're trying to attract some major commercial tenants," Joe Knopp, attorney for Johns, said. "The more difficult it is to get in has a significant impact when it comes to a business investing money in a new shopping center."

The proposed move would mean the Southwind office park would lose direct access to Seth Childs Road.

Tom Bennett, part-owner of four of the Southwind buildings, said the people connected with the Southwind complex want the intersection to remain in its present location.

He said moving the intersection would mean people coming or going to the office park would have to turn into the Johns' development to have access to Seth Child.

"What they're asking us to do is to devalue our property so that the undeveloped property can be increased in value," Bennett said.

The city has until next week to decide on what to do with the intersection. William Frost, city attorney, said the Kansas Department of Transportation has postponed their original deadline for a decision.

"Unless we can guarantee the deal by Oct. 5, they're going to build it where it is now," Frost said.

Now both parties involved have less than a week to reach a compromise on the intersection, or no action will be taken.

Commissioner Roger Maughmer said he hopes an agreement is reached between now and next Tuesday.

He said it was in the best interest of the community to develop the land and to maintain the access to Southwind.

"Now they need to get together and reach a compromise," Maughmer said.

Animal charity donates food so elderly can feed their pets

JANELL COE
Collegian

For elderly people, the decision between feeding their pet or feeding themselves may be a daily struggle.

Riley County and Manhattan residents who have difficulty affording pet food can now seek help from Pets in Need.

"Pets in Need was started by pet lovers who saw a need in the community," Dr. Bill Fortney, assistant professor of veterinary medicine, said.

"Our goal is to make the community aware of hungry pets and help feed those pets in need," he said.

In cooperation with the Flint Hills Breadbasket, Pets in Need can help those pet owners provide food for their pets, Fortney said.

"The project focuses on companion pets," Shirley Bramhall, executive director of Flint Hills Breadbasket, said.

"We are not encouraging people who can't afford to feed their family to get a pet," she said.

"The project is to help those who already have pets."

"I think pets really enrich our lives," Ruth Ann Wefald, committee member, said.

"This program is neat in the way that it helps people who really want pets," Wefald said.

PETS IN NEED

For more information, contact Shirley Bramhall, 537-0730, or Dr. Bill Fortney, 532-5690.

During the month of October, persons may donate unopened pet food and/or cash to the Pets in Need project, Fortney said.

Drop-off points are at all area veterinary offices and the Flint Hills Breadbasket, Wefald said.

"We have a wonderful group of dedicated people on the committee," Fortney said.

"Everyone has brought a certain energy to the group," he said. "It's a great team effort."

He said Pets in Need will be sponsoring a super dog concert during Octoberfest at 1:30 p.m. Saturday, Oct. 8 in Aggieville.

All fees, which are tax-deductible, go to the Pets in Need fund, he said.

Sponsors include Hawley Printing, The Iams Company, Manhattan Kennel Club, Manhattan Veterinary Medical Association and Riley County Humane Society.

TIPS FOR WRITING A CLASSIFIED AD

Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.

Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.

CATEGORIES

To help you find what you are looking for, the classified ads have been arranged by category and sub-category. All categories are marked by one of the large images, and sub-categories are preceded by a number designation.

WE DO NOT USE PHONE NUMBERS OR LAST NAMES IN PERSONALS.

City a model for others

has come up with on its own.

"There's a lot of research being paid for by the Feds to find out what, in fact, will accommodate both people with visual disabilities and people in wheelchairs," Stunkel said.

"But right now we have to comply with the law, which says all of these intersections of sidewalks with streets must be ramped by Jan. 26, 1995," she said. "That's the absolute deadline end date."

Stunkel said the construction should have been done closer to Jan. 26, 1992. She said the phrase 'a lack of planning on your part does not constitute an emergency on my part' fits this situation well.

"In a way, every city in the United States facing getting all their curb ramps done is in the place of saying 'Well, we really should've started back in 1992,'" Stunkel said.

She said that, although the city is playing catch-up right now, it will all be beneficial in the end.

"Once the towns and cities and states across the country have done the structural changes, we'll just go on within our communities as usual with more access and participation by people with various types of disabilities," Stunkel said.

She said able-bodied people should not discount the fact something could leave them disabled.

"You can do all the planning you want, eat all the right things and take all your vitamins, but the fact is, there are chronic illnesses and accidents that occur, and people end up with disabilities," Stunkel said.

"We are paving the way for our own future," she said.

Stunkel said this is not a matter of the advocates vs. the taxpayers.

"The fact is that it's all of us, and it really is a matter of civil rights," Stunkel said.

She said the lawsuit against Manhattan is making an impression on other governmental entities.

"This is one of just a handful of cases that is really making waves across the country and setting precedence," she said.

Ron Fehr, assistant city manager and Manhattan ADA coordinator, said the key to Title II entities is to make all programs and services offered by the city accessible to disabled people.

"The curb ramps is an issue that is a direct result of the court case. We've developed a curb-ramp schedule that puts in approximately 892 ramps across the city."

The area getting the most attention is the older part of town.

"All of those sidewalks were built prior to 1973," Fehr said. "Ever since 1973, when the Rehabilitation Act was established, anything that was constructed new was provided a curb ramp."

He said the curb construction should be completed by Jan. 7, 1995.

Fehr said Title II also requires public entities with 50 employees or more to do a self-evaluation plan and a transition plan.

Manhattan is in the middle of a self-evaluation.

"In a self-evaluation plan, you look at all your policies, programs and services and non-structural items such as communication issues," Fehr said.

He said employment practices are reviewed to ensure that disabled people are not being discriminated against, and that programs and services are being offered.

"The transition plan is a structural plan to remove physical barriers that may exist in facilities," Fehr said.

He said both plans require input from persons with disabilities.

"We're willing to make modifications that are necessary so that individuals with disabilities are able to participate in the programs and services," Fehr said.

Money scarce for student-father finishes laundry, does the dishes, finds a baby-sitter, and finds a date, there isn't any time left or any money.

"Money is tight," Dunn said.

Dunn gets paid for being a graduate and research teaching assistant.

"I've paid into the G.I. Bill, so I get $400 a month for that," he said.

Besides some student loans, Dunn also works during the summer.

Dunn is familiar with the now defunct, Non-Traditional Students Association.

"One of the problems with the Non-Traditional Students Association is that, by definition, non-traditional students don't have a lot of time," Dunn said.

The priorities of a non-traditional student are getting through school, getting their family taken care of and working on the car, he said.

The evening winds down. Mike has a friend over.

It's getting pretty late for a kindergartner.

Dunn asks Mike who his favorite football player is.

"Joe Montana," responds Mike.

"Say stay healthy, Joe," Dunn says.

"Stay healthy, Joe," Mike responds.

A father and son bond.

Each goes to school. Each has priorities. And both of them take time out of their busy schedules for each other.

Chris and Mike Dunn do just fine.

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN WEEKLY SPORTS SECTION

BIG 8 FOOTBALL

PREVIEW FOR OCT. 1

■ K-State is idle this week. Its next game will be Oct. 6 at the University of Kansas. Look for the game preview in next week's edition of the Wildcat Watch.

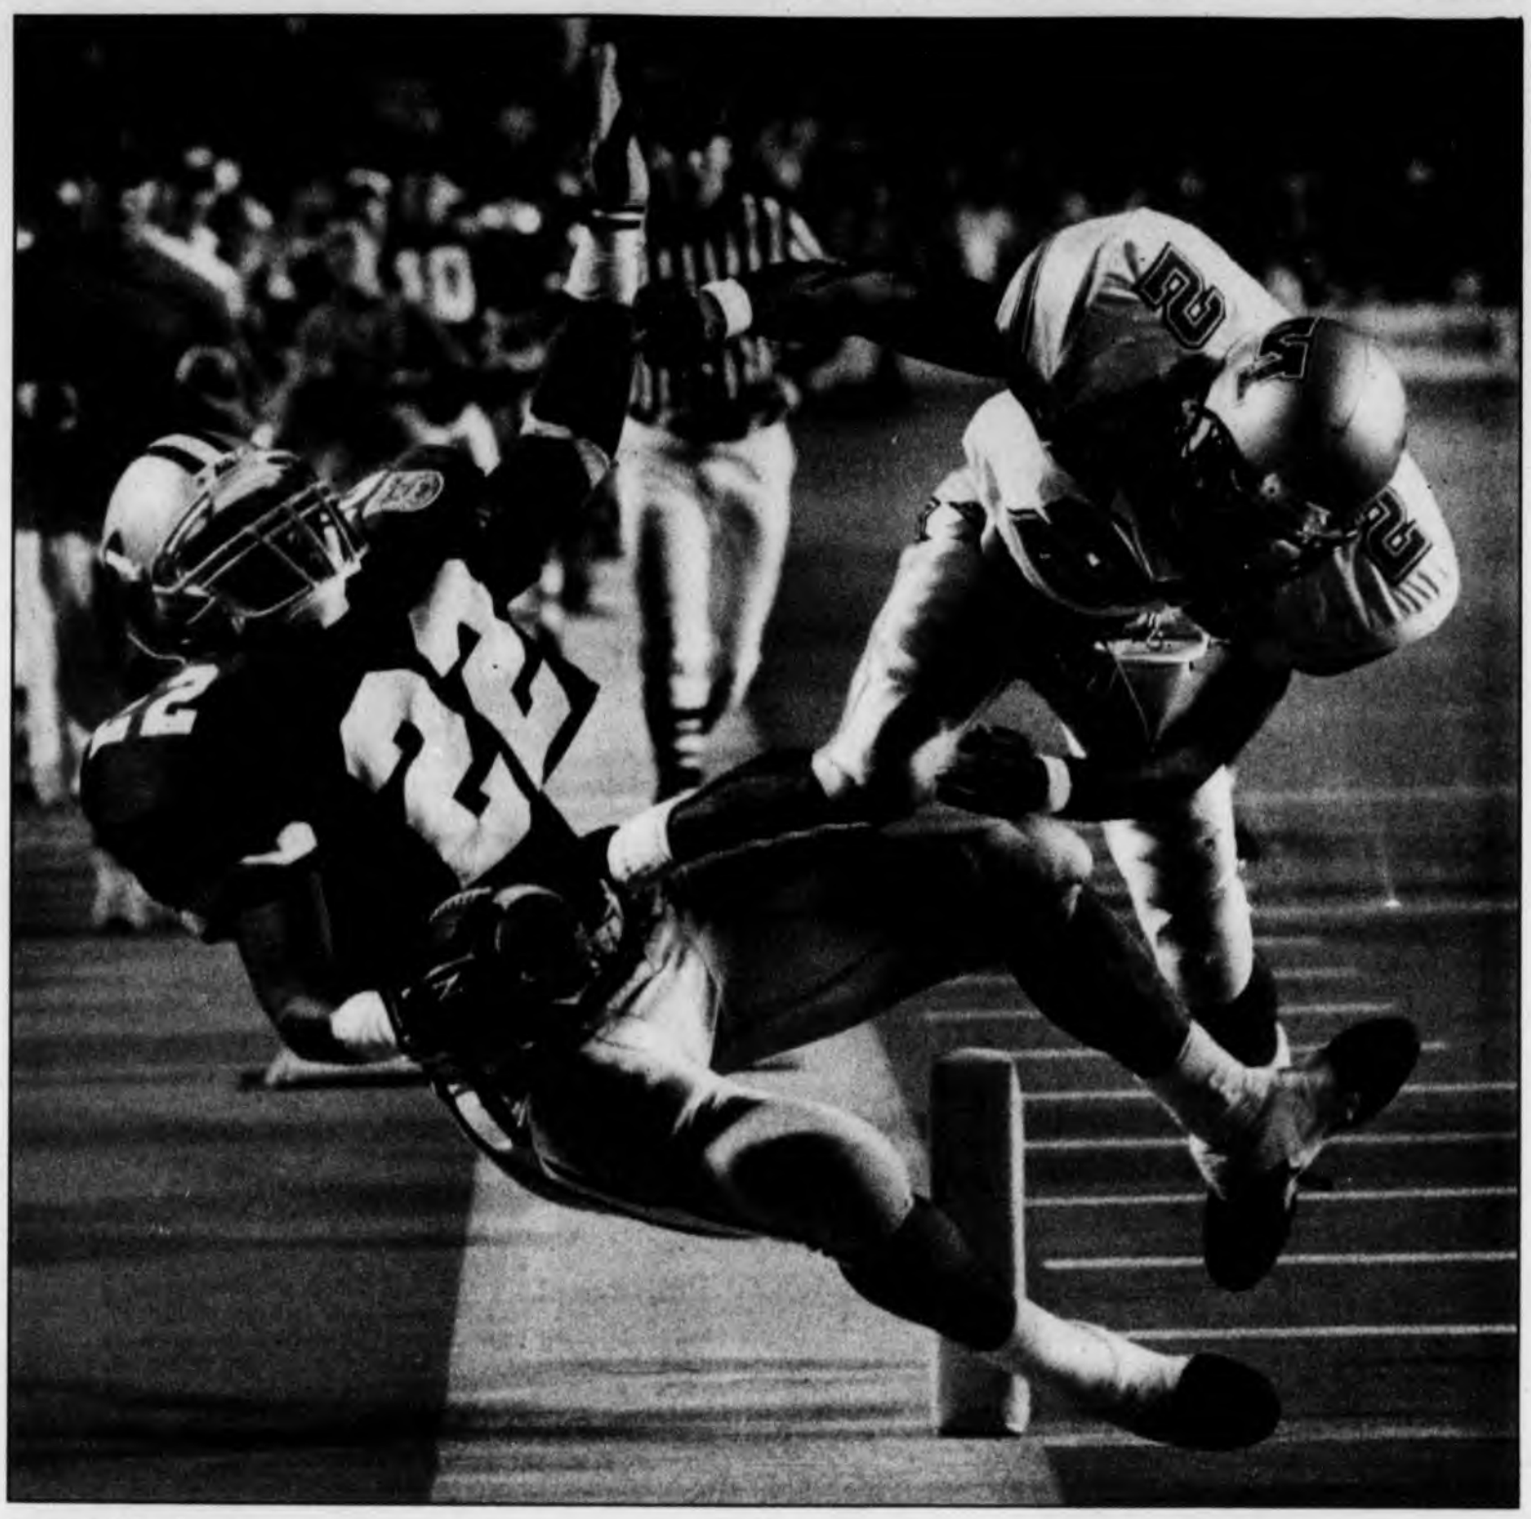
Colorado at Texas

When: 2:30 p.m. Saturday, Oct. 1
Where: Memorial Stadium (77,809)
About the Buffaloes: Colorado took a big step toward a possible national championship last week with a last-second victory over Michigan. The Buffs scored on a 64-yard touchdown pass with no time left on the clock. Quarterback Kordell Stewart played against Michigan, and he could now be a Heisman candidate.
About the Longhorns: Texas is one of the top teams in the Southwest Conference. Currently, the Longhorns are ranked No. 11 in the CNN Coaches Poll, and they are led by 17 returning starters. Texas uses a balanced attack on offense behind quarterback Shea Morenz. Their defense is solid with nine returning starters.

Iowa State at Oklahoma



When: 1:30 p.m. Saturday, Oct. 1
Where: Memorial Stadium (50,000)
About the Cyclones: Iowa State is in a world of hurt. It has opened up the season with an 0-4 record that included a loss to a Division II team. Coach Jim Walden has some serious questions to answer before the game with OU. Look for loss No. 5.
About the Sooners: Oklahoma is No. 17 in the CNN Coaches Poll. OU has played good, and poorly, at times. The Sooners looked good against Syracuse, but they looked bad against Texas A&M and Texas Tech. Running back James Allen has played a lot like the team has this season. He's played well lately, though.

Wyoming at Nebraska

When: 1 p.m. Saturday, Oct. 1
Where: Memorial Stadium (72,700)
About the Cowboys: This has been a rocky season for Wyoming so far. The team has played poorly while losing to Tulsa, but it played well against Utah. Fullback Ryan Christopherson is Wyoming's leader on the field.
About the Cornhuskers: The real question surrounding this game is whether or not Nebraska quarterback Tommie Frazier will play. Frazier suffered a bruised calf, and he has been hospitalized this week. Early reports say the Huskers will be without Frazier until the K-State game. Nebraska smashed Pacific last week. The first team offense only played two series in the blowout.

West Virginia at Missouri

When: 1 p.m. Saturday, Oct. 1
Where: Faurot Field (62,000)
About the Mountaineers: West Virginia played last Thursday on national television, and the team got whipped by Virginia Tech. The Mountaineers are led by offensive guard Tom Robsock and a tough defense with seven returning starters.
About the Tigers: Missouri has had a week off to prepare for this game against the Mountaineers. The Tigers last played two weeks ago against Houston, and they came out with a win. This improved Missouri's record to 1-2. Quarterback Jeff Handy continues to perform at a high level, even though he's in a new offensive scheme this season.

K-State running back J.J. Smith appeared to score a touchdown in the third quarter, but the referees said he stepped out of bounds before he crossed the goal line.

Wildcats bury Golden Gophers 35-0

CRESTON KUENZI
Collegian

K-State moved its home unbeaten streak to 16 games Saturday with a 35-0 battering of the Minnesota Golden Gophers.

K-State 35
Minnesota 0

The streak dates back to a 10-0 loss to Colorado in the 1991 season.

The Wildcats had plenty of motivation going into the game against the Golden Gophers.

Not only were they looking for redemption after a disappointing performance against Rice last week, but the Cats also said they felt like the Gophers were coming in overconfident.

"They came in here with the attitude that they were going to beat us on our home field where we haven't lost in three years," Mario Smith, safety, said.

"For a team to come in and disrespect us like that, really hurt us inside.

"This is our house."

Quarterback Chad May said he didn't appreciate the Gopher's attitude, either.

"They were kind of laughing at us, and I don't like anyone laughing at me," May said.

"It got everyone motivated:

"I think they came in here too confident, like they were going to show us something, and we caught them sleeping."

On the Gopher's first drive, they drove from the Cats' 49-yard line to the 7-yard line before Clyde Johnson intercepted a pass in the end zone.

That was the closest the Gophers came to the end zone, and from that point, the Cats settled into a groove on defense.

The highly publicized Minnesota offense could only muster 108 yards rushing and 87 yards passing for the game.

"Their defense came to play tonight," Tim Schade, Gopher quarterback, said. "They took away our game.

"They were pressuring, defending, and I don't think they ever really had a blown coverage."

In fact, for the entire first quarter, both defenses dominated the game.

The teams combined for seven punts and only five first downs.

The Cats finally broke through with the first drive of the second quarter.

K-State covered 72 yards in 10 plays and capped it off with an 8-yard pass from May to receiver Mitch Running for the touchdown.

After trading off numerous punts, the critical play of the game occurred with 2:16 left in the first half.

Minnesota was punting from its own 45-yard line when Mike Lawrence broke up the middle to block the punt out of bounds on the 24-yard line.

Three plays later, the Cats punched it in with a 20-yard touchdown pass from May to a wide-open Tyson Schwieger to give them a 14-0 lead at half.

Schwieger ran a post route and May hit him in stride for the touchdown.

"I laid it out there, and he ran under it for the touchdown," May said.

Minnesota then went nine straight drives without a first down from the first quarter to the third quarter.

K-State's first touchdown in the second half came on a 23-yard pass from May to Kevin Lockett in the third quarter to take a 21-0 lead.

In the fourth quarter, fullback Rod Schiller got his first touchdown of his senior year after coming back from a knee injury with a 1-yard blast up the middle.

Back-up quarterback Matt Miller finished off the scoring with a 1-yard sneak with four minutes left in the game.

Minnesota coach Jim Wacker said the Cats' offense is for real.

"Chad May and J.J. Smith are everything they're cracked up to be," Wacker said.

"I thought Chad threw the ball exceptionally well, and the line did a good job protecting him.

"J.J. Smith is an outstanding back, and he really put on a show tonight."

Although Smith didn't score, he did set a single-game personal record with 137 yards in 23 carries.

The Cats now look toward the intrastate match-up with the University of Kansas.

"It's going to be a war," May said.

"We're going to prepare hard, and I think that if we do things right, we've got a great chance at winning."

Iowa's weather a factor in women's golf tournament

DOUG BASSETT
Collegian

The cold and rainy weather conditions at the Cyclone Golf Classic in Iowa may have had a lot to do with the K-State women's golf team's performance this weekend.

The team competed last weekend and shot a 348 during the first round, but the team turned around and shot a 324 in the second round.

"I was impressed by the way we played considering the weather conditions, even though the first day we did not play up to our capabilities," Coach Tim Jennings, said.

"The second day was the best day for the team so far this fall."

Out of twelve teams that competed, the girls finished in sixth place.

Debbie Crystal, junior, was able to come up with a 17th place finish when she shot an 87 and a 78, to end with a 165 total.

"I wasn't too happy with my round on Saturday," Crystal said. "There were a lot of mental mistakes that I made, probably due to the weather conditions."

Jennings said he was especially impressed by the performance of Mitzi Taylor, who shot a 171 in her first collegiate tournament.

"Mitzi showed an awful lot of poise this weekend," Jennings said.

Richelle Bond finished third for K-State with a score of 168. That was just three shots behind Crystal.

Minnesota won the tournament with a total score of 631, followed by Iowa State and Northern Illinois.

K-State barely missed fourth place by three strokes.

"Minnesota is a very good golf school," Jennings said. "Iowa State is a very deep team."

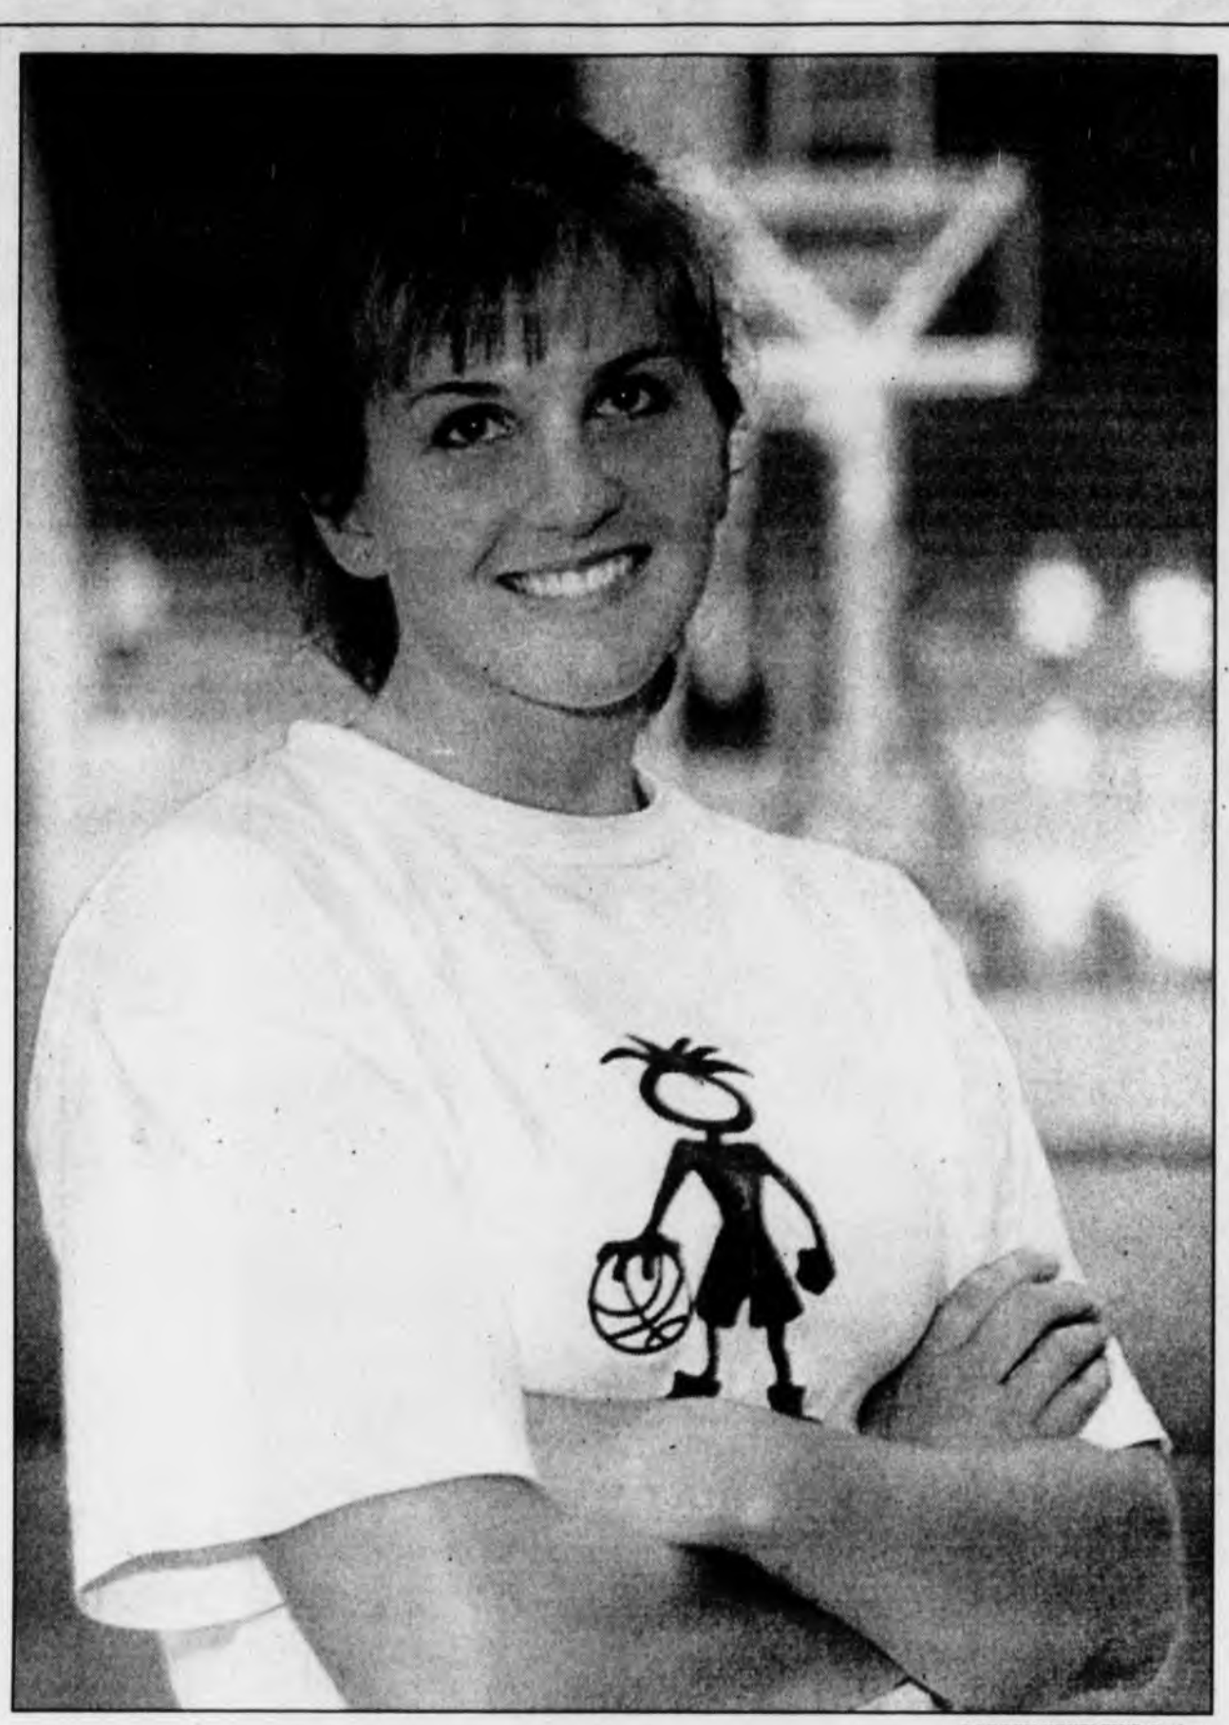
Crystal said the team will be ready for the upcoming tournaments.

"I am very excited about the next few tournaments that are coming up. Everyone is getting together and playing good at the same time," Crystal said.

"Our coach has done a really good job on coming up with new ideas for practice and helping all of us with our mental game as well."

Jennings is also looking for an improved performance in the upcoming tournaments.

"I am looking forward to better things for the team on the last few tournaments this fall," Jennings said.



The women's next tournament will take place on Oct. 3. That is when the Wildcats will travel to Bloomington, Ill., to compete in the D.A. Weibring Invitational.

The men's team will be in action this week, when it travels to the Kansas Invitational in Lawrence.

GOLF RESULTS

■ The Cats shot a 348 in the first round, but they turned around with a 324 in the second round.

■ Debbie Crystal finished with a 17th place finish to lead the Cats.

DARREN WHITLEY/Collegian

Andria Jones, sophomore post player, came to K-State with women's basketball coach Brian Agler.

Adjusting

Sophomore basketball player found lack of playing time, college schedule frustrating

JEREMY CRABTREE
Collegian

Andria Jones is a survivor.

The 6-foot-1-inch sophomore post player on the women's basketball team only averaged around three minutes of playing time per game her freshman season.

"It was very tough to not get a whole lot of playing time," Jones said. "Sometimes I wondered why I was doing all of this."

Five of her teammates that saw about the same amount of playing time as she did either quit the team or transferred to another school.

However, did the Radnor, Ohio, native ever think about quitting and leaving K-State?

ONE on ONE

"It crossed my mind," Jones said. "You come from high school, you play all of the time, and you are the star.

"I then thought about it for a while, and I just thought that I'm a bigger person than that. You have to work to get where you want to."

Several of the players that left said they decided to leave after Coach Brian Agler discussed with them their futures with K-State.

Agler also had one of those talks with Jones.

"He told me that I have the ability," Jones said. "But he didn't know if I had the heart-slash-mentality for it.

"He always told me that I am the nicest person in the world, but he also said niceness doesn't get you anywhere on the court."

Jones also survived the change from the University of Missouri-Kansas City to K-State.

She originally signed with Agler to play at UMKC, but Agler quit the job with the Kangaroos to take the job here at K-State.

"It wasn't actually too hard of a decision to come here," Jones said.

"I came here for a day and walked around. The coaches didn't even know anything about it, and after that I just said, 'yeah, I'm coming here.'"

Then came Jones' toughest obstacle of all. This hurdle is one that most incoming freshmen have to deal with — adjusting to the college lifestyle.

"Honestly, I wasn't homesick at all," Jones said. "It was all of the other stuff that I had trouble with. My body wasn't used to all of the hours that you have to put forth.

"I like to sleep, and whenever I had spare time I would be sleeping. It was hard to adapt to everything like practice and studying."

Jones said her hometown isn't that big, but a nearby town helped with the adjustment process.

"I'm from a small town, but the nearest city is Delaware," Jones said. "It's about the same size as Manhattan, so that helped with my adjustment here."

Back in Radnor, Jones attended Buckeye Valley High School. In her senior season, she was a first team all-state selection, while averaging 17.5 point per game.

"We never won any state championships, and we lost to the team that ended up winning state," Jones said.

"However, the team had three girls that could have played at the Division I level. Only two signed with Division I teams, and the other signed with a Division II school."

With the lack of playing time last season, Jones didn't have too may opportunities to prove herself.

However, she showed that she still has the scoring touch in last season's Big Eight Conference Tournament.

In the Cats' first-round loss to Oklahoma State, Jones came off the bench and added 10 points to almost bring K-State back from a 20-point deficit.

Jones said it was the highlight of her season.

"I had a chance to do something," Jones said. "I had other chances, but I guess I didn't do too well because of nerves or something. I don't want to use nerves as an excuse though.

"The little things just happened in that game, and I just played-the way that I know I can."

To help prepare for the upcoming season, Jones said she spent the entire summer training here in Manhattan.

"I've worked really hard this summer," Jones said. "We played and lifted in the morning, every morning, then we would have some type of conditioning activity."

If perseverance can win a starting role on the K-State women's basketball team, then Andria Jones would be a first team all-Big Eight selection.

Big Eight has had an impressive run so far this season

Is the Big Eight Conference a great conference, or what?

In the first edition of the Wildcat Watch, I told everybody to look out because this could be the Big Eight's season.

Well, so far it seems that everything is going as planned.

Right now, there are two Big Eight teams ranked in the top five. No other conference in the country can say that.

Not even the mighty Southeastern Conference, Pacific Ten Conference, or tradition-rich Big Ten Conference can boast this fact.

Nebraska is the No. 1 ranked team in the CNN/USA Today Coaches Poll, and it deserves to be, for now.

The Husker hasn't had the toughest schedule in the world, but it proved that Big Eight football is for real with a whipping of former Pacific Ten favorite UCLA.

Colorado has knocked off the best that the Big Ten Conference had to offer, twice.

In fact, the Buffaloes thrashed Wisconsin and scored a last-second victory against Michigan in front of 100,000 hostile fans.

JEREMY CRABTREE

Even K-State and Kansas got on the Big Ten whipping bandwagon.

Last week, the Wildcats clobbered the Minnesota Golden Gophers 35-0, and the Jayhawks licked Michigan State in Lawrence.

■ Now that the Cats and the Jayhawks are finished dealing with the first four weeks of the season, they can concentrate on the game that everybody in the state has been looking forward to all summer.

That game is the K-State-Kansas game in Lawrence on Oct. 6. The game will be televised by ESPN, and this game is the biggest game in the history of the rivalry.

No doubt about it.

When the Cats and the Hawks butt heads, both teams should be ranked. The Cats are No. 23 in the Associated Press poll, and Kansas is ranked No. 26.

A couple of losses by Top-25 teams this weekend should leave both K-State and KU ranked together for the first time ever.

That's what will make this season's game unforgettable.

■ What has happened to Iowa State? That's a question that many Cyclone fans are having to deal with this week.

The Cyclones have dropped games to Northern Iowa, Central Michigan, Iowa and Rice.

These losses come after several pre-season publications advertised this Cyclone team to be improved from last year.

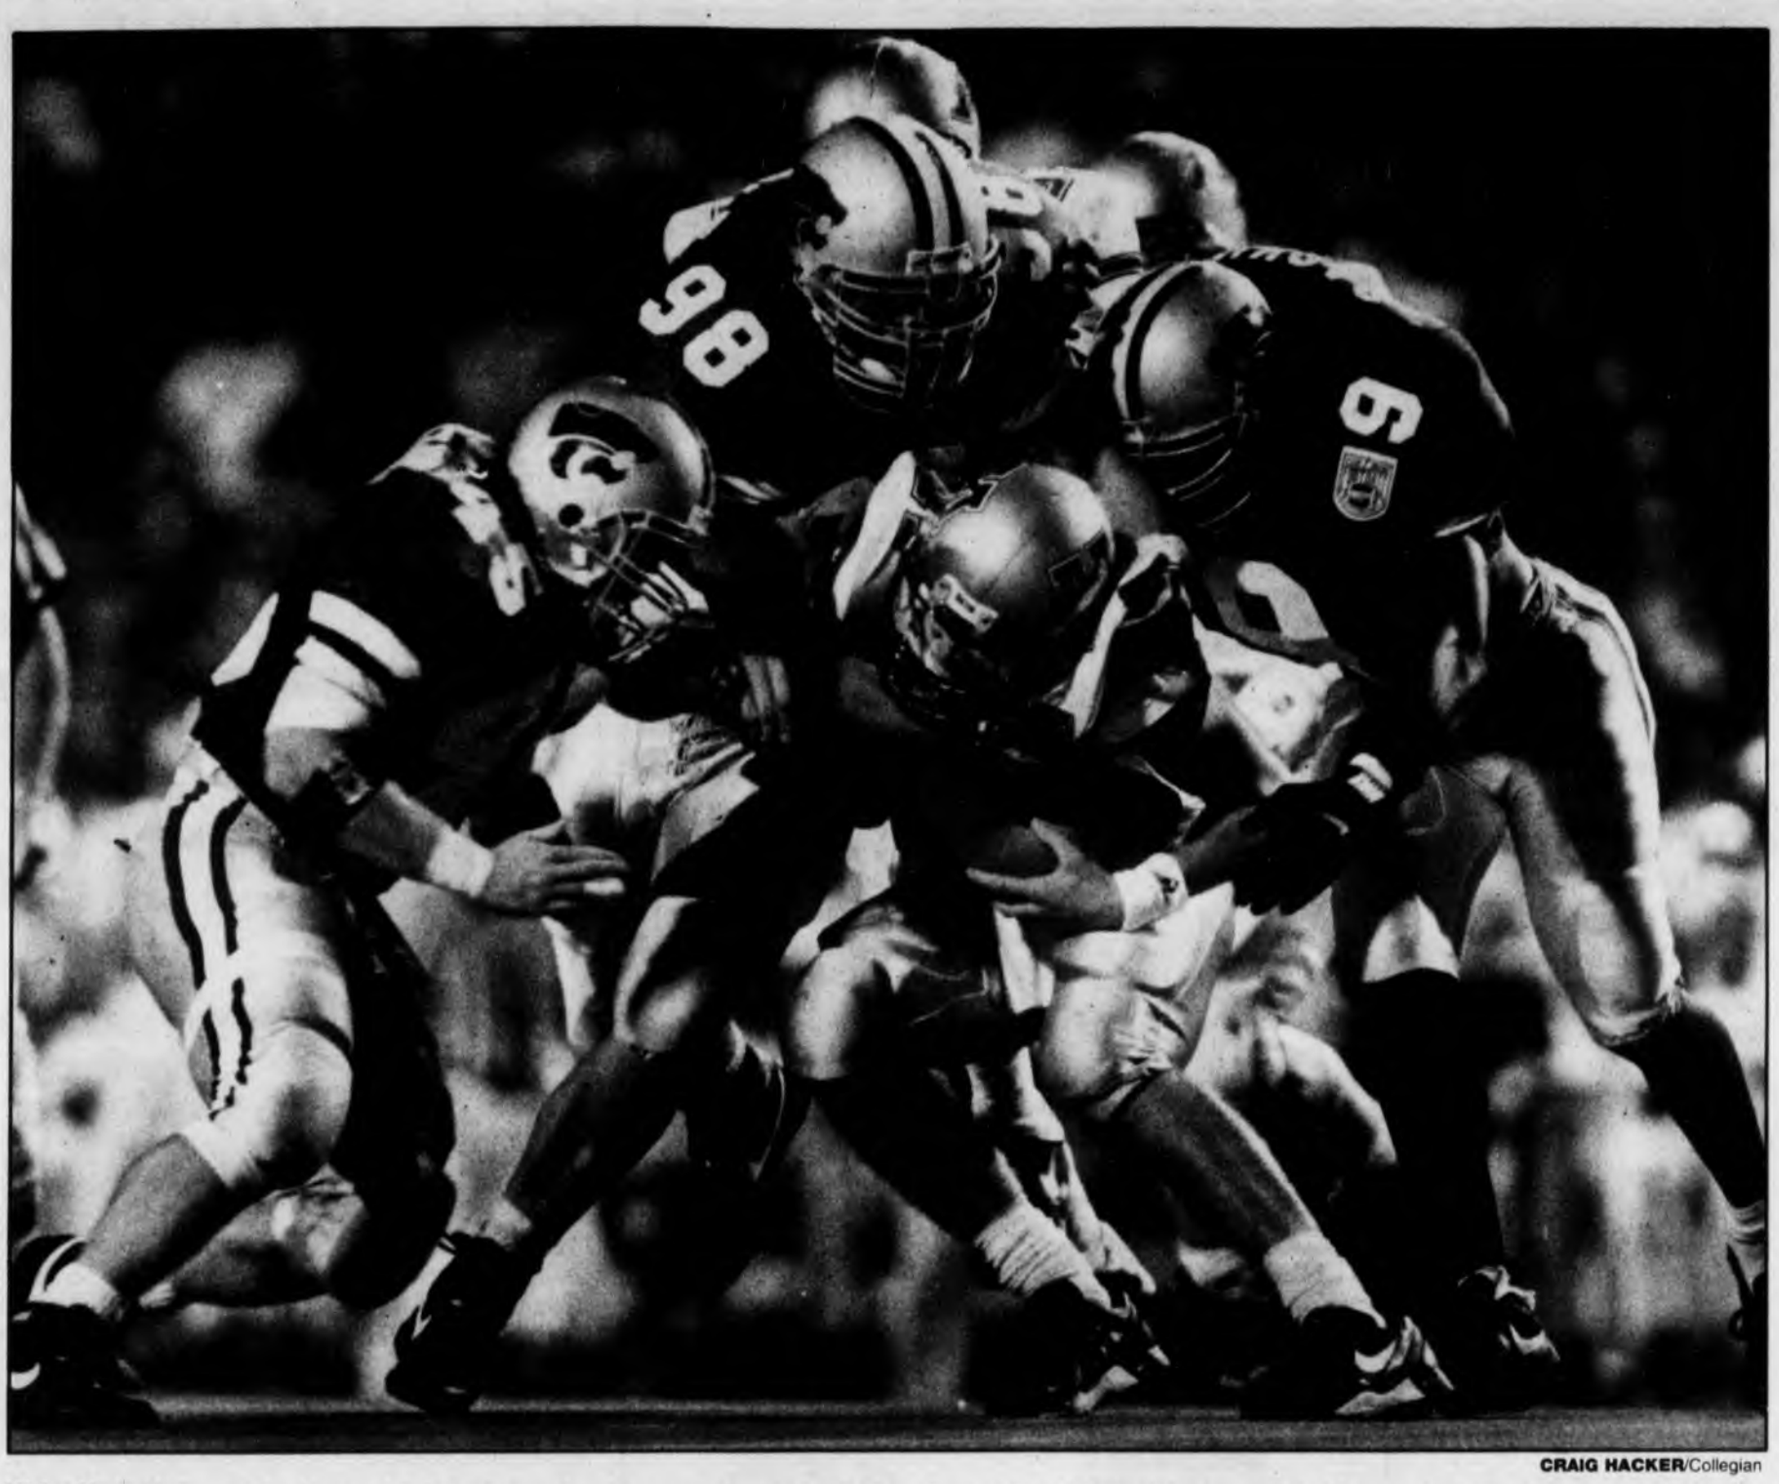
Iowa State's next opponent is Oklahoma, so don't expect them to break their losing streak this weekend.

This is the point in the season when Cyclone fans usually start saying, wait until basketball season.

Well, again, the Cyclones will be out of luck, because Johnny Orr isn't running the show anymore.

■ Oklahoma State has shown signs of improvement so far this season. The Cowboys are 2-1.

Just two weeks ago, the Cowboys traveled to Waco, Texas, and almost escaped with a victory against a good Baylor team.



The victory, deep in the heart of Texas, would have left the Bears sitting at 3-0.

They also captured a road victory in their first game of the season against Northern Illinois and defeated the same Tulsa team that beat Missouri in the first game of the season.

The Cowboys' opponent this weekend is North Texas, so Oklahoma State should be sitting at 3-1 heading in league play.

OSU opens Big Eight play with Nebraska, but their next two games are possible wins. They have Missouri and Iowa State at home.

This might just be the year that the Cowboys finally beat the Sooners. I said maybe.

CRAIG HACKER/Collegian

Kirby Hocutt, Percell Gaskins and Ray Eagle smother Minnesota quarterback, Cory Sauter. The K-State defense recorded four sacks in the contest en route to its first shut out since 1992.

Coaches and players relieved with victory

WESS HUDELSON
Collegian

A sense of relief was felt by K-State after its 35-0 victory over Minnesota.

Sept. 17, when the Wildcats defeated Rice 27-18, the attitudes of both players and coaches were not positive.

"I really believe we played quite poorly," Coach Bill Snyder said about his team's performance after the Rice contest. "It's important that we won the ballgame, but I have real concerns on how we played in all phases of the game."

Snyder's feelings changed after the Minnesota contest.

"I feel a lot better than I did last week," Snyder said. "Our players know that they played well. That's what's important — to get off the field and know you played well."

Snyder said if K-State had played poorly against Minnesota it would have been more difficult to deal with because of the longer lay off before the KU game. K-State has a 12-day break between the Minnesota game and the KU game.

"It's awful easy to get down when coach tells you you aren't playing well," Snyder said. "But the team took it upon themselves to improve."

Running back J.J. Smith said the intensity at practices leading up to the Minnesota game were intense, but it might be more tolerable this week.

"It's a relief to win the way we did," Smith said. "We practiced real hard all week and watched a lot of film. It should be a lot easier in the film room this week."

Smith's performance has been on the rise over the last two games. Against Rice, he broke K-State's record for all-purpose yardage in a game with 301 yards.

Saturday against Minnesota, Smith rushed for 137 yards on 23 carries.

"It was real simple to run tonight," Smith said after the Minnesota contest.

"I never had to look for open holes, they were just there."

The attitudes are similar to last season, after K-State defeated Minnesota 30-25 at Minneapolis, Minn.

"Last year's game was more of a roller coaster, but there are some similarities to last year as far as the attitudes," Snyder said.

Snyder said last year's victory against the Gophers propelled the Cats to later successes in the season.

"At the time, I didn't know how important it was going to be," Snyder said.

"But after looking back, it did give us a lift."

Despite feeling good about the victory Saturday and possibly the biggest game of the season straight ahead, linebacker Percell Gaskins said there is a lot of football to be played.

"The Jayhawks are up next and looking forward to it," Gaskins said.

"It's the opening game of the Big Eight. We have a lot of work to do besides KU."

▶ VOLLEYBALL

Cats finish in second place

CRESTON KUENZI
Collegian

The K-State women's volleyball team finished second in the University of Texas-Arlington tournament by splitting two matches.

"We basically played well against Virginia Tech, and we didn't against Oral Roberts," Coach Jim Moore said.

On Friday, the Wildcats faced Virginia Tech in a match that decided which team would play in the championship game.

The Cats dominated the Hokies with the scores of 15-11, 15-2 and 15-7. The Hokies were 4-7 going into the game including wins over Kansas and Texas Tech.

Yolanda Young led the team in kills with 16, and Jill Dugan had 10. Devon Ryning had a big game with 37 assists and five assisted blocks, while Kathy Wylie provided eight digs.

The Hokies displayed a dismal .054 kill percentage in the match with only 25 kills. The Cats had a .347 kill percentage with 47 kills.

Then the Cats geared up for the championship match against Oral Roberts, which had beaten Texas-Arlington on Friday.

Home meet doesn't bring luck

JULIE KUHLMAN
Collegian

The K-State cross country team is focusing on preparation for the Big Eight Conference Championships.

Last weekend, the Wildcats hosted the K-State Invitational Tournament at Warner Park. This meet marked their first home meet since 1986.

Coach Terry Drake said the team's finishings would foreshadow how well the teams would contend in the Big Eight.

"Whatever happens at the meet is probably what will happen in the Big Eight," said Drake.

Before the meet, Drake said the race for the top spot would be between K-State and the University of Colorado.

It wasn't.

Drake didn't expect the University of Kansas to enter the picture. However, the Jayhawks finished second in the meet.

K-State finished third behind the University of Oklahoma and KU, while Oklahoma State finished fourth.

Wichita State placed fifth and Creighton was sixth.

Drake said he also wasn't expecting Jeanene Rugan to wind up in thirteenth place in Mahattan.

"I thought Jeanene could win the race," Drake said.

"She ran the most mileage of anyone on the team so that could have been a factor," Drake said.

Drake said the team was tired, and that could have affected their running.

"I really thought they could do better," Drake said. "I may have run them too hard this week."

"I usually don't give them two hard workouts a week unless it's an off week, but I was trying to prepare them."

A bright spot for the women's team was freshman Charity Swartz, who led the team with a third place finish.

"She's always had the talent," Drake said.

"But I guess I didn't know how good she was because of our probation last year."

Irma Betancourt also placed in the top ten and said this was her first real race.

"It was a good way to prepare me for the Big Eight," Betancourt said.

"I'm still learning."

Cats play inconsistently at Wildcat Invitational

NICOLE POELL
Collegian

They didn't exactly kick-start their season.

The K-State tennis players had, as head coach Steve Bietau said, "an inconsistent" weekend, as they hosted the Wildcat Traveler's Express Invitational Saturday and Sunday.

The Wildcats' returning all-American, Karina Kuregian, returned to the court for her first outing since back surgery this summer.

With her doubles partner, Dinah Watson, the two fought their way to the quarterfinals before falling to University of Kansas' Kimberly Webster and Bianca Kirchhof, 3-6, 6-2, 6-4.

Kansas prevailed throughout most of the meet, landing two doubles teams into the finals and earning victories in all three singles events.

Kuregian

"Kansas was the dominant player here," Bietau said.

"We knew KU would be tough — they had a good showing last year in the NCAA Championships."

Although KU emerged victorious most of the weekend, K-State found one bright spot with the performance of Chris Schulte.

"I was really pleased with the play of Chris Schulte," Bietau said.

"She has really made some progress in the last two weeks, and she led the team in competitiveness.

She played several solid matches this weekend, and she forced people to beat her because she didn't make many mistakes."

Schulte caught Bietau's attention after advancing through the loser's bracket of the No. 2 singles category.

Finishing fifth overall in the No. 2 singles, Schulte also won a doubles match with partner Karen Nicholson.

Also finishing fifth overall in the No. 3 singles matches was K-State's Nikki Lagerstrom.

"Throughout the meet, we had some times where we looked good and some times where we didn't," he said.

"The thing I am concerned about dealing with before we play again is for us to understand that the effort made this weekend is just not acceptable if we want to compete with anybody."

▶ CLUB SPORTS

Soccer club is not a University sport

CRESTON KUENZI
Collegian

Recently, the K-State men's soccer team was to have been promoted from a club sport to a University sport

That is not exactly the case.

Tondo Waldron, sports club director, said the team is still technically a club sport.

"There are 22 club sports at K-State," Waldron said.

"In past years, the clubs received money through Student Governing Association.

"The only thing that has changed is that now the athletic department provides guidance to where the money goes."

Waldron said there is a governing committee that decides how much money each club is given.

Although no scholarships are offered now, Bart Vance, a forward on the soccer team, said he hopes the possibility isn't far off.

"The hopes of the players are that with the excitement generated by the World Cup, we'll get some scholarships by the time the Big Twelve Conference rolls around," he said.

"Right now, we're just happy with whatever we are given."

Jim Epps, senior associate athletic director, said the University is in the process of adding varsity sports.

"We are in the early stages of adding more sport programs in the future," he said.

"That's three or four years off."

However, Waldron said there is no possibility for men's soccer to become a varsity sport because of Title IX — a law saying women must have equal opportunities as men in education, including athletic scholarships.

"Title IX is a rule that states there must be gender equity in the number of varsity sport programs a university has," he said.

"We don't have as many women's sports right now, so it could be that we make women's soccer or crew a varsity sport."

Cats overlooked Oral Roberts

The Cats could not get on track in the match, as the Golden Eagles prevailed with scores of 15-8, 15-4 and 15-12.

"We won so handily against Virginia Tech, a team that we thought would be difficult, that we thought Oral Roberts would be easy," Moore said.

"We found out that it's never easy."

Debbie Miller was one bright spot in the match for K-State as she nailed eight kills with just one error to lead the team. Young managed seven kills.

Ryning led in assists with 22, and Dugan had five digs and four assisted blocks.

As a team, the Eagles had a .358 kill percentage compared to the Cats' .190 and the Eagles dug 38 balls, while the Cats only recorded 17.

The Cats are now 8-2 and will face Wichita State tonight at 7:30 p.m.

The Shockers beat the Cats on two occasions last year, once in three games, and the other in four games.

"They are a very solid team, and they will be a difficult team to beat," Moore said.

"We will have to play well to beat them."

The Wichita State match will be the last match for K-State before Big Eight Conference play begins Oct. 1 at Colorado.

Last season the Cats went winless in the Big Eight, with an 0-12 record.

In 1992 the Cats also didn't win a Big Eight match.

The last time K-State won a Big Eight match was in 1991.

Wuggazer leads Cats to fourth place

The men's team placed fourth out of six teams behind three other Big Eight opponents.

Oklahoma State captured the meet title, Colorado was second and KU finished third.

Wichita State finished fifth and Creighton was sixth.

K-State was led by Billy Wuggazer, who placed sixth with a time of 25:19.

Wuggazer is the only returning runner from last season's men's team.

"Billy continues to run well, as did Geoff Delahantey," Drake said.

Delahantey placed sixteenth for the Cats and said he is hoping to run with Wuggazer by the end of the season.

"Hopefully, I'll be right up there. Our whole team should be better by the Big Eight meet," he said.

Wuggazer, the Cats' front runner, said he owes much of his success to his off-season training.

Next weekend, the harriers are traveling to Arkansas, which Drake said may be the toughest meet of the year.

"Arkansas is the site for the NCAA championships," Drake said.

"So everyone wants to run the course."

To prepare for the meet, Drake said he probably won't run the team as hard this week in practice.

"The intensity will be down this week," Drake said. "The miles that they run will be the same, but the intensity won't."

Teams at the Arkansas meet will include the No. 1 ranked Razorbacks, as well as other Big Eight squads.

Wuggazer said the meets aren't going to get any easier.

"The competition was tough this week, and it will be tougher next week," he said.

"We'll just need to stay focused."

After the meet at Arkansas, the cross country team will compete in the Wolverine Inter-Regional.

The meet is hosted by the University of Michigan in Ann Arbor, Michigan.

After that the team will host the Big Eight Championships on Oct. 29. The meet will also take place at Warner Park.

Bar may supply needed audience for forum

FORUM AT CHANCE
- Forum time: Today at 5 p.m. at Rusty's Last Chance, 1213 Moro in Aggieville.
- Panel Members: B.C. Camp II, student handcuffed and fined for riding his bike in a no-biking zone on campus; Bernard Franklin, assistant dean of student life; John Lambert, director of parking services; Ronnie Grice, captain of K-State Police; Brad Finkeldei, student body vice president.

KIMBERLY HEFLING
Collegian

It's not every day that students can drink a beer and discuss bike riding on campus with the captain of the K-State Police.

But at 5 p.m. today, at Rusty's Last Chance Restaurant & Saloon, 1213 Moro St., students are invited to an open forum, sponsored by Student Governing Association, concerning the bicycle fine and other transportation issues.

"The forum should answer questions students have about how the bike fight came about," Nabeeha Kazi, public relations director for SGA, said.

"The forum will also address students' concerns about the insufficient number of bike racks and about the fact that they are not conveniently located."

The issue concerning efforts being made to add bike lanes will also be addressed, Kazi said.

Kazi said they decided to have the forum at Rusty's Last Chance after Bernard Franklin, assistant dean of student life, encouraged them to try boosting attendance at forums by having one off-campus.

At a forum sponsored three weeks ago in the K-State Union, only four people attended, including herself, a Collegian reporter; Brad Finkeldei, student body vice president; and one other student, Kazi said.

"As far as I'm concerned, forums are not a success," Kazi said.

"That's why we decided to take a new and different approach."

Kazi said more forums will take place in a variety of locations if the one today is successful.

"Future forums are in the hands of today's forum," she said.

Franklin said the site of the forum shouldn't be an issue because it's just another location.

"I'm open to it. I think we should use every opportunity to get students' opinions," Franklin said.

"The way activities, especially forums, have been publicized in the past are not reaching all or even a majority of students," Kazi said.

"This has proven to be true in the turnout at campus-sponsored events, such as forums. It is clear that when four K-State students show up at a forum out of the 20,000 plus students we have, the entire forum approach is wrong."

The new approaches include greek house and dining-hall visitations, hand-outs about the forum in front of the Union, in Aggieville, and other public places, and putting flyers in several locations.

Students will be able to drink at the forum.

"This is a public place, so you can drink," Finkeldei said. "We're not going to ask the people at Last Chance to change their business practices."

Task force helps provide safe haven

MIKE HIND
Collegian

Some 220 soldiers from Ft. Riley are suffering through high temperatures and 12-hour shifts as part of a task force monitoring refugees in Cuba.

"Take the hottest day in Kansas and add humidity," said Carl Mahnken, a Department of the Army civilian, working with the Joint Information Bureau and the joint task force in Guantanamo Bay, Cuba.

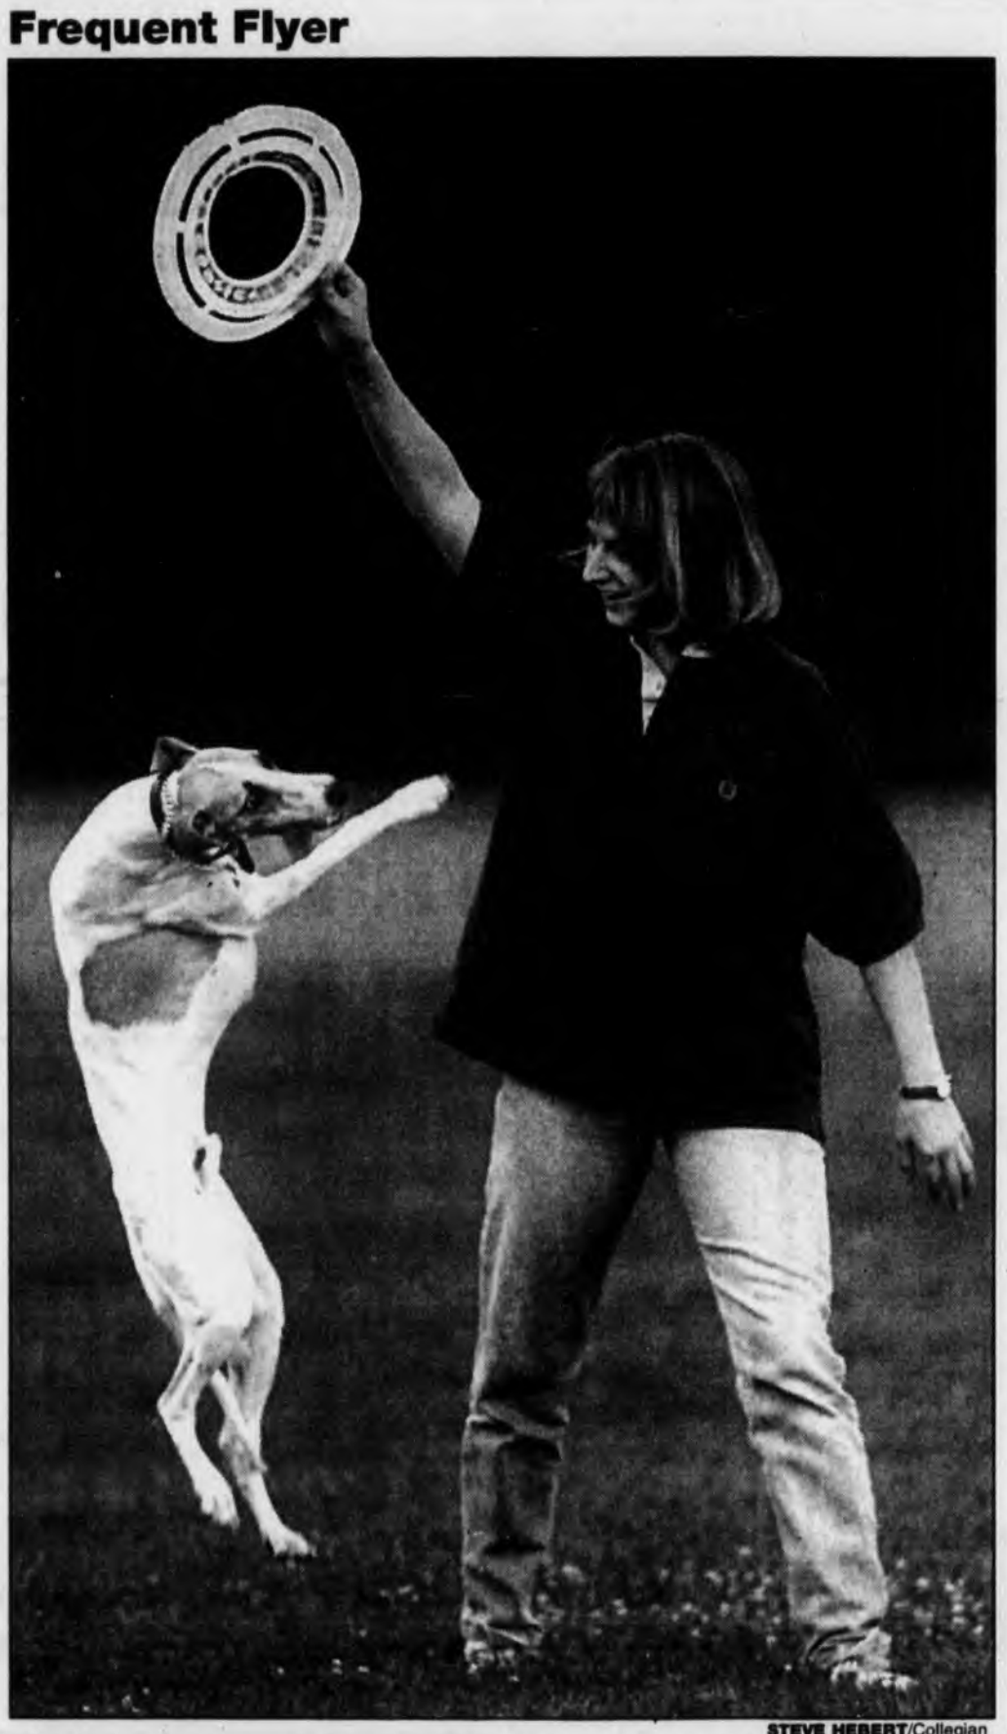
"These people are working on that in 12-hour shifts with three days on and one day off," Mahnken said.

Some 7,200 U.S. service men and women are currently in Cuba, serving on a joint task force that is helping to provide a safe haven for Cuban and Haitian refugees.

The servicemen help process and feed people, and when the need arises, provide a security force to see that they stay in camp, Mahnken said.

Mahnken said that a disturbance on Sept. 10, when Cubans walked out of their camps, caused a few servicemen to suffer minor injuries.

"They had some cuts and bruises," Mahnken said.



"No one was hospitalized."

The Cubans did eventually return to their camps, and order was restored, Mahnken said.

The Ft. Riley units that are serving on the task force are the 1st Military Police Company, deployed on July 10, Company B of the 701st Support Battalion, which was deployed July 16, and the 716th Military Police Battalion, which was deployed August 30.

"All units will be there for six months, after their date of deployment," Mark Meseke, media relations officer, said.

Guidelines vague for businesses

KIM HALL
Collegian

This is the fourth in a five-part series about the Americans with Disabilities Act.

Americans with Disabilities Act

Title III guidelines for the Americans with Disabilities Act prove to be more lenient than Titles I and II.

Title III of the ADA creates equal access to businesses within the United States, yet it does so only for certain buildings or without deadlines.

Alan Schlobohm, employment and training liaison for the Kansas Commission on Disability Concerns, said the organization was established so people could have an outlet to voice their concerns.

"We educate people with disabilities, organizations, private businesses and government entities about the rights and responsibilities under the ADA," he said.

Schlobohm said the businesses under Title III include public accommodations and commercial facilities.

They don't, however, have as many guidelines to follow as those under Title I and II have, he said.

"Within Title III, they're saying that there's a standard of performance called a readily achievable standard, which means that the places of public accommodation are required to do what they can afford to do on their existing buildings," Schlobohm said.

"In other words, the standard is, they remove barriers to the extent that it is easily accomplished without much difficulty or expense," he said.

Schlobohm said the broadest area of businesses under Title III is commercial facilities.

"The definition for a commercial facility is any place that affects commerce and has a potential for employment," he said. "A sub-category of commercial facilities is places of public accommodation."

Some examples of commercial facilities include office buildings, factories and warehouses.

He said guidelines for commercial facilities apply only to new construction.

"Under Title III, existing commercial facilities don't have any barrier-removal requirements," he said, "but places of public accommodation do."

Of the new construction, Schlobohm said one of the things businesses are having to do is look at whether or not their doors are accessible.

"Are they wide enough to accommodate a person in a wheelchair? Is the threshold too high? Is there a step up or down?" he said.

Schlobohm said the most commonly asked question deals with restroom accessibility in buildings.

He said businesses think they must reconstruct the entire facility.

"They forget that the guidelines are just that," he said. "They're a guideline that says if you can't do it the exact way, you try to do it the best you can and find an alternative that is acceptable."

On the other hand, public accommodations must

Series update

As a service to our readers, we will run a summary of the previous parts of the ADA series.

PART III
- The City of Manhattan felt a sense of urgency to comply with Title II of the Americans with Disabilities Act when a judge ruled in favor of a lawsuit against the city this summer.
- Title II of the ADA mandates that all public entities, including state and local governments, school districts and public universities, protect the rights of disabled people.

PART II
- The needs of disabled people for employment opportunities are slowly but surely being met by Title I of the ADA.
- An estimated 49 million disabled Americans are protected under the ADA.

PART I
- The construction of buildings on campus is complying with the ADA.
- All construction must comply with the guidelines of the ADA, said Jerry Carter, director of facilities planning and University architect.

Goals met through cooperation

ANNETTE RIEDL
Collegian

The cooperation between faculty, staff and administration has helped turn K-State around, meet its goals and plan for the future, President Jon Wefald said at the State of the University address.

About 100 people attended the address Wednesday in the K-State Union Forum Hall.

Faculty Senate President Dennis Kuhlman introduced Wefald, Provost James Coffman, and Rich Seidler, Co-Chair of the Mayor's Economic Development Task Force.

Wefald said he believed that the 1994 Kansas Legislative session was one of the best in recent years.

"As a state university, the most important determinant of our funding and our financial condition are the actions of the state Legislature," Wefald said.

"The final appropriation for K-State included an unclassified salary increase of 5 percent for ranked faculty and 4 percent for other unclassified personnel," Wefald said.

Establishing a special fund for the research at K-State and KU is also in the budget, he said.

"I think we have gained tremendous momentum at K-State by increasing the enrollment, changing our public image and raising the private funds for an extraordinarily successful Essential Edge campaign," Wefald said.

He went on to discuss the building projects underway at K-State.

"In just a few weeks, we will be dedicating the $28-million addition to Throckmorton Plant Sciences Building," he said.

"We have sought and received regents approval for the first phase of a $30-million

NEWS BRIEFS

▶ Z-BAR BILL EXPECTED TO BE DELAYED UNTIL 1995 CONGRESSIONAL SESSION

WICHITA (AP) — Supporters of the proposed Flint Hills prairie park are prepared for another delay, since time has almost run out this year for Congress to approve the plan.

No hearings on the issue are scheduled in the House or Senate, and Congress is expected to adjourn next week.

"Given the time left in the legislative session, I suspect this bill will have to carry over until next year," said Mike Horak, a spokesman for Sen. Nancy Kassebaum, who's led the effort to craft a compromise.

The groups had hoped Congress would link the 11,000-acre Z Bar Ranch site with the National Park Service, open it to visitors and let the park service manage it.

In the meantime, opponents of the park plan — primarily Kansas farm groups — last week met privately with the Kansas delegation and nature groups. The only issue that remains unsettled is the park service's requirement that it buy 180 acres of Z Bar Ranch property for its buildings.

▶ CU PSYCHOLOGY PROFESSOR SETTLES HARASSMENT SUIT OUT OF COURT

BOULDER, Colo. (AP) — A psychology professor from the University of Colorado settled a lawsuit for $85,000 in cash and $2,500 per month for the rest of her life.

She had accused the university of harassing her for seeking higher pay for women employees.

In return for the money, Ann Boggiano, 50, agreed to resign next August, even though she has had tenure for a decade.

Boggiano said the university waged a vicious, unrelenting, retaliatory harassment campaign to force her to leave, chiefly because of her work on behalf of women, whom she said were discriminated against in hiring and tenure.

She said university officials denied her request to postpone a sabbatical while she was dealing with the death of a son and insinuated to professional journals that she falsified information in a research paper.

The terms of the confidential Sept. 1 settlement were reported Monday in the Boulder Daily Camera.

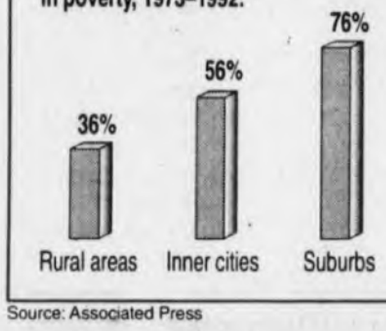
NEW YORK (AP) — A 13-year-old carrying a toy rifle was killed by a police officer, and another teenager was in serious condition today after a similar shooting by police.

Nicholas Heyward died this morning from a gunshot wound in his chest, police spokesman Sgt. James Coleman said.

Housing officer, Brian George, 23, shot Nicholas Tuesday night in a dimly-lit stairwell of a housing project in the Brooklyn borough, housing police spokeswoman Det. Sonya Burgos said.

"Obviously George thought he was in danger. That's why he did what he did," said Lt. Tom Sbordone.



Hours later, three officers in another part of Brooklyn spotted a 16-year-old with a gun in his belt and chased him over fences and through yards, Coleman said.

When the youth, Jamal Johnson, reached toward his waist, one of the officers fired once and hit him in the stomach. Police said they found a toy 9mm pistol he had been carrying.

MORE CHILDREN LIVING IN POVERTY

The overall percentage of children living below the poverty line rose 49 percent from 1973 to 1992. The greatest increase was in the suburbs.

Increase in share of children in poverty, 1973–1992:

Percentage of suburban children in poverty:

1973: 8 percent below poverty line ($4,540)

1992: 13 percent below poverty line ($13,355)

The Urban Plunge involves K-State students in a program that has them experience life as a homeless person.

Weekend on the streets teaches homelessness

DEBBIE PILANT
Collegian

Sure, college students are poor. But try being homeless.

For the first time in more than 20 years, the Urban Plunge program, sponsored by the National Coalition for the Homeless, will include K-State students.

An Urban Plunge is when economically privileged people spend time on the streets as poor people, according to an informational packet provided by the coalition.

The event will take place Oct. 7-9. Cindy Meyer, campus minister, said participants will be going to either Salina or Topeka, depending on the size of the group.

Meyer said there are currently six participants.

She said the Plunge is designed to serve several purposes. It is designed to help participants better understand the hardships of living on the street and allow them to gain firsthand knowledge of the growing problem of homelessness.

The experience allows participants to see the world through the eyes of a homeless person. Meyer said that will help sensitize them to the problem by putting it on a personal level.

She said past Plunges have been successful.

"Last fall, seven people came from McPherson College," she said.

In an article describing their experience, they said they were surprised at how fast they got worn down physically, mentally and emotionally.

Meyer hopes everyone who participates will grow as a result of the Plunge.

"I hope participants will look beyond themselves and learn to experience life from a different perspective," she said. "I also hope it encourages them to become active in changing things that cause homelessness in our society."

Meyer said there are many things those who participate can do to get the most from the experience.

One way to do this is to talk with and listen to other homeless people.

"Since participants are only experiencing the homeless lifestyle for two days, it is hard to gain a real understanding of it without talking to them," Meyer said.

She also suggested begging for money, talking to as many non-homeless people as possible, trying to apply for jobs at fast-food restaurants, eating at local soup kitchens and trying to use bathrooms at fancy restaurants and business offices.

Plungers won't be allowed to sleep in shelters, Meyer said. This is so Plungers don't take beds away from those that need them.

Meyer said people are often concerned with their safety while participating in the event.

"In the 20 years of the program, no one has been hurt," she said.

The group is split into teams of two, and the team members look out for each other.

Michael Stoops, director of field organizing for the coalition, will be participating, Meyer said.

"His job is to help coordinate what goes on, and encourage people to become activists for the cause," she said.

She said there will be a meeting next week to give participants an orientation to the program and to familiarize people with what goes on during a Plunge.

THE PLUNGE

Anyone wanting to participate in the Urban Plunge can call Cindy Meyer, campus minister, at 776-9278. Today is the last day to sign up.

Cars keyed in B-2, 3

CORI CORNELISON
Collegian

Several students who park on campus have reported their automobiles have been keyed.

The majority of the reports have been from students who park in Lot B-2 and B-3, Richard Herrman, investigator for the K-State police department, said.

"A lot of the cases are simply drunks coming back from Aggieville and scratching cars on their way in from B-3," Herrman said.

Some of the cases reported have been from housing staff, which probably was retaliation against one of the staff members, but the majority are not directed at anyone, Herrman said.

"Some of these incidents are possibly directed towards someone. The majority are just random and not directed specifically at the owners of the car."

Detecting an individual keying a car is very hard, so the cameras monitoring the parking lots are not of much help, Robert Mellgren, captain of K-State Police, said.

The cost of repairing an automobile that has been scratched by a key depends on the size and location of the scratch, Darrell Schroll, owner of Schroll's Body and Paint in Manhattan, said. When a scratch is repaired the entire panel has to be painted, he said.

"Just a scratch can cost a person $100," Schroll said.

Penalties for criminal damage to property depend on past record and the damage severity, Herrman said. If the damage is more than $500, it would be a felony and could be a maximum sentence of up to five years in jail. If the damage was less than $500, it would be a misdemeanor with a maximum of one year in jail.

Car stereos ripped off

CORI CORNELISON
Collegian

Stereo equipment was stolen from five cars parked in Lot B-3 late Monday night or early Tuesday morning.

K-State police officers discovered five vehicles broken into Tuesday morning, Richard Herrman, investigator for the K-State Police, said.

The five owners of the vehicles reported a net loss of $4,955 for the stereo equipment and $1,050 for total damages to the vehicles.

Herrman said he believes all five of the crimes are related and were committed by the same group of people.

"I think there was more than one person involved, and they came in several vehicles and left," Herrman said.

The campus police are following leads and hope to close the case by the end of the week, Herrman said.

"So far, we've compiled reports and are reviewing the tapes," Herrman said. "We hope to be able to come to a fairly reasonable conclusion to this at the end of the week."

IN OUR OPINION

By the Collegian Editorial Board

UPC concert needs good attendance

The UPC sponsored concert will be 7 p.m. today on the north lawn of the Union. Show up and get what you paid for.

Tonight is your chance to improve K-State's live-music scene. The Chicago-based alternative rock band, The Drovers, will play from 7 to 8:30 p.m. on the north lawn of the Union.

Although it is necessary for students to be vocal about their desires to have access to more live music, actions speak louder than words.

When there's a band playing on campus, students need to support it. If performances are enjoyed by masses of people, bands will want to return, and others will want to play here. The best way to encourage these bands is simply to attend their concerts and have a good time.

Tonight's concert has another big draw for college students — it's free. The Drovers' concert is sponsored by the Union Program Council Eclectic Entertainment Committee. Because students paid an activities fee to UPC at the beginning of the semester, they have actually already paid their admissions to this outdoor concert.

The logical thing for students to do would be to take advantage of this entertainment for which they have already paid.

If you're low on cash, hungry for live music, or both, then be on the Union's north lawn at 7 p.m.

If you're not there, may you never utter another criticism of Manhattan's music scene.

'Nekkid Disciples' look for new members

Some of you may recall, about this same time last year as a matter of fact, reading about a carload of 20 naked (pronounced NEKKID) Pentecostal Christians from Floydada, Texas, (all of whom were relatives ranging in age from 1 year to 65, including three pregnant women and five children), fleeing from the devil and being stopped by the police (pronounced PO-lease) in Vinton, La. I was so moved by The Spirit after reading about it that I wrote a column inviting everyone to join my new church, The Nekkid Disciples of Christ.

BRAD SEABOURN

Well, hold on to your seats, folks, because here we go again. The following recently appeared in the news:

Associated Press (Sept. 22, 1994)

DALLAS — Myra Obasi said she was possessed by a demon when her eyeballs were gouged out of their sockets and left in a wastebasket.

Doretha Crawford and Beverly Johnson, both of Arcadia, La., were convicted Wednesday of aggravated assault. A woman had testified she saw the sisters pummeling and praying with an unresisting Ms. Obasi. Ms. Obasi told police her sisters gouged out her eyes to free her from the devil.

The sisters' terrible odyssey began March 17, when they left their pine-forested town of 3,000 people because they believed a devil was trying to kill them.

Their father, Chester Crawford, suggested they visit a man named Benny, described as a "voodoo" or "hoodoo" man. Hoodoo combines elements of voodoo, an African-rooted faith modified in Haiti, with Biblical verse and Catholicism.

Crawford said he thought Benny could ease family tension. "Benny's supposed to be a spiritual man," Crawford said. "I thought I was doing something to help my kids."

After Benny said the family's problems were due to a demonic attack, Crawford told his daughters to flee. They did and took their five children. During the two-day trip, the women — afraid the devil had caught up with them — left their children with strangers in Marshall, Texas, about 90 miles from home.

The sisters then set out for a friend's house near Dallas. Suddenly, Ms. Obasi began trying to drive into traffic and off bridges, they said. Her sisters calmed her down and they wound up in Waxahachie, about 30 miles south of Dallas, where police saw their stopped car. They told the officers there was a curse on the rental car. The jury was told the starter was bad.

The siblings then hitchhiked into Dallas, about 200 miles from where they started, where they were seen praying and begging for help. Legayla Jones testified that she watched the sisters shout and pray for about seven hours across the street from her house before they pushed garlic into Ms. Obasi's eyes and paper down her throat. Her eyes were removed by something sharp, possibly fingernails, doctors testified. Ms. Obasi testified her sisters never had long fingernails, nor any sharp objects with them.

Like me, I am sure all of you are thankful they weren't naked. Only the Lord knows what would have happened if three naked women had hitchhiked into Dallas, prayed on the street for seven hours, and THEN began shoving garlic into one of their naked member's eyes and paper down her throat. Powerful, mysterious, ridiculous rituals like that have been known to cause huge flocks of sheep — I mean people — to start an entirely new religious faith.

Indeed, as I think about it, this seems to be just the thing my new church could incorporate to give it the eye-catching notoriety, so to speak, it deserves.

Therefore, let me once again announce the official re-formation of a new church called THE BLIND AND NEKKID DISCIPLES OF CHRIST. In celebration of this momentous event, I am planning to have a "Get Blind And Nekkid For Jesus" Day at 1 p.m. Saturday in front of the K-State Union. We are going to get BUCK NEKKID, pray, eat, sing hymns and dance, and then just before we pack as many NEKKID bodies as possible into tiny cars for a grand cruise through Aggieville, we are going to pluck out eyeballs like nobody's business.

This should not only greatly enhance our ability to drive directly into oncoming traffic and off bridges, but should also facilitate our chances of being arrested as well.

Like any religion, I must raise the issue of MONEY. As in my previous announcement last year, we have arranged for your convenience not one, but TWO, 900 numbers with BLIND and NEKKID operators standing by to take your donation.

Please call 1-900 GET-NUDE, or 1-900-GO-BLIND. Visa and MasterCard are accepted. Please have your name, card number and the name and location of your mental hospital ready for our operators.

While you ponder this generous invitation, please keep in mind the religious motto of The Blind And Nekkid Disciples of Christ: "Yea, verily, verily, if the Lord thoughteth ye nededeth clothing and eyeballs, thou wouldst have been born swaddled in Levis and with more eyeballs than 10 spiders."

On second thought, eyeball-plucking will be optional for church membership ... kind of takes all the fun out of getting together and praying NEKKID, if you know what I mean.

▶ PARKING

Tickets soak up big wad of cash

Dear Editor,

Parking. So trivial – just a doormat to the classroom. A thoughtless task anywhere else in the solar system. A necessary evil. A pain in the ass that has cost me $45 in five days. I can eat all week on $45. I wonder what the school has done with the revenue. Painting the construction wall purple? Tearing it down? Putting up another wall? A new parking lot?

Don't tease me. The last thing the students need is a place to park. Why aren't we even tearing some parking lots down? When you get $15 per ticket, why not? I see those parking attendants roaming the lots constantly like scavengers. We're on a first-name basis now, and they really like me. Maybe they work on commission. Hey, I know it's not fair to accuse the gun and not the hand, but I can't afford sympathy. In five more days, I probably won't be able to afford gas for my car, so maybe my problem is solved. I have three 7:30s and two 8:05s a week, and I can't find a spot to park twice a week so I know 75 percent of the student population has a worse time. To the students: Let's get involved and make some changes.

▶ AFFIRMATIVE ACTION

Reader should be prepared for future

Dear Editor,

This is in response to Mike Braman's letter, Sept. 26. I mean "ignorant" as in "misinformed." Braman's opposition to the University's attempt at "creating" diversity is understandable. You don't create diversity because it's been around since the beginning of time. However, what he failed to consider is that, just maybe, someone other than a white male could be more qualified for a job, at any level.

A non-white, non-male type person should not have to settle for a lower form of employment just because somebody decides to whine and blame his failure to get hired on someone else.

Let's not kid ourselves, though. This is not an idealistic society, and we cannot afford to fool ourselves into thinking that everyone can be evaluated based on the contents of their mind and level of education. There are still too many narrow-minded people judging others on the basis of skin color and sex for that to happen. I would think that Braman would have a little more sense than to think that women and so-called minorities (there are more "minorities" everywhere ... that word should be defunct by now) could not be as, if not more, qualified for a position than a white male. To assume that people obtain employment due SOLELY to their sex, race, color or creed is utterly ludicrous.

Braman, educate and prepare yourself for the real work force. Be prepared for cultural diversity because it is everywhere, and attempts to escape are futile.

▶ THE WALL

Individuals showed restraint

Dear Editor,

The wall is gone, and it was looking so good. Too bad. From the timing, one may assume that parents were not meant to view the decorated wall. People who have raised and probably lived with the decorators for almost 20 years. One may also assume the person who ordered the wall removed has been spending OPM (other people's money; this includes parents') for so long that he has lost his sense of prudence and character assessment. Rather than recognize the maturity and restraint shown by those who embellish a temporary wall instead of a permanent one, an issue of free expression has been created out of acts of good-natured frivolity.

Get arrested, get your sport famous

SCOTT ALLEN MILLER

Football is arguably the most popular K-State sport.

Three members of K-State's football team have been arrested in the past few months for driving while intoxicated. Anyone see a connection?

Let's say you're a member of the K-State sumo-wrestling team, an organization so obscure that most people haven't even heard of it. You go out there in your purple diaper with Willie the Wildcat on it every week or so and grunt and push people around, but no one ever shows up for your matches.

Some ignorant people think that anyone who simply uses their gross excess of weight to push people around requires no athletic ability. That shows what some people know about being a linebacker. Football and sumo wrestling actually require many skills of the mind and body.

But because football is so big, you'll never get the word out about sumo wrestling, unless you take drastic measures soon. What better way to get some interest in K-State sumo wrestling than being named in a police report?

Now mind you, no one should actually commit a crime. After all, you need only be accused of a crime. Learn from the success of other K-State athletes, and get accused of driving while intoxicated.

How can you do it without losing your driver's license, paying a fine, going to jail and paying higher insurance premiums? You're a K-State student. You must be smart. If not, try this:

Some Friday or Saturday night when you are perfectly sober, take a drive through Aggieville around 2 a.m. (Make sure you wear your seatbelt.) When you spot a police car on patrol, weave around from left to right in your lane.

Don't put anyone or anything in danger, mind you. Just draw some attention to yourself. Try turning your hazards on at an intersection, and try to turn both ways. That always works.

When the officer pulls you over, pretend to be passed out. Take a few seconds to "come to," then act disoriented.

When asked if you've been drinking, tell the truth, and say no. It's against the law to lie to an officer, after all. Hand the officer your K-State ID instead of your driver's license. Be polite. Be catatonic.

When the cop asks you to step out of your car, open the door, and fall on the pavement. Then, politely mumble something about not being able to make practice tomorrow.

Botch all the tests they give you. Passing the breathalyzer test, you will confuse the cop, but if you fall down a few times, the officer will think it was a fluke. If the cop is still unconvinced, mention that you're a K-State athlete. That should do it.

You'll spend an evening in the Riley County Jail. It's usually quieter than most residence halls are, so sweet dreams.

Soon your name, mug shot and sport will be in the local newspapers. You won't get the front-page headlines that our football players have, because you're only a sumo wrestler. Everyone has to start somewhere, like the back page.

There is an advantage to being an unknown athlete in an unknown sport in this situation. Your arrest will get no coverage outside of Manhattan, so your parents will probably never find out about it, unless you're a townie. That's always a bummer. If this is the case, try getting arrested in Wamego. No one ever hears news from Wamego. The Collegian will tell your story if you call it in as a news tip.

If your coach is like K-State football coach Bill Snyder, you won't have to worry about being suspended from the team or anything. You'll keep right on sumo wrestling like nothing ever happened unless a jury finds you guilty, which it won't.

When enough of your fellow team members get arrested, your sport will be famous, or maybe just infamous. People will show up to see just who these fat guys with the reputation for heavy drinking are, anyway.

They'll say, "Hey, I bet that guy in the purple diaper can really put it away, can't he?" They'll laugh and have a good ol' time at your matches. Some of them might start attending regularly.

This applies to other unpopular K-State sports. Imagine the suddenly larger crowds and their responses.

"Is that the miler who outran the cops?"

"I heard that batter just beat the tar out of her neighbor one night."

"That's the swimmer who was accused of burying his victim on the bottom of Tuttle Creek Reservoir."

All you have to do is get yourself in trouble with the law, and you'll be on the way to the Wheaties boxes. As O.J. Simpson, Mike Tyson and Pete Rose have learned, some courtroom stats can make you a legend. Be sure to get a good lawyer.

Scott Allen Miller is a junior in radio/television.

▶ LIVE MUSIC

High-energy band to rock K-State students, campus

AMY ZIEGLER
Collegian

Imagine a rock band with an Irish influence and a violin, and you'll get the Drovers, a band that has revolutionized the Chicago scene in its five years of existence.

Known for their energetic performances, the Drovers have entertained audiences in college towns and cities across the country and have been named one of the hottest combos in Chicago by Billboard magazine.

At 7 p..m,Thursday on the north lawn of the Union, K-State students will get the opportunity to experience the energy of the Chicago-based Drovers.

Lynn Deasy, publicist for the Drovers, said the band has gained attention for the style of its live performances.

"They have gotten a lot of acclaim for the energy of their live shows. They are different from other bands because they encompass so many sounds and styles and have improvisational jams," Deasy said.

The band has not only earned recognition for its music, but it has also appeared on the silver screen.

The Drovers made a brief appearance in the film "Backdraft," and the members starred as themselves in the movie "Blink," in March 1993.

During the production of "Blink," the band stayed in a luxury hotel, had unlimited access to a wet bar and were driven around in a limo.

"We were treated like total stars. It was a once in a lifetime experience," vocalist Dave Callahan said.

The Drovers savored their time in the movie industry, but for the moment, they have decided to focus on their music.

"It was a fun experience, but it didn't change my life. If the movie would have been Forrest Gump, things might have been different," Sean Cleland, violin, said.

The band not only has drums and guitars, but also features a fiddle and a violin, which gives the band a distinct sound.

"A lot of times, violin players in rock music have weird roles, but we wanted a band that would be serious about showcasing a violin," Callahan said.

Cleland said it's unusual how the Drovers incorporate the violin in the band.

"In most groups, violins have wimpy, orchestra string parts which float behind everything else. In the Drovers, it's one of the main voices along with the electric guitar and is treated like a lead instrument," Cleland said.

The Drovers

The band has kept the same Irish style music during the five years that it has been together but has had two different drummers.

Paul Bradley, who was originally hired as an intern to publicize the band, is now the drummer for the Drovers.

After working as an intern, he was promoted to be a booking agent and then asked to fill in as a drummer.

"It's fun to step into a band so well-established across the country who is playing a lot of great shows. It's very exciting to go from a booking agent to being an actual member of a band," he said.

The band still books its own shows and has independently released an album titled "World of Monsters," and an EP named "Kill Mice Elf."

"We didn't want to wait for a label to sign us because everything cost us so much, and we felt better about doing it ourselves. It was just like the good old days — putting out our own record on our own label," Callahan said.

The Drovers have sold 20,000 compact discs and 7,000 EPs since their albums first hit the market.

"The industry claims we have fans all over," Cleland said.

The Drovers have performed before a variety of audiences, but prefer all ages and outdoor shows.

"I hate playing in bars because I hate the fact that the people in the bar have to be a certain age to be there. I like playing outdoors because anyone and everyone can come see our music," Cleland said.

Cleland said he also enjoys touring around the country.

"I like getting to go around the country and communicate with different walks of life, meet and connect with all kinds of people and get the flavor of different places," Cleland said.

Callahan said he also has a passion for traveling on the road.

"I like being free and not attached to anything. It's cool to get to go to a new place every day and do a show for people I've never met," Callahan said.

Callahan said he has always been into music and believes it takes persistence to succeed as a band.

"In order to succeed in the music world, a lot of it is deciding you're going to do it. Talent will take you as far as it can, but in the end, you have to say yes to what it takes and not get caught up in how hard it is," Callahan said.

Interior architecture students win 4 international awards

KIMBERLY WISHART
Collegian

K-State interior architecture students brought home four awards given at the International Woodworking Fair in Atlanta, Ga., in August.

"This year, the competition was run a little differently," Steve Murphy, interior architecture department head, said.

"There were 213 entries from 44 different universities from all over the U.S.," he said. "There was a prejudging in April that was done from photographs. We were fortunate to have 16 finalists."

Erica Shehan, senior, won second place in the ready-to-assemble category for her collapsible table.

"I designed it thinking of my apartment. You can make it larger or smaller depending on space," Shehan said.

"It holds magazines on the side. You can see them, but they're not sitting out on top."

Shehan spent six hours a week for three quarters of last semester designing the table, she said. It is in two L-shaped pieces that can fit together, touch corners or be completely separate.

"I think that put me over the edge," she said. "The other table could be made taller or shorter or the legs could be moved around, but my table gets larger or smaller."

Shehan said she also designed the table with the college student in mind.

"I was thinking of something practical that you could put your beer on, stand on or sit on," Shehan said. "It would be great if it could get it into Wal-Mart."

The table, which Shehan said collapses down to about six inches, is made from wood held together with hinges, with the top made of a more durable material, called laminate.

Shehan said she paid a small price to make the table because the black laminate was donated to Shehan by Wilson Art, and the only other costs were the basic $25 shop fee and another $35 to buy the hinges.

Shehan won $500 for her second-place award.

"I put it in the bank," she said. "I'd like to go on Spring Break. In all my seven years at college, I've never been on a spring break."

Since winning, Shehan said she has been offered some freelance work.

"Case Logic, who makes CD cases, called and asked me to do some freelance designs," Shehan said. "If I can just sell the table now and pay off those student loans."

Murphy said the woodworking fair is the largest trade show in the western hemisphere, with 45,000 people from 55 countries.

"It's not open to the general public," he said. "Only people involved in the business can go. They have to make hotel reservations two years in advance."

The fair takes place every two years, so the other three K-State winning entries were designed by graduates.

Brent Allison, July 1993 graduate who won first place in the contract furniture category, was awarded $1,250 and an acrylic trophy for his black leather "Bel-Air" chair.

Richard Burgess, May 1994 graduate, won third place and $250 in the seating category for his upholstered chair.

Jim Dey, May 1994 graduate, won third place and $250 in the case goods category for his adjustable-shelving unit.

The furniture entries are on display in Durgan Center on the second floor of Seaton Hall.

"Anybody is welcome to come and look at them," Judy Roland, departmental secretary, said. "They'll probably only be on display until the first part of October because students want to take them home."

Shehan, who uses the table as a coffee table in her living room, said she wants to take the pieces back because her husband has two chairs on display, also.

"Our living room is empty," she said, "but our dog loves it."

Plague outbreak has not spread to American shores

ASSOCIATED PRESS

ATLANTA — Federal health officials started meeting planes arriving from India on Tuesday and haven't found any cases of passengers bringing pneumonic plague to the United States.

India's first outbreak in 30 years had killed 54 people Tuesday and forced hundreds into hospitals. The disease is easily treated with antibiotics. It is spread by fleas that bite infected rats, or from person-to-person by airborne bacteria.

It spread in India because many rural areas lack the proper medicine, but it also occurs naturally in the United States, with about 15 confirmed cases reported this year, said Dr. Duane Gubler, a plague expert with the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention at a field station in Fort Collins, Colo.

The outbreak in India, however, is prompting increased U.S. watchfulness. All direct flights from India were being met by health officials.

"To date we have not detected any cases," Gubler said.

If any cases were discovered at U.S. airports, the victim would be treated under quarantine and his fellow passengers would be monitored, officials said.

Health officials are relying on the airlines to help catch plague cases.

"The airlines are supposed to notify the public health service if anyone on board is ill," Gubler said.

Fans return home for football fix

The things we go through to see a college football game.

We're forced to park in cow pastures a good mile away, kick other fans out of our seats or get kicked out ourselves and pay outrageous prices for a cold hot dog and a pop.

Of course, Coach Snyder's Wildcats make this entire ordeal worthwhile when they perform like they did last weekend.

But once again, the Cats are off this weekend, leaving most Manhattan residents without their Saturday football fix.

Not to worry, though. If you just have to go watch a football game this weekend, I've got the perfect solution — hometown high school football.

Don't laugh. Just think — how long has it been since you attended a high school football game? Probably not since your high school graduation.

So just in case you've forgotten what it was like under those Friday, night lights, try to remember back when you could hit the pregame watermelon feed sponsored by the athletic booster club.

NICOLE POELL

There was always some random Trojan booster club promotion going on before our high school games, from the Beef Producers' "Eat Beef" night, to the soap scrimmage — you name it, and they did it.

When you could pay $5 dollars admittance for the entire family.

If my brothers and I were good during the game, Dad would spring for Pepsi's and popcorn all around, making us twice as hyper as we already were.

When your mom would sit and gossip with the other football mothers, missing all the big plays in the process.

My mom, bless her heart, tried so hard to concentrate on the game, but the latest rumor going around town was much more exciting to her and all the other moms.

But it never failed — before the night was over, Mom would always manage to embarrass my dad by yelling, "Oh, we got a homerun!"

When the game's announcer became more intoxicated with every play as he downed Firewater in the press box.

I still haven't forgiven our good old play-by-play man in Pleasantville, Iowa, for introducing me as "Picole Nail," during my Homecoming royalty walk down the 50-yard line.

When you would politely applaud the band after its moving halftime rendition of "Love Bites."

I kid you not — this actually happened at an away game I was cheering at in Iowa. Let me tell you, the trombone part on that just rocked.

When the high school freshmen got all foxed up for a night of romance.

These kids were more interested in walking around the track and picking up than watching the game. From what I remember, when you did pick up, you went out behind the bus barn and ... well, moving on...

When all the little kids from town would start their own football games on the hill.

My baby brother would die if he couldn't lead his classmates in their own little gridiron battles.

No, he's there to get bloody-nosed and dirty against those other brutal seventh graders anxious for football glory.

When all the college kids came back for Homecoming, wearing their new sorority or fraternity sweatshirts and trying to act like they didn't miss their high school days anymore.

Believe me, we did.

Wildcats knock off Wichita State

JEREMY CRABTREE
Collegian

The K-State volleyball team bounced back from an upset loss to Oral Roberts with 3-0 blanking of Wichita State Wednesday.

Coach Jim Moore said the win was exactly what the Wildcats needed after the loss.

"We played really strong in the first and second games," Moore said. "It was good to get things back on track after the match against Oral Roberts."

With the Cats capturing the first game, K-State jumped out to a 9-3 lead in game two. However, the Shockers answered with a six-point rally to even the score at 9-9.

From that point on, the game was tight, until Wichita State took a 16-15 lead. The Cats then forced a side-out and scored the next three points to win the game.

Moore said the end of the second game was the turning point.

"We were down, but we managed to rally at a crucial time," Moore said. "We go from tied to winning the game.

"That was a huge momentum lift."

With the momentum, the Cats ripped through the Shockers in the third game. K-State jumped out early with seven straight points to take a 8-1 lead.

After a Wichita State score, the Cats added five more points to take a 13-2 lead.

K-State finally wrapped the match up with a 15-9 victory.

"They came out deflated in the third game," Moore said. "The end of the second game was important. We just carried the momentum right into the third game."

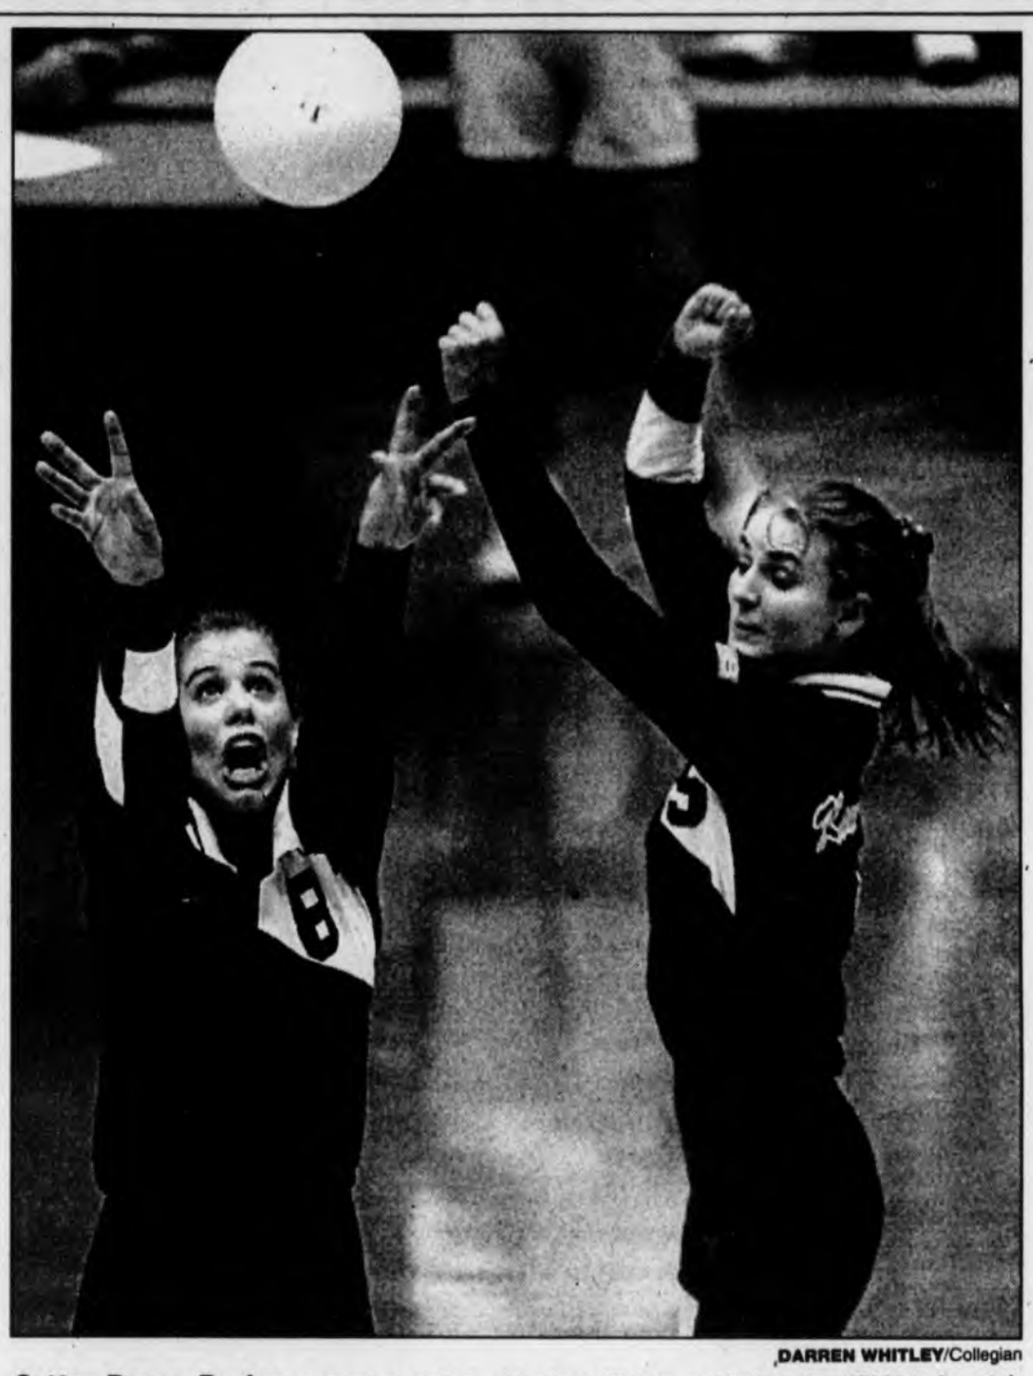
In the first game, the Cats and the Shockers battled neck and neck, before K-State scored the last two points of the game to win 15-13.

"The first game was very close," Moore said. "It was back and forth the entire game.

"We then got down, but we never panicked. I wasn't worried."

The first game also featured 47 side-outs between the two teams. In fact, at one point early in the game, the two teams traded side-outs seven times in a row.

"We went through five rotations," Moore said. "The most rotations that I've ever been through is six and a half."



Moore said the numerous side-outs were good practice for future opponents.

"It was really the first time all season that we forced someone to side-out," Moore said. "To beat good teams, we will have to force them to side-out, and we did that tonight."

Leading the Cats with 21 kills was sophomore Yolanda Young. Young also had 38 attacks for a .447 kill percentage, which also led the team.

"Without Toy (Yolanda) we don't do as well," Moore said. "She really hits the ball hard. She has also taken many steps forward since the first day of practice."

Also playing a big role in the Cats attack against the Shockers was freshman Devon Ryning. She finished with 46 assists to set a school record for assists in three games.

Former coach passes away after heart attack

WESS HUDELSON
Collegian

Former K-State assistant basketball coach Ken Turner, who had a heart attack while jogging a week ago, died Wednesday in Grant Medical Center in Columbus, Ohio. He was 48.

Turner

Turner joined the K-State coaching staff in April 1990. He accepted the job of chief recruiter and assistant coach at Ohio State last June after Coach Dana Altman departed for Creighton.

"I had a pretty good relationship with him," K-State guard Belvis Noland said. "I respected him as a coach and as a player."

Turner had been listed in critical condition since he was admitted Sept. 21. He collapsed while jogging near his home in suburban Westerville, Ohio.

Bob Krause, vice president of institutional advancement, said Turner will be missed.

"It's a tragedy," Krause said. "You couldn't find a man more dedicated to his family, his career and his players.

"He will be missed by a whole host of people," he said.

Turner was a native of Cincinnati.

He played his college games at Southwestern State in Weatherford, Okla. He an assistant at the University of Cincinnati, Oklahoma Christian, Oklahoma State, Mississippi and South Alabama and Southwest State.

Turner is survived by his wife, Margaret, and children, Kenneth II, 14, and Kanndra, 10.

Thomas inspired by grandma

ASSOCIATED PRESS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Amid the stress and violence of the NFL, Derrick Thomas found strength in his grandmother's gentle words.

"My grandma always told me that sometimes, you just have to be bigger," Thomas, Kansas City's All-Pro linebacker, said.

Grandma's advice was essential last year to the Chiefs' team unity. First, the Chiefs signed Joe Montana and Marcus Allen, meaning Thomas suddenly was no longer Kansas City's marquee player.

Then, coaches decided to shift him from linebacker to defensive end, which was much, much harder to accept.

A pass rusher deluxe, his sack production dropped to a career-low eight, and his morale plunged to sub-zero.

He fumed. He fussed. But never in public, always in private.

Then, when he was benched in the last half of the AFC title game at Buffalo, he felt as embarrassed as he'd ever felt on a football field.

But taking his grandmother's counsel and keeping mum, he never went public with his displeasure.

Coaches appreciated it. This year, they moved him back to linebacker, and once again, he is at the top of his Pro Bowl skills.

"There's no need of recapping what happened last year," said Thomas, who has four sacks in the Chiefs' first four games. "Talking about all that won't help us. Now I'm back to where I should be, and it's up to me to play back to the level I'm capable of."

The first man drafted by the Chiefs after Carl Peterson and Coach Marty Schottenheimer took over the team in 1989, Thomas has never failed to make the Pro Bowl. He ought to be a lock this time.

"The last three weeks, he's made every play he was supposed to make, with the exception of one swing pass the Rams hit the other day," Schottenheimer said.

"I think he's made every other play he should have made and a handful of others that were the result of great determination and ability. He has played outstanding football," he said.

Besides his four sacks, Thomas has caused two fumbles, forced three others and pressured the quarterback into throwing before he was ready more than a dozen times.

Ironically, most of his sacks have come off the defensive-end position, where the Chiefs played him because of the unusual offensive sets presented by San Francisco and Atlanta.

"I want to get back to where I was. I want to get back to the top. It's eating me up not to be mentioned with the great linebackers. I have team goals, and I have goals for the organization. But if I can attain my personal goals, it will all come together."

▶ WALK-ON FEATURE

Player makes team, earns assistant coach spot

COLLEGIAN STAFF

Brooke Brundige, senior in art and a second-year walk-on for the K-State tennis team, has dealt with adversity.

The year is new though, and she is no longer afraid to confront adversity.

After two years at K-State, the soft-spoken 21-year-old said she felt something was lacking, and she made a decision that would forever affect her outlook on life.

"I missed tennis, I missed the competition," Brundige said.

Brundige is no stranger to competition as she was named to the all-conference tennis team four years and was an all-conference basketball selection twice during her high school career.

The problem — she hadn't picked up a racquet in nearly two years. Did she have the talent to play at the Big Eight level?

"In high school it was a lot more laid back atmosphere, and we were a winning team only because we were self-motivated and worked to be a winning team," Brundige said.

After seeing what K-State had to offer, she knew she had her work cut out for her.

The first thing she said she had to do was to get noticed by the coach and make sure that he knew she was interested in walking on the team.

"I got Coach (Steve) Bietau's number and called him, and he didn't even know who I was," Brundige said.

"He told me that the assistant coach Susana Labrador was having a little informal practice with whoever wanted to go," she said.

However, she got nervous while driving to the practice and almost backed out of going.

"When I got to the rec and saw the team out there, I said, 'No way', but my friend that was with me physically pushed me out on the court and said I was going," Brundige said.

Right from that moment, she knew that she was going to be playing with some of the best players the nation had to offer, and sometimes it was going to be a humbling experience.

"The first couple of months I was on the team, I don't even think I won a set," Brundige said.

"I got killed every day, and one thing that I learned was a lot about humility and facing adversity," she said.

The next few months were a struggle as Brundige said she felt like she was losing confidence both on and off the court.

"It was hard to keep a positive outlook, and I remember when I would go out to practice and work my butt off, and still get beat everyday," Brundige said.

"I began to feel like I lost confidence in everything I was doing, and then one day I told myself that I hadn't picked up a racquet in two years and I needed to relax," she said.

Things gradually got better and began to improve for Brundige.

"I started occasionally beating people and then got in some matches where I played really well and I won a couple important matches," Brundige said.

She said she hopes the experiences and success can carry on to this season even though her role on the team has changed somewhat.

"Last year I was just a player, but this year I am an assistant coach/player," Brundige said.

"I hope to contribute a lot to the motivation of the team, something that we have really been working on in practice," she said.

Brundige said she feels as though tennis sometimes takes away from things that she would like to do, but it helps her keep her life in perspective.

"I think when you are spending three hours a day, six days a week committing your time to a sport, it is obviously going to take away from some things, but it has really helped me prioritize my time," Brundige said.

She is also quick to point out that she would recommend someone who was thinking about walking on to a team to do it, because the experiences are invaluable.

"I remember winning my first match against Creighton last year in three sets, and Karina, our No. 1 player, coming out on the court, and she said, 'Brooke, good job,'" Brundige said. "It was cool that everyone cared so much.

"I think experiences like those are a good thing and not just something that should be experienced by scholarship athletes," she said.

"I got killed every day, and one thing that I learned was a lot about humility and facing adversity."

BROOKE BRUNDIGE

At 6 a.m. Tuesday, Christine Hazlett, senior in pre-medicine, receives a chest wound via paint from a member of Fort Riley's medical company. Hazlett volunteered to participate in Riley County's full-scale disaster-preparedness exercise because she thought it would be fun.

THIS IS ONLY A TEST ...

At 8:01 a.m. Tuesday, Sept. 27, 1994, a series of devastating tornadoes struck the northern portion of Manhattan.

Yes, the sky was clear and it was a beautiful day, but for nearly 200 volunteers in the Riley County area, it really was a disaster.

It's called Operation Medicine Man II, a full-scale disaster exercise for government organizations, groups and agencies in Riley County to enhance emergency preparedness and learn valuable experience to better prepare for a disaster.

Throughout the staging, several "injured" people were transported from the Farm Bureau and KSU Foundation buildings to both the Saint Mary and Memorial hospitals by Riley County Emergency Medical Services and several Fort Riley units.

Both hospitals sustained structural damage from the tornado and had to evacuate patients to the alternate care facility in CiCo Park.

From there, patients were transferred to Irwin Army hospital.

Pat Collins, coordinator for the Riley County Emergency Preparedness Office, said RCEPO has led the planning of this exercise for the past two years.

Each county is required by the state to have a disaster drill once a year, Capt. Charles Beckom, K-State Police, said.

"Reviews of past experiences are gathered from surrounding places and formed into a scenario that fits the community's needs," he said.

Usually, a yearly drill is done on paper instead of a staged production like this; Beckom said.

Three years ago, Fort Riley had a similar exercise using assistance from only a few civilian agencies, Emergency Preparedness personnel Julie Eichem said.

This year, the civilian agencies have staged the exercise and asked for assistance from the military.

"We have never worked with the military like this before, and that's why it's such a big drill," she said. "Fort Riley is a wonderful facility to have so close."

The Emergency Preparedness agency members aren't the only people benefiting from the exercise.

Several students in the medical field are experiencing the victim's side of a disaster.

Christine Hazlett, senior in pre-med, heard about the exercise from her EMT instructor.

Her "injuries" were severe burns and no pulse, as indicated on a tag around her wrist. Her face was also painted blue to signify no breathing.

"I volunteered because it sounded like fun," she said.

On the other hand, Dan Stalford, in bio-med maintenance from Fort Riley, said it was mandatory for them.

"This is our work. It was either this or being letter carriers," Stalford said.

Stalford suffered a severe head wound. His shirt was soaked with cracked red paint from his injury.

Several large tackle boxes overflowed with paint and make-up tools used to add a realistic image to the injuries.

This technique, called moulage, was done by the 16th MASH unit early that morning in Pottorf Hall in CiCo Park.

In a disaster situation like this, full hospital staff is needed in the emergency rooms.

When patients arrive, they quickly determine if the injuries are major or minor. A tag is tied to their wrists with basic information about their identification and injuries.

Tags attached to volunteer casualties describe the type of wounds received by the victims.

Taking care of several patients wasn't the only problem facing the hospitals.

In this scenario, both hospitals were damaged by the tornadoes so windows needed to be boarded up and the building secured.

Kerri Ebert, at the Saint Mary Hospital, said the second floor was heavily damaged, but at 10:15 a.m., no one had been evacuated yet.

"We are preparing for evacuation now, but we have no control over where the patients will go once they are picked up by the helicopters," Ebert said.

By noon, Pat Collins, of Riley County Emergency Management, said everything was running very smoothly, and there hadn't been any problems so far.

Victims were arriving at the alternative care facility set up in CiCo Park by the military because of the hospitals' evacuations, he said.

"This is as close as you can get to practicing for the real thing," Dave Haefke, EMT stationed at the Farm Bureau command post, said.

Riley County EMT personnel prepare the wounded for ambulance and helicopter transport Tuesday in the KSU Foundation building's parking lot.

Medical supplies needed by each patient were left wrapped sitting on or near the wound area. One purpose of the drill was to make sure that EMT personnel had adequate supplies on hand to treat various injuries.

Patients are loaded onto an ambulance and transported to either Memorial or the Saint Mary hospital.

TIMELINE

8 a.m. — Exercise begun

8:01 a.m. — A series of tornadoes touch down in Geary and Riley counties, including Manhattan.

8:04 a.m. — Both hospitals advise they have sustained damage and are on backup power. All telephones are out in Manhattan.

8:05 a.m. — Several people are injured; some are trapped under debris.

8:12 a.m. — Only certain parts of the city will regain power by nightfall. K-State could regain power first.

8:15 a.m. — A police officer reports that people are wandering around at the KSU Foundation building. Several are carrying victims.

8:20 a.m. — An ambulance en route to KSU Foundation is involved in an accident.

8:30 a.m. — A citizen reports a gas main has broken, and the fire is 100 feet tall. The road has given way, and the leak is coming from a hole in the road. Flash floods are reported in the north side of the city.

8:40 a.m. — Numerous injuries occurring. Most are puncture wounds and lacerations caused by debris during clean-up operations. Both hospitals are advising the need to evacuate up to 25 patients and are closing their doors to any more victims due to damage.

9:10 a.m. — Media crews and citizens entering hazardous areas. At Farm Bureau and KSU Foundation, citizens are going in to see if their relatives are injured.

9:13 a.m. — Donna Werbin and Mary Graham drive to Memorial Hospital. They are termed "walk-ins." Graham is the least injured of the two, having only been impaled with a stick and sustaining a broken arm. Werbin is unconscious with a head injury.

9:58 a.m. — Mary Graham is consoled by a nurse and a social worker. Graham said she has lost touch with her husband. The nurse explains that a description of her husband will be posted with the Red Cross.

10:05 a.m. — Donna Werbin is transported by air to Stormont-Vail Medical Center in Topeka. Doctors said if she hadn't arrived at Memorial Hospital when she did, she would not be alive.

10:08 a.m. — Paul Schliffke, RCEPO personnel working with Memorial Hospital, said he's seen a lot of head injuries, fractures and impalements.

10:45 a.m. — Julie Davenport, director of community relations for Memorial Hospital, gives and releases a casualty report. There have been 21 casualties.

10:48 a.m. — Movement in area is hampered by debris, no street signs and injured.

11 a.m. — Members of many families are apart, causing fear, confusion, tied-up telephone lines, etc.

11:15 a.m. — Telephones are restored.

12:10 p.m. — The Sigma Kappa sorority is in danger of collapsing. People will not leave it, because they are afraid it will be torn down.

12:30 p.m. — There are numerous reports of missing vehicles as people return to their homes. Many people are upset because they are not being allowed back into their homes due to not having proper identification.

12:55 p.m. — The Alternate Care Facility is overloaded. There is a need to evacuate all the critically injured to other hospitals.

2:15 p.m. — The Fire Department is fearful of an outbreak of fire with most roads still impassable because of debris and downed power lines.

3:00 p.m. — end of exercise

K-State links volunteers

MANDY HANSON
Collegian

If you have some spare time and enjoy helping people, the Community Service Volunteer Clearinghouse could use your help.

The Clearinghouse is part of the Kansas State Community Service Program.

"The Clearinghouse acts as a liaison between K-State students that want to do volunteer work and agencies in Manhattan that need volunteers," Crystal McMullen, volunteer coordinator for the Clearinghouse, said.

There are 13 staff members that work on different projects for the Community Service Program.

Carol Peak, director of the program, has been in charge of the program since 1987, when she said the program began. McMullen and Laurie Egbarts are the two student coordinators for the Clearinghouse.

The Clearinghouse is located in the Continuing Education building at College Court in the Kansas Center for Rural Initiatives office.

"Students can stop by, or they can call and leave a message for the coordinators about the type of volunteer work they are interested in," McMullen said.

The coordinators try to match each volunteer to an agency that fits the student's interests, she said.

"We have files on the agencies here in Manhattan. These help us match the students because they describe the type of volunteer work that is needed," McMullen said.

These files list specifics, such as skills that might be needed, training that may be involved and the time commitment needed, she said.

The coordinators then relay this information, along with the agency's phone number to the student volunteers. It is then the student's responsibility to make the agency contact, she said.

"The Clearinghouse can be accessed through the Unicorn on K-State's mainframe," McMullen said. "The Clearinghouse is also going to be using the Blue Key bulletin board to post volunteer information."

The Clearinghouse continues to become a stronger endeavor at K-State because of the consistent group of people that donate their time to this entity, McMullen said.

"Many students became involved with the Clearinghouse at the Activities Carnival this year."

Peak said the program would like to serve as an opportunity.

"We want to help students make good volunteering choices, and we would like to begin a process that helps professors use our service opportunities as learning opportunities," Peak said.

Fraternities answer questions

DAVE KATZER
Collegian

A council of fraternities set up information booths on the north lawn of the K-State Union yesterday afternoon.

The Fraternity Rush Forum was designed to allow students who are interested, but aren't in fraternities, a chance to learn more about greek life.

Twenty-two of the 26 fraternities in the Interfraternity Council were present to answer questions students might have about the greek system at K-State.

"This is our way of coming out to meet the students," Mike McRee, senior in psychology and president of IFC, said.

"Most of the time, they contact us, but this allows us to make the effort to meet them and to answer their questions," McRee said.

The forum is designed to be informal and informational, he said.

"It gets the word out about the greek system to students who might not know anything about it. It's an informational type of event that's very informal," McRee said. "It gives the students the chance to walk up and talk to us."

The fraternities also get a chance to meet prospective new members, Casey Niemann, junior in ag business and milling science, said.

"It gives the students a chance to meet some of the guys in the houses, and they can also find out who to contact if they are interested in joining a house," Niemann, Alpha Gamma Rho member, said.

Niemann described the turnout for the event as fair to good.

Charles Good, freshman in architecture, said he liked the forum because it gave him a chance to talk with representatives from several houses at once.

Originally from Montana, Good was unable to rush formally in the fall, but he said he was interested in joining a fraternity.

"I have several family members that were in fraternities, so I've always had an interest in joining one," Good said. "I'm going to take advantage of this opportunity to meet the guys in the houses, because I didn't get the chance in the fall."

McRee said IFC hopes to have another forum in the spring in conjunction with the all-University Open House.

PRI official assassinated

ASSOCIATED PRESS

MEXICO CITY — A young man assassinated a key official of Mexico's ruling party Wednesday, rocking a country already buffeted by a turbulent year of violence and rebellion.

Jose Francisco Ruiz Massieu, secretary-general of the Institutional Revolutionary Party (PRI), was shot in the neck after getting into his car following a breakfast at party headquarters. Shattered glass from the car window was strewn on a side street off the busy Paseo de la Reforma Boulevard.

A bank guard tackled the gunman and turned him over to police. Officials identified him as an Acapulco resident, but did not give a motive for what President Carlos Salinas de Gortari described as a hideous crime.

"This is a day of mourning for PRIistas. This is a day of mourning for all Mexicans," said President-elect Ernesto Zedillo.

The killing shocked officials still recovering from the March 23 assassination of PRI presidential candidate Luis Donaldo Colosio, shot at a Tijuana campaign rally. Zedillo, his successor, won the Aug. 21 presidential election and takes power Dec. 1.

Both Zedillo and Salinas — Ruiz Massieu's former brother-in-law — were at the Hospital Espanol where Ruiz Massieu, his shirt ripped open and soaked with blood, was rushed after the shooting. Doctors said Ruiz Massieu had no pulse on arrival and was pronounced dead at 10:30 a.m., an hour after the shooting.

Mexico also was shaken this year by a New Year's uprising by Mayan Indians in southern Mexico, a wave of kidnappings of businessmen and narcotics-related violence.

Despite the turbulence, the PRI, which has governed Mexico since 1929, was able to gain 50 percent of the vote in the national election. Widely feared post-electoral violence failed to materialize.

The assassination of Ruiz Massieu, No. 2 in the ruling party, jolted Mexico again just as the country appeared to be settling down.

Deputy Attorney General Mario Ruiz Massieu, the slain man's brother, announced the death. He is in charge of prosecuting drug traffickers for the federal attorney general's office, which has the suspected gunman in custody.

Drug traffickers are accused of murdering Roman Catholic Cardinal Juan Jesus Posadas Ocampo in a case of mistaken identity at the Guadalajara airport in May 1993.

Ruiz Massieu, a 48-year-old lawyer, was a rising figure in Mexican politics.

He was married to Salinas' sister, Adriana, but they divorced about eight years ago. They have two daughters.

He was elected to congress in August and was selected to lead the PRI delegation that would dominate the lower house.

He was governor of the impoverished western state of Guerrero, where Acapulco is located, from 1987 to 1993 and was named PRI secretary-general in May as the party reorganized itself in the wake of Colosio's murder.

Ruiz Massieu also represented the PRI before the Federal Electoral Institute, which is in the midst of reviewing challenges to the August election and certifying the results.

Bad Religion raw, primitive punk

★★★1/2
Bad Religion
"Stranger than Fiction"
Atlantic Records

Ratings:
★★★★ Sell plasma
★★★ Check it out
★★ Think twice
★ Giggle at it in bargain bins

CASEY MILLER
Collegian

Those not familiar with punk, be warned, it's not easy to enjoy, because its very purpose is to be hated.

Musically, punk bands are not exceedingly talented. The songs are uncomplicated and not flashy. This is straightforward punk played raw, fast and primitive with vocalist Greg Gaflin spouting out lyrics competing with the disorganized mess of music in the background.

To see that "Stranger Than Fiction" is a punk classic, one needs only to open the compact disc case and read the lyrics. The words have an incredible range, from personal disclosure, to satire, to the loss of individuality in society. This is not to say that the occasional "fuck you" is not thrown in.

It wouldn't be a punk record without it.

The title track is a commentary on the modern news media and the homeless, and includes literary references to Kerouac, Wolfe and Hemingway — all in one song, quite impressive.

"Television" is simply about the dependency of a couch potato. It seems partly satirical and confessional with the chorus, "I need to bathe in your golden light — submerge in electric waves. I need my connection to the world outside."

Another surprising thing about Bad Religion is its ability to use backup vocals. The background singers can actually carry a tune.

The great thing about "Stranger Than Fiction" is that it forces you to read the lyrics. After all, a literate society is an informed society.

Eating disorders not restricted to women; men have big problems, too

DEAR CASSIE, by Cassandra Duveaux

Dear Cassandra,

I need your assistance. Here's the deal. I am a male in my mid-twenties who has an eating disorder. I have been struggling with this for more than seven years. The problem is that not a day goes by without me thinking about my weight: how to lose weight and how to avoid losing weight. People tell me I look fine, but what do they know? I'm not trying to meet any socially acceptable version of a man, but I do know that I want to look good — real good. Is that bad? I've never sought any psychiatric or counseling assistance, because I don't need it.

I'm not sick. Besides, their focus is on women, as if men don't have eating disorders. I know I'm not alone.

What can you suggest that every pamphlet on weight loss and eating disorders doesn't already suggest?

Signed,
Eatless in my Battle

Dear Eatless in my Battle,

I'm a bit confused about the specifics of your eating disorder. Are you trying to tell me you're anorexic, bulimic or just completely obsessed with your weight? Whatever the details are, it sounds to me like you have a problem.

The first step in beating this thing is admitting that you do have a problem and need some help. Although you argue that you don't need help because you aren't sick, in the very first line of your letter, you admit that you have an eating disorder. You also admit that this has to come to an end.

Starving yourself, making yourself vomit, avoiding mirrors or obsessively exercising is not the way to make yourself feel better. You need to be good to yourself and your body.

As far as counseling assistance goes — you're dead wrong. Counselors are there for that purpose — to counsel you, not to judge you. And they help men with eating disorders just as much as women. Don't avoid getting help on this subject because of your misconceptions. And remember — beauty is only skin deep.

French exchange hunts for students

French professor promotes exchange program

SACHA HANES
Collegian

Students interested in studying abroad have had the opportunity to discuss the topic with a visiting professor from France this week.

Janine Retat, assistant director of faculty and applied languages and communications at Blaise Pascal University in Clermont-Ferrand, France, was on campus Tuesday and Wednesday to talk about the French exchange program with her school.

The Office of International Programs sponsored her visit.

"The purpose of the trip is to promote exchanges from her school and K-State," said Kristina Miller, public relations intern with the Office of International Programs.

"I want to promote and attract as many students as possible," Retat said.

Retat said there were two purposes for her visit.

She said she has been visiting different schools to promote the program and to visit her students that are attending schools in the United States.

This year, five students from Blaise Pascal University are attending K-State, and six K-Staters are studying in France, Retat said.

She said the exchange program hopes to get eight students from K-State next year. Each year, she and international programs plan to keep enlarging the number of students.

"The whole idea is to have a reciprocal exchange," Retat said.

She said the University of Oklahoma started with three exchange students and has grown to 92 this semester.

To participate in the program, students must stay for at least one semester, but Retat said she recommends a full year.

"One year is better because it is worth the money, and the students are just getting used to everything after one semester," Retat said.

Besides tuition, the only additional cost is the cost of the ticket to France, which is about $500 for a student, Retat said.

The student pays tuition at their own school, and it costs about the same to live in France as it does to live here, she said.

Maritime disaster kills 823 people; 141 alive

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TURKU, Finland — Frigid waters and raging winds turned the Baltic into a sea of death for more than 800 people when a ferry listed and sank in a storm Wednesday. Authorities said 141 others survived.

In one of the world's worst maritime disasters in recent years, helicopters and ships searched for survivors and bodies off Finland's southwestern coast. They checked dozens of black-and-orange rafts from the ferry Estonia, but many were empty.

Officials said it was too early to say what caused the ferry to sink shortly after midnight about 25 miles from Uto island.

A surviving crew member said water started pouring through the Estonia's front cargo door and the ship rolled over and sank quickly.

Swedish safety inspectors had criticized the seals on the door before the ferry left Tallinn, Estonia, on Tuesday evening for the 230-mile trip to Stockholm, Sweden. But they said they did not spot anything dangerous.

"We saw nothing that gave us a hint that something would go wrong," one of the inspectors, Ake Sjoblom, told Swedish television. "If we had, we would have sounded the alarm immediately."

Raimo Tiilikainen, the Finnish coast guard commodore coordinating the search, said four ships would remain in the area Wednesday night but he held out no hope more survivors would be found.

Finnish police counted 141 survivors of the 964 people aboard, leaving 823 people missing and presumed dead.

It was not immediately known whether the ferry's captain survived.

Tiilikainen said the Estonia carried 776 passengers and 188 crew members. It was less than half full.

Seventy civilian police workers, 21 teen-agers from a bible school, 56 retirees and a man who delivered clothes to needy Estonians were aboard.

More than half the passengers came from Sweden, and the nation of 8.5 million people was in mourning Wednesday.

Crowds gathered on the docks in Tallinn, including a bereaved woman clutching a teddy bear.

"My husband and son were on their way to Sweden. My son left his teddy bear behind," she sobbed, too shattered to say more.

The first word of the ferry's trouble came shortly after midnight, after it radioed Estonian authorities: "We are sinking! The engines have stopped!"

Survivors described scenes of panic as the ferry listed and started sinking in pitch darkness amid 35-foot waves. The water was 54 degrees and winds were blowing around 55 mph.

Some news reports said the ship went down in five minutes, while others put the time at closer to 30 minutes.

Swedish helicopter pilots described their frustration at not finding more survivors in what one pilot, Tommy Lindberg, called the most difficult operation of his quarter-century career.

Twenty helicopters and 15 ships joined the search.

CLASSIFIED DIRECTORY

TIPS FOR WRITING A CLASSIFIED AD

Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.

Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.

CATEGORIES

To help you find what you are looking for, the classified ads have been arranged by category and sub-category. All categories are marked by one of the large images, and sub-categories are preceded by a number designation.

WE DO NOT USE PHONE NUMBERS OR LAST NAMES IN PERSONALS.

Wait-and-see attitude about ADA strong in businesses comply with the ADA for both existing and new buildings.

"When you look at existing public accommodations, such as hotels, restaurants, theaters and places where the public commonly gathers, they are required to make their places accessible to the extent it is readily achievable," Schlobohm said.

"However, while there is no deadline on this, there is an obligation to continually work towards full compliance," he said.

He said a lack of deadlines can cause one of two things.

"Without a deadline, what I'm seeing is that a certain number of businesses are using the wait-and-see attitude, and there are others out there that really want to do something, but they're not quite sure of what they need to do," he said.

He said that is why the Commission on Disability Concerns offers technical assistance on the ADA.

"We have established a toll-free telephone line so people can call with their questions," he said. "We also have a bulletin-board service, which provides people with information on how other disability issues are being handled in other states."

Schlobohm said that even without deadlines, businesses should be concerned about the guidelines.

"According to a study done by Purdue University, probably 8 percent of rural America are people with disabilities," he said.

"If 8 percent of your population can't get into your business, and if each of those people has one or two friends or relatives that go with them shopping or to a restaurant, then you've alienated three times that many people from your business," Schlobohm said.

Ken Keefer, director of advertising and public relations at the Dillon's Headquarters in Hutchinson, said the headquarters handles any change to any one of the 65 Dillon's supermarkets across Kansas.

He said some of the government regulations include refiguring and restriping the parking lot, making handicapped lanes and new signs.

"Making an accessible parking lot is undoubtedly the most significant change," Keefer said.

"I would say that in the past year, we have been involved to a great extent in this," he said.

"We try our best, and certainly by all means, in new stores," Keefer said.

He said the construction taking place in other existing stores may not be noticeable.

"We may reconfigure the parking lot on a weekend or at night to minimize a lot of inconvenience to customers."

Jeff Barnes, manager of Seth Child Cinemas, said the theater was constructed to be handicap accessible in 1985.

"We have no stairs for the customers in the building, and the ramps outside also get up onto the curbs," he said.

Barnes said all restrooms, doors and parking spaces are also accessible.

Wefald's goals met; vision for future unfolds

Science-Engineering complex," he said.

A number of years ago, the University chose five goals to guide the planning of K-State into the future, Wefald said. He then reviewed those goals and reported on the progress.

The first goal was to enhance research and graduate education, he said.

Last year, K-State received $38 million in research funding. Today, it is at almost $80 million, Wefald said.

Enhancing undergraduate education was the second role, he said. K-State's goal was to enhance research efforts and at the same time improve the quality of undergraduate education, Wefald said.

"We have never accepted the notion that research and undergraduate education are somehow incompatible and that one must necessarily suffer if we enhance the other," Wefald said.

The third goal was to enhance economic development and the environment, he said.

K-State is involved in economic development in other areas besides just education, Wefald said.

"For example, K-State continues to contribute over $500 million annually to the economy of the state of Kansas through its research efforts," Wefald said.

The fourth goal was to enhance diversity, Wefald said.

"I am pleased to tell you that we have hired nine new African American faculty members for the fall of 1994 and 10 new African American staff members.

"We also have hired two Hispanics, two Native American faculty and eight Asian faculty for this fall," he said.

"During the past 18 months, we have conducted a thorough review of the affirmative action office and have reorganized the function of the office, the expectations and some of the practices and procedures," Wefald said.

The enhancement of international programs is the fifth goal, and K-State has signed several new international exchange agreements, he said.

In conclusion, Wefald said K-State has a clear vision of its future as a prominent research University in the land-grant tradition.

Provost Coffman then spoke. Topics Coffman addressed included the General Education program and state funding.

"Adapting and redesigning existing courses is a major part of the process, but it also is important that faculty come forward with new courses involving innovation in both content and methods of delivery," he said.

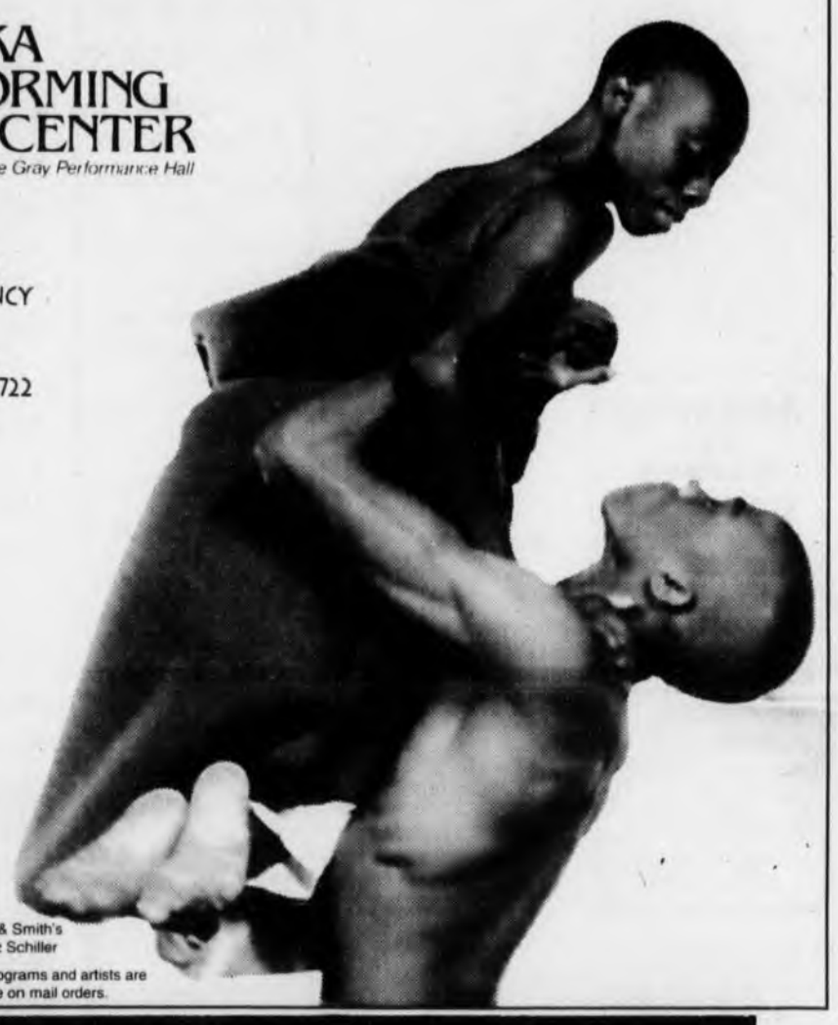
Coffman said it is imperative that K-State continue to do an excellent job of teaching, using whatever methods individual faculty members find effective, he said.

Seidler addressed the issues the city faces if Fort Riley is reduced or shut down.

He said it was unwise to rely so heavily on the government for employment.

Seidler said when the air force base shut down in Salina in the mid 1960s, the population was 44,000. In 1967, the population was 29,000, and the property value dropped 20-40 percent, he said.

If something happens to Fort Riley, property values in Manhattan will go down about 20 percent, and part-time jobs for students would be eliminated, he said.



Seidler said he believes the half-cent sales-tax increase on the November ballot would guarantee jobs, opportunity and survival.

At the end of four years, Manhattan would earn $8 million and by law the sales tax would end, Seidler said.

The money earned would be used for recruiting new businesses, helping existing businesses and establishing more research at K-State by setting up a relationship with some large international firm, he said.

CARY CONOVER/Collegian

Tara Mossa, lead teacher at the KSU Child Development Center, holds 2-1/2-year-old Stephanie Snell while waiting in line to hug Clifford the Big Red Dog on Thursday afternoon at the Child Development Center. Mark McDonnell read a book about Clifford's adventures as Penny Cullers, in the suit, acted out all of Clifford's actions. Both are employees of Varney's Book Store in Aggieville.

Big Red Dog visits Manhattan children

AMY ZIEGLER
Collegian

Children at the KSU Child Development Center got a surprise Thursday when Clifford the Big Red Dog came by for a visit.

Two Varney's Book Store employees made the storybook character come to life for a crowd of children from the day-care center.

"It's great to see this costume create so much joy and on a nice day, be able to look out and see all their little faces looking up at me," Penny Cullers, Varney's employee, said.

While Varney's employee Mark McDonnell read the book about Clifford's adventures, Cullers acted out all of Clifford's actions.

The children giggled and smiled when Clifford played hide and seek, chewed on McDonnell's shoe and played fetch.

"The kids were wonderful," McDonnell said. "All their eyes were glued on Clifford, and they watched everything he did."

Lorna Ford, center director, said she was impressed by the children's response to Clifford.

"I'm amazed that they're sitting so well and paying attention," Ford said. "When the Dr. Seuss character was here, they mauled him."

The children were impressed with Clifford but said they wished he were just as big as in the books.

"Clifford's supposed to be the biggest dog in the world. My Doberman pinscher is bigger than him," Cole Kirkeminde, 7, said.

Rhain Walter said even though Clifford wasn't as big as the dog in the book, she would like to see him jump over a telephone pole.

Other children challenged Clifford with requests such as "What is one plus three?" and "Can you fetch and roll over?"

Cullers said she was amused by the children's questions.

"They were so cute, but some of them were a little challenging," Cullers said.

Danny Muller, 8, said he knew what he would like to see Clifford perform for the audience.

"I want to see him do a triple back flip with a double twist off the low dive in CiCo pool and then touch the bottom and stay there for 10 minutes," Muller said.

Jacob Ferryman, 10, said he knew it wasn't the real Clifford.

"For one thing, he's not real," Ferryman said. "If he was, he would shake the earth when he did a somersault."

Cullers said since Clifford was a popular book character, the children had an opportunity to see a celebrity in action.

"Let's face it," Cullers said. "This is the only Clifford running around right now."

Cullers said Varney's has received costumes of Curious George, the Cat in the Hat, Papa Bear of the Berenstein Bears and Clifford free of charge from publishing companies.

Varney's gets the costumes once every five months and is allowed to keep them for two weeks. Employees make appearances in the costumes at grade schools and day-care centers around Manhattan.

"It's not only great for us to go out and entertain kids, but it lets them know what books are out there," McDonnell said.

Cullers said the costumes allow children to visualize the characters when they read the books or someone reads to them.

"It gets children interested in reading and personalizes the characters in the books," she said.

Harmony Week to begin in park

KRISTA COZAD
Collegian

There will be people dancing in the streets, singing, speaking and jamming to bands.

No, it's not the Grammys, but there will be plenty of entertainment.

It's Racial/Ethnic Harmony Week, and it's just about to get under way.

The week will kick off at 3 p.m. Sunday in Triangle Park in Aggieville with a speech by Manhattan mayor Helen Cooper. Manhattan High School's marching band also will perform at the opening ceremony.

The festivities of the evening will continue with the Interfaith Dialogue and soup-and-salad dinner at 6:30 p.m. at the International Student Center.

Racial/Ethnic Harmony Week

"The speakers at the Interfaith Dialogue will each make a brief statement at the beginning, and then there will be a dialogue between the three speakers. One will represent the religion of Islam, the other the Christian faith, and the third the Jewish faith," Phil Anderson, coordinator of Racial/Ethnic Harmony Week, said. "It gives different religious organizations the chance to try to understand each other's religious perspective."

Anderson said some of the most vicious wars have been fought by people of different religions, including the Jewish and Palestinian wars, and England's and Northern Ireland's ongoing fighting.

He said in the past, dialogue between the different faiths has been a little tense.

"What we work for is to come to some understandings and respect others' point of view," he said. "But it can get a little hairy from time to time."

The keynote address will be given at 7:30 p.m. Monday in Union Forum Hall. Ronald Takaki will be the featured speaker.

"He is a dynamic and energetic speaker," Anderson said, "and he will be speaking on the importance of diversity and multiculturalism in today's world.

There also will be a poetry reading at 9 p.m. Monday in the Union Art Gallery. Chrissy Hathaway, UPC Arts Committee Chairman, said the reading is open to the public and that people can sign up to read their own poetry until the day of the event.

Tuesday's main event will be the Black Student Union opening meeting at 7 p.m. in the Union. Barbara Hammond, K-State alumna, will be the featured speaker.

Anderson said Hammond will speak on a variety of issues that affect African Americans, including how they can better define where they fit into the culture.

"A lot feel out of place and understandably so," Anderson said. "Many people don't make it a point to be open and inviting. I think it (the speech) will be very interesting."

Wednesday marks the beginning of one of five showings of "Six Degrees of Separation," a Kaleidoscope film put on by UPC. The film, which stars Will Smith (also known as the Fresh Prince), will be shown at 8 p.m. Wednesday, 7 and 9 p.m. Thursday, 8 p.m. Friday and 8 p.m. Saturday.

"Schindler's List" also will be shown Friday and Saturday at 7 p.m. in Forum Hall.

One of the consultants for "Schindler's List" will be the featured UPC speaker. Zev Kedem, a survivor of the Holocaust who was helped by some of Schindler's people, will speak at 4 p.m. Thursday in Forum Hall.

The grand finale of the week will be at 5 p.m. Friday. The Racial/Ethnic Harmony Week Walk will begin at the Vietnam Memorial, and students and groups will walk around the campus. The walk is expected to last from 20 to 25 minutes. The Rev. Don Fallon will then make concluding remarks.

The fun won't be finished then, however. Ashanti, a three-woman jazz and R&B group, will perform live at 7 p.m. in Union Station.

The last day of Racial/Ethnic Harmony Week will feature the third-annual African American Male Symposium at 8:30 a.m. Saturday, Oct. 8, in the Union Little Theatre.

Loveless to perform at music festival

JULIE KUHLMAN
Collegian

It's time to hit the trail and venture on out to Sunset Zoo.

This week, Sunset Zoo will be host to its first "Party on the Plains" country music festival, featuring recording star Patty Loveless.

She will perform Sunday night after two local bands, Shootin' Blanks and Rio.

Loveless, born in Kentucky, has had hits ranging from her upbeat chart-toppers such as "Timber," "Blame it on Your Heart" and "Chains" to her recent Country Music Association-nominated ballad "How Can I Help You Say Goodbye."

Her most recent hit, "Blame it On Elvis," is climbing the charts and this week has jumped to No. 6.

"We're truly excited to welcome Patty to our community and to the Country Music Festival," Don Wixom, Sunset Zoo director, said.

Angie Fenstermacher, Sunset Zoo assistant marketing director, said zoo staff members are lucky to get Loveless because of the upcoming CMA awards show.

"The awards are on the fifth of October, which is only three days after she will perform here," Fenstermacher said.

The opening bands are not strangers to the local country scene.

Shootin' Blanks recently opened for Chris LeDoux, and Rio has opened for Lee Roy Parnell, Steve Wariner and LeDoux.

CONCERT TICKETS

The concert begins at 6:30 p.m. Sunday at Sunset Zoo. Tickets are $11 in advance and $13 at the gate, and children younger than 12 will be admitted free. Advance tickets can be purchased at Sunset Zoo, TW Longhorn's, S Bar J Western Wear and Streetside Records.

Shootin' Blanks also will be playing Saturday afternoon, and Midnite Run, another local band, will be playing later in the evening.

K-State Rodeo Club will give the younger generation a taste of broncos and bulls from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. Saturday, when the club sponsors a children's rodeo south of the zoo pavilion.

Fenstermacher said much of the activities were planned with the family in mind.

"We will have a lot of different things for little kids," Dan Suderman, Rodeo Club president, said.

"Stick-horse barrell racing, trying on spurs and roping a dummy are all things we'll give the kids an opportunity to do," Suderman said.

Two-step dancing will be taught at 3 p.m. Saturday and Sunday on the patio in front of the education building in the children's zoo.

Act requires closed-caption programming

KIM HALL

Disabled people, their relatives and friends don't have to worry about communication problems, thanks to Title IV of the Americans with Disabilities Act of 1990.

Title IV of the ADA protects telecommunication rights of all disabled persons.

Mike Oxford, assistant director of the Kansas Association of Centers for Independent Living, said this section was set up to assist people who are deaf, have hearing impairments and speech disabilities.

Americans with Disabilities Act

Oxford said all TV programs must be closed captioned.

"Programs are required to print what they're saying on the bottom of the television screen," he said.

He also said each common telephone carrier now provides telecommunication and relay services all across the country.

Hearing-impaired individuals can communicate over the telephone using a TDD, or Telecommunication Device for the Deaf, Oxford said.

"A relay service lets people communicate with a TDD, which is a combination telephone/typewriter which enables the individual to type out his or her portion of the conversation, and an operator translates it," Oxford said.

Another name for the TDD is the TTY, or teletype.

He said a deaf person can call a relay number at no charge.

Judy Jackson, manager of relay services in Lawrence, said now disabled people can call anywhere, whereas before they had to have the proper equipment.

"We give equal access to the speech and hearing impaired," she said. "That's how we are connected with the ADA."

Gretchen Holden, director of Disabled Student Services, said K-State offers TTYs in the K-State Union, the police station, the admissions department and in Farrell Library.

She said K-State also offers frequency modulated listening systems for the hearing impaired.

"You give a tiny microphone to the speaker, instructor or performer. The disabled person has a set of headphones, and the sound is transmitted directly to the person," Holden said.

"They are offered in McCain, the Union, Bramlage, and Nichols, among other buildings," she said.

Holden said K-State also offers sign-language interpreters for deaf students.

"We're hoping to always improve in this area," she said.

Series update

As a service to our readers, we will run a summary of the previous parts of the ADA series. Today's story is the final part of the series.

PART I

- The construction of buildings on campus is complying with the ADA.
- All construction must comply with the guidelines of the ADA, said Jerry Carter, director of facilities planning and University architect.

PART II

- The needs of disabled people for employment opportunities are slowly but surely being met by Title I of the ADA.
- An estimated 49 million disabled Americans are protected under the ADA.

PART III

- The City of Manhattan felt a sense of urgency to comply with Title II of the Americans with Disabilities Act when a judge ruled in favor of a lawsuit against the city this summer.
- Title II of the ADA mandates that all public entities, including state and local governments, school districts and public universities, protect the rights of disabled people.

PART IV

- Title III guidelines for the Americans with Disabilities Act prove to be more lenient than Titles I and II.
- "We educate people with disabilities, organizations, private businesses and government entities about the rights and responsibilities under the ADA," said Alan Schlobohm, employment and training liaison for the Kansas Commission on Disability Concerns.

▶ PULITZER-PRIZE NOMINEE SPEAKS FOR ETHNIC WEEK

A Pulitzer Prize nominee will discuss diversity as the keynote speaker for Racial/Ethnic Harmony Week on Monday.

Ronald Takaki, professor of ethnic studies at the University of California-Berkeley, will speak at 7:30 p.m. in Union Forum Hall.

Takaki's speech is sponsored by the American Ethnic Studies program and the Lou Douglas Lecture Series.

Harriet Ottenheimer, professor of social anthropology and social work, said she has seen Takaki discussing diversity on college campuses via satellite.

"He's a very well-known scholar in his field, and it's an honor to have him visit. He is a very eloquent speaker," Ottenheimer said.

"I think students will come away from his speech with a much better understanding of America as a pluralistic democratic nation," she said.

"I think we need to understand each other a lot better," she said. "We need to take advantages of our strengths as individuals."

Takaki also will be the guest lecturer in an open class sponsored by the American Ethnic Studies program, Ottenheimer said.

He will discuss several books he has written, including "From Different Shores," which was nominated for a Pulitzer Prize.

The open class will be from 3:30 to 5 p.m. Monday in Leasure 001.

▶ 3 RELIGIOUS SPEAKERS TO BE PART OF PANEL DISCUSSION

Speakers from three of the most prevalent religions in the world and on the K-State campus will be participating in a panel discussion Sunday evening at the International Student Center.

The Interfaith/Ecumenical Dialogue and Soup Supper is being sponsored by the KSU Committee on Religion and the KSU Racial/Ethnic Harmony Week Committee.

Don Fallon, coordinator of Religious Activities and adviser for the KSU Committee on Religion, said the speakers will be from the Christian, Islamic and Jewish faiths.

Carrie Clark, sophomore in secondary education and president of the KSU Committee on Religion, said the committee has members of different religions to promote an understanding of the differences and similarities of various religions.

The topic is "Faith's Journey to Peace."

"We are holding the event to let people know about their religions and what it has to do with social issues," Clark said.

Fallon said the topic was chosen to address domestic violence, spouse and child abuse, racism, women's rights and ethnic-cleansing . The event will begin at 6:30 p.m. with a soup and salad supper. Clark said they expect 70 to 90 people.

"We are providing soup, drinks and silverware for everyone, but we would like to have various groups bring salads, preferably from their culture," Clark said.

▶ COMMITTEE SEEKS COMMISSION SUPPORT FOR HALF-CENT SALES TAX

Members of the Economic Development Steering Committee asked City Commission to give its position of support on the half-cent sales tax, which will be on the November ballot. They met jointly at 4 p.m. Thursday at City Hall.

The sales tax would earn $8 million over four years and help support a program to protect Manhattan's economy.

The committee discussed the objectives for the Economic Development Opportunity Fund, criteria for expenditures and the establishment and implementation of administration of the Economic Development Opportunity Board.

Discussion focused on the accountability and information distribution to the community on the sales tax program.

One of the program's objectives would be to create jobs for the community. This would involve bringing business into Manhattan and/or supporting local existing businesses.

"The issue of accountability is extremely important, who is going to watch over expenditures," Bill Varney, co-chair of the Mayor's Economic Development task force, said. "Projects should not compete with existing local businesses."

Varney said the emphasis is on high-tech rather than blue-collar business in order to get away from minimum-wage jobs.

The project would create a staff position at K-State to locate positions for a major research facility in Manhattan. Interest is in attracting a major international firm, a consortium or alliance of industry leaders laboratory or a federal laboratory.

Pat Alexander, treasurer of the task force, said local bias might be difficult to eliminate.

"It comes down to an objective evaluation, what are the chances for success, and what is the return on the investment capital," Alexander said. "It really becomes a function of the investment capital and what is the expected return."

Rich Seidler, task force co-chairman, emphasized the need to keep the project broad and flexible, as did many of the commissioners.

"Don't set it in a block of concrete so that the first opportunity that doesn't fit can't be considered," Seidler said.

Commissioner Sydney Carlin said she was in favor of the project.

"I'm so proud of the people who worked hard on behalf of the community. Managed growth doesn't come free. You either like an idea or not. I like this idea. I think it's time."

Forum at Chance well-received

Eric McPeak, senior in life sciences, poses a question to panel members during a forum on bicycle regulations Thursday night in Rusty's Last Chance Restaurant & Saloon.

KIMBERLY HEFLING
Collegian

Rusty's Last Chance Restaurant & Saloon proved Thursday evening to be a more popular location than the K-State Union to host a forum addressing student issues.

More than 50 people gathered to listen and receive responses from panel members concerning issues relating to bicycling and parking on campus.

The last forum sponsored by the Student Governing Association three weeks ago only had four people attending.

"I think the spirit of the forum was constructive," Dwain Archer, director of parking services, said. "The responses and questions we received were basically positive. I'm looking forward to more of these types of forums in the future, both on and off campus."

As a result of K-State annexation by the city of Manhattan, funding could become available in the near future to help solve biking problems.

John Lambert, director of public safety, said a proposal had just been finished that would be taken to the president. It could then be taken to a City Commission meeting Oct. 15. The City Commission could then evaluate the proposal. In January 1996, about $50,000 requested for bike racks, pathways and signs could be granted to K-State.

Archer said single bike stalls cost up to $300 or more, not including the price of a cement pad to put the stall on or for the price of lighting above the bike stalls.

One student expressed concern about the large number of parking places for faculty by West Stadium.

As a result of petitioning for more parking places, Archer said students received more parking places last year.

"Students petitioned for 500 of the stalls, and they got them," he said.

B.C. Camp II, junior in journalism and mass communications, was part of the panel and answered questions about his reactions to the incident in which he was handcuffed and fined

▶ STUDENT SENATE

Parking survey to be finished this semester

AMY SIMON
Collegian

Campus parking may be improved by the end of the semester with the help of a student survey.

Michele Meier, Parking and Safety Committee chairwoman, has been working with administration to solve the parking problem. She updated Student Senate on her committee's progress at the meeting Thursday night.

Meier said her committee has come up with four options to deal with the parking problem. All of these options will be included on a campus parking survey.

The first option is to change nothing about the parking garage. The second option is to restrict the sale of general permits.

Another option, Meier said, is to build a 1200-car parking garage in the vicinity of Memorial Stadium. The final option is a shuttle service from Bramlage Coliseum to other locations on campus The parking garage has an estimated cost of $10.2 million, and the shuttle service would be $450,000.

"Either with a parking garage or the shuttle service, the projects will be paid for with user fees and not student fees," Meier said.

Meier said 400-500 students would respond to the survey. The committee will then take the results into account with making its decision.

"Sometimes I think students have given up on solving the parking problem," Meier said. "But there will be a answer by the end of the year."

Brad Finkeldei, student body vice president, said the results of the survey will be compiled by the end of this semester. If the committee chooses to build the parking garage, the proposal must go before the Kansas Board of Regents in January.

Senate also approved a list of seven recommendations about how the city of Manhattan could use the revenues generated from sales tax charged on campus since the annexation by the city. Michael Henry, arts and sciences senator and chairman of the ad-hoc Committee on City-University Enhancement Fund, estimated that $250,000 of the sales tax money may go to student requests.

Several items on the list deal with safety. The top priority is better sidewalks and lighting in areas around the campus. The second priority is the creation of new bike paths in the city . The report also suggests stoplights and turns lanes on streets near the campus.

"Safety was our main concern when putting

IN OUR OPINION

By the Collegian Editorial Board

Remember to think before you drink

Don't drink and drive.

It seems to be beaten into the ground in this day and age, but obviously some people out there are not listening.

Each year, thousands of people are killed in alcohol-related traffic accidents, but as of yet, nothing has come along to stop the continuance of this fatal trend.

What may seem unusual about this message is that it is not coming to you from SADD, MADD, a beer company or even your parents. It is coming from your peers. Today's youth are becoming more and more conscientious of this problem, but it's still happening.

Get a designated driver, call friends for a ride, or do whatever it takes. Just do not get behind the wheel of a motor vehicle at anything less than 100-percent sober.

What does it take to convince those reckless few?

Imagine arriving at class on Monday and the people who usually sit next to you are not there because of your ignorance and recklessness. Or maybe they are there, but it is too hard to recognize them in their blood-stained bandages and casts. Carrying their books to their next class doesn't right that terrible wrong. Repeating "I'm sorry" a thousand times does little when it's spoken to deaf ears.

Weekends are a great time to relax and unwind from a trying week of classes, and if you're going to drink — fine. Just act responsibly.

Don't put your life and the lives of others at risk by drinking and driving. Do it for yourself and the person sitting on your right in your Monday morning class.

Don't need math to read poetry

I tell people I'm a pretty good math student.

CHRISTY LITTLE

I tell people that because until my teachers started inserting letters into my equations, I was doing just fine. I could add 3 and 5 in my sleep until they told me it was 3a and 5x, and that I needed the square root of the differential something-or-other.

Then I got confused.

Between fifth and 10th grade, I went from advanced math, then to regular, and finally, remedial.

In all other respects, I could hold my own. I followed my little friends from class to class in our honor's block, at least until seventh hour. Then, I would discreetly slip downstairs to Mr. Dunn's Class of Basic Geometric Shapes (we did squares, circles, etc.) while everyone else in the whole world took Mrs. Ellington's Trigonometry for Superhumans.

I think something that really held me back was the story problems. If Peter Chin took his friend, Amy, in a canoe halfway across a lake at 70 mph but would need to be back by 4 p.m., how fast should he go, the book might ask me.

Before you could even say, "quadratic equation," I found a thousand holes in the story. Who could paddle a canoe at 70 mph? Were they having a picnic? Math characters are always having picnics. And if Peter had obligations at 4 p.m. (probably climbing stacks of library books in problem No. 12 or sporting Susie around on his motorbike in problem number 41), why didn't they go on Tuesday, instead? My imagination took me away from the story's purpose. Usually, I wrote "32." I have found 32 is almost always the right answer.

But, supposing there was no story to accompany the numerical nightmare on my test, I still could get distracted in a hurry. The color of my socks, the fat, beady-eyed sparrow that watched me from outside the classroom window every day, or even the chalk on the back of Mr. Dunn's knees could divert my attention from the noble cause at hand, i.e., the Search For The Absolute Value.

My search did not ever yield positive numbers (finally I learned to say all absolute values were positive, although in my heart I knew it couldn't be so. I can play their games, I thought), and it never did answer the value I did seek; that is, the absolute value of math itself.

What value does math have?

Math has a purpose for some. Engineers, architects, physicists — ignore me, and go back to your calculus nightmares. Math has a purpose for you much like sonnets and stanzas have one for me. My question is, what value does math have for a future English/journalism teacher? I can convert inches to picas, and I know sonnets are 14 lines. I can add, subtract, multiply and divide with finesse.

Many argue that math requires a higher level of thinking, that it is the brain's exercise in the abstract. Does that mean the symbolism I write about from "The Grapes of Wrath" isn't an exercise in abstract thinking?

Does my lack of algebraic talents mean I am of a lesser mind than my number-crunching collegiate contemporaries?

And does it mean that my math-fanatic friends don't measure up to me because they can't write an eloquent paper on T.S. Elliot's "The Waste Land?"

Well, to answer all those questions, no.

All people have their own talents, and by expecting students like me to reach new heights in trigonometric formulas at the college level when it took me Intermediate Algebra II, Algebra II and College Algebra at a community college to finally catch on to that algebra thing, the powers that be are asking me to waste time, money and undue tension to continue pursuing even greater calculations (as if that $x = 0$, x = undefined mess isn't the biggest brain damager ever) that I will never, ever use. To me, undefined is, "your topic is undefined in your paper. Find a topic or you will get a zero."

Chemical engineers can be socked with all the humanities requirements (four or five different classes, I understand) and undoubtedly be well-rounded, enlightened individuals for it, but what would make them better engineers are more engineering classes.

Similarly, I have my eye on some poetry and literature classes that would make me a far more fit teacher than the math I still have to take.

The idea of high school is that it gives you a well-rounded background for college. That's how you get into college in the first place. Four years of high-school math is fine for a person with a burden of education, English and journalism classes ahead.

College is when you study what you want to study, and more importantly, what you need to study.

Someone let me abandon my pursuit of the perfect isosceles. Surrender my notebook of half-guessed shown work with a big "32" scrawled at the bottom.

Someone give me a Frost poem, and I'll show you what teachers really ought to know.

Celebrities in tough times

Scandal must be the No. 1 professional hazard for celebrities in America right now.

▶ GUEST

MOHAMMAD BADRUL AHSAN

It nearly wiped out Michael Jackson. It is wearing down O.J. Simpson.

When gifted minds turn grotty in America, hard-earned honor gives way to ribald laughter.

Michael Jackson may have fondled a little boy, but the big scandal has fuddled his image for the rest of life. Lately, O.J. Simpson has been accused of double murder, and the one-time national hero already looks like a national horror.

Scandal is when a respectable man, leading a dubious life, runs out of luck. But how does it affect one's admiration for that man if his respectability is based on artistic ability, not on moral austerity? O.J. Simpson earned respect not for his character, but for playing great football. Similarly, Michael Jackson became a superstar by his musical talent, not for his vow to remain celibate.

It is then fair to repudiate their reputation for talent as a way to condemn their moral failings? An entertainer's commitment to people is his ability to entertain, not his ardent ability to stay clean. His art is his reputation. Reputation is not his art.

That distinction is often blurred in America, where the virtuoso get confused with the virtuous. True, child molestation is a horrible crime. But how does the ecstasy of millions inspired by Jackson's music compare to the anguish of one boy he may have abused? True, murder is an unpardonable offense. But can the glory of those hands that scored many touchdowns be completely written off by the grisly act of hacking down two lives?

A French writer once wrote that Jean Genet was a bad thief because what he stole could not compare in value with what he left behind. Genet was a terrible freak. He was at one time, a supreme stylist in French literature and a homosexual, a wacko and a thief. Arrested repeatedly for thievery, he spent more than four years in jail.

The French have always demonstrated an astonishing capacity to hold together creative impulse with criminal instinct, yet keep them separate in praise and punishment. Marquise de Sade spent 27 years in jail for sordid crimes, yet he has been immortalized in French literature as a great writer.

That tells us why we ought to be more careful to judge someone who gives a great deal to the society, even if he ever acts to take something away from it. Maybe politicians are an exception because they choose to make a living on public sentiments. When Dan Rostenkowski was indicted recently, it filled the bill all right. He has been a terrific congressman, and many wonderful projects in Chicago go to his credit. But he is the one who also abused his office. People do not like it when a keeper strays off to become an usurper because the loss of character is so obvious in it.

However, there are instances when even the politicians were spared public scrutiny. The Declaration of Independence was not scrapped because Thomas Jefferson had consorted with a slave girl named Sally Hemmings. The New Deal did not fail although FDR used to cheat on Eleanor. And who can deny Kennedy's Camelot or King's civil-rights movement because they slept with women other than their wives?

Which underscores difference between corruption and concupiscence. Corruption is when power is used for lust. Sen. Bob Packwood got the two mixed up. He harassed women as a senator and then diarized his randy acts as a lustful man. He was powerless before the power of lust. Then he used power to indulge in that powerlessness.

Richard Nixon, whose lust for power led him to disaster, was only corrupt. Whereas John Kennedy, who is believed to have had sexual romps even in the ante-room of the Oval Office, never got accused by anyone. Bill Clinton may have got Kennedy's wild lust and Nixon's bad luck. He has been accused of both from time to time.

In America, a criminal can become a celebrity because everyone wants to know the details of the crime. Charles Manson became a household name by killing a number of people. His contribution to society was none. Whereas Jackson and Simpson augmented social good, but their fame is overshadowed by the notoriety of their once-in-a-lifetime crimes.

Everything is possible in the scheme of life. A celebrity can turn into a criminal so much as the reverse is also true. But somewhere in these extremes, Americans have lost their ability to judge. Scandal is always cruel because it spreads out the bizarre and the unexpected. Lately, it has been confounding, as well. Soon, one may not know a celebrated criminal from a criminal celebrity — unless anybody cares that they are different.

Columnist needs to grow up

Dear Editor,

Just when I think that Brad Seabourn might be starting to grow up, he goes and acts like a junior-high kid who thinks he's so cool because he can make fun of others. C'mon, Brad. Lay off nagging on religion all the time. What's your beef?

Brad, I bet you were giggling silly when you found that obscure AP story. Do you feel better now that you've aired yet another story that "proves" the stupidity of religion? Rest assured, Brad, the only one who looks IQ-challenged from your column is you. Give it a rest.

Brad, why don't you take some of that energy that you use for writing columns for the newspaper and spend it on trying to graduate from this University so we don't have to read your opinions for yet another decade?

Residents work to overcome trauma

Dear Editor,

Since the morning of Sept. 19, there have been many misconceptions about what actually occurred at Smurthwaite House. We, the women of Smurthwaite, feel it is important to clarify these recent events. A rape and burglary did occur. This affected each of us because it was a blatant violation against our family, our home and our sense of security. Only because of our support and trust in one another have we been able to collectively begin to overcome this trauma.

On the evening prior to the incident, we followed the routine safety procedures, which in retrospect were not enough. With the help of housing maintenance, we have become more proactive in regards to our house security. We are using what happened this last week as an educational tool in order to better protect ourselves and hope that you will, too.

We are aware that an article in the Collegian portrayed this as a racial incident. This has never been our opinion. We believe that people need to focus on the crime, not the race or the nature of the perpetrator. Finally, we ask that you intelligently decipher between fact and fiction. Thank you for your understanding and cooperation.

▶ BLOOD DRIVE

Red Cross needs blood donors

Dear Editor,

Each year, thousands of lives are saved in Kansas and northwest Oklahoma by healthy Red Cross volunteer donors who generously give blood.

Over the past few decades, medical procedures have been developed that prolong and enhance the life of patients. More and more organ, bone-marrow and tissue transplants, as well as hip and other joint replacements, are taking place. All require several blood transfusions. As the need for blood arises, so does the need for healthy donors.

Area residents can help the Red Cross help hospital patients by giving at the upcoming KSU blood drive, Oct. 4-7. The drive will be at the Union from 11 a.m. to 6 p.m. Tuesday and Wednesday, from 10 a.m to 3 p.m. Thursday and from 9 a.m. to 2 p.m. Friday.

As in the past, we will be competing against KU to see which school can donate the most blood. I encourage all students and faculty to please give blood.

Soldier cleared as accessory to murder

TAWNYA ERNST
Collegian

A Fort Riley soldier charged with accessory in the March 11 murder of another soldier was found innocent Thursday.

A smile swept over 22-year-old Pvt. Michael A. Allingham's face when the verdict was read.

"I walked in that courtroom a little bit nervous," he said afterward. "When the judge read the verdict, a sigh of relief went over my whole body."

A strong belief in God helped him through the last few months, he said.

"When I was placed in confinement, the chaplain came by and talked to me. I began to accept God in my life, and I knew that the only person who could get me out of this situation was Him. I just gave it all to the good Lord and told him whatever the outcome may be, I'll follow your will."

Nearly six months of uncertainty ended for Allingham, who was charged in connection with the stabbing and strangulation death of Pfc. Michael D. Regehr, 24.

Allingham was one of three men arrested. A second soldier, Robert B. Grady, 19, has already been sentenced to life imprisonment for premeditated murder. The third man, Christopher Henning, Junction City, is awaiting trial.

Grady and Allingham had known each other since February 1993 and were pretty close friends who liked to party together.

The night of the murder, Allingham and Grady went to the Riverview Bar and Grill in Junction City, where they ran into Henning and Regehr. The four men left Riverview for the Hollywood Supper Club. After spending some time there, the four went back to the Riverview Bar and Grill. During testimony in Grady's trial, Allingham said he had heard Grady and Regehr arguing over a girl. The four wound up leaving the bars together in Allingham's car for Fort Riley. Grady told Allingham to stop the car when they had reached an isolated area on post.

Grady, Regehr and Henning climbed out of the car and headed down an embankment. A fight ensued between Grady and Regehr, Allingham testified. He watched as Grady pushed Regehr, then struck, stabbed and choked him. Grady passed the knife to Henning, who then allegedly stabbed Regehr.

Allingham said Grady offered him the knife, but he refused it.

"I'm not a violent person," Allingham said. "I don't beat anybody up. I'm not that type of person."

Grady asked for help with moving the body, Allingham said. Allingham backed the car down the embankment and helped Grady and Henning lift the body into the vehicle.

"I did it because I saw what happened, and I was scared," Allingham said.

After hearing testimony and closing arguments, Judge Col. Gregory Varo ruled that the charge of accessory after the fact could not apply because not all the essential elements of the charge had been established. While Allingham had admitted to some involvement, the absence of corroborating testimony and intent to conceal the crime and deter arrest was missing. This caused Varo to find him innocent.

Boundary proposal decided

MIKE HIND
Collegian

The Manhattan-Ogden USD 383 boundary committee made a final decision on a proposal to take to the school board Oct. 5.

The plan the committee chose was a second revision of an earlier plan. The major difference in this revision sends Knoxberry residents to Bluemont School rather than Frank Bergman.

The committee decided on Bluemont School rather than Frank Bergman to ensure the Knoxberry students wouldn't be switched to another school in the future.

Frank Bergman is located in a high-growth area and the Bluemont School doesn't have high growth potential, the committee said.

The committee will also send a recommendation that the overcrowded Ogden grade school bus its sixth grade to Manhattan.

Another committee recommendation is to consider mobile units at Northview rather than busing the Knoxberry students.

Dave Braddock, committee representative, said he recommended no outside students be accepted in Northview until Knoxberry was included.

Not all were happy with the provisions.

Melanie Searfoss, committee representative, said she was upset the Hunters Island children and children south of Fort Riley Boulevard would be bused to Frank Bergman.

"Its too far," Searfoss said. "Its hard to maintain a friendship from that distance."

Associate superintendent Dave Mickey said it was a good plan and the committee did a fine job.

"They were very responsible and task-oriented. The plan meets the criteria that was originally set," Mickey said.

Linebacker believes in spirit of fish

The old saying that dog is man's best friend doesn't always hold true.

For K-State linebacker Mike "Crash" Ekeler, his best friend was a piranha named Carl Spagler.

Crash and Spagler were the best of friends until Crash's roommate dropped a fishing net into Spagler's tank. The piranha choked on the net and died.

When Big Eight media visited before the season started, Crash told them that Spagler is his inspiration. Crash named him Carl Spagler because of Bill Murray's character as the golf groundskeeper in the movie, "Caddyshack."

Crash said because of the piranha's untimely death, he was dedicating his season to it. As part of honoring Spagler, he nailed the piranha to the top of his locker to remind the team to work hard for Spagler.

Recently, Crash said he regretted telling about Spagler because it brings back the pain of Spagler's death. However, I see this unfortunate death as a way to inspire fans.

As I sit at the football games, it seems no one knows or cares about Spagler or his death. I'm ashamed of K-State fans for not having compassion about Spagler for Ekeler.

BRIAN ANDERSON

Already, Spagler's presence has been felt this season on the field. In the first three games, the receivers of the opposing teams have been dropping passes.

Just like Spagler, the receivers have choked. When they get ready to catch the ball, the ghost of Spagler devours them like eating goldfish, and the ball goes through the receiver's hand.

As the football team moves into the Big-Eight schedule, K-State fans need to rally behind something to show the team there is support for it. I have a few suggestions for fans.

■ Because Spagler is a piranha, that means he was a meat-eater. Instead of throwing oranges onto the field, throw bones. If you're a vegetarian, throw ground-up non-meat. If you still must throw something orange, paint the bones or meat orange.

(Before I go any further, I'm not in favor of throwing things onto the playing field, but it is difficult to throw bones from stands to the field, and a person might throw his or her arm out. I don't want to be sued for telling them to injure themselves by breaking a joint. If someone tries to throw meat, I would think someone from this animal-friendly school would beat you up for tossing carcasses around, besides, it would be difficult to get out of the turf.)

■ Next, there needs to be a piranha mascot. Having a piranha with Willie the Wildcat will make the fans go nuts. Opposing teams will be worried about catching a ball as a walking piranha stalks around the field.

The receivers would pay more attention to the ball, slow down to catch it, then BAM, Crash would drill the receivers into the turf.

■ Of course, there would need to be T-shirts, mugs, posters and anything else to get the word out about the ghost of Carl Spagler and to electrify the football team.

There are nine more weeks left in the regular season, and the team will not win all of its games. I figure if we remember Spagler and his inspiration, K-State will rebound from its losses, win games, and go to a bowl game.

Netters compete against nation's best

NICOLE POELL
Collegian

It's been an up-and-down week for K-State tennis player Dinah Watson.

Playing in the Skytel National Clay Court Championship this week in Jackson, Miss., this freshman from England has already gotten a taste of both success and defeat.

In Tuesday's singles action, Watson fell in the opening match of the qualifying round to Mississippi's Michelle Wagner, 6-3, 3-6, 7-6 (7-3), dropping her out of singles contention.

Wednesday proved to be a much better day for Watson and her doubles partner, Karina Kuregian.

The duo fought back from behind to win a three-set match against Princeton's Bridget Mikysa and Melissa Rubin, 3-6, 6-2, 6-3. This was only the third match the pair had played together since the start of the season.

Although the pair didn't have much time to get used to competing together, Watson said she and Kuregian are a good team.

"Karina really made me feel comfortable here, so it wasn't as hard for us to start working together on the court," Watson said. "We just don't give up in any situation."

With their victory, the two will advance to the quarterfinal round of the qualifying bracket, where they will face Katrin Guenther and Lauren Nikolaus, of William and Mary College.

While Watson has already been eliminated from singles competition, Kuregian will get her shot today as she attempts to make it through the 32-competitor field at the tournament.

Kuregian, the Cats' returning all-American, enters the tournament ranked 16th nationally in singles play. This will be the K-State junior's first singles competition since undergoing back surgery this summer.

Although Kuregian said she felt good about how she played throughout doubles action this past weekend at the Wildcat Traveler's Express Invitational, she said she was nervous about hitting the court in Jackson.

"With my ranking, I feel a little bit more pressure about my game in the singles," she said. "My back, though, has been doing OK."

That is the one aspect of Kuregian's game that worries K-State tennis coach Steve Bietau.

"Karina has looked good so far out there with Dinah," Bietau said. "She is still untested as far as the singles competition goes, but she's a tough girl, and I think she has already proved that after her surgery."

"I just think that if she can get through the doubles in good shape, her confidence will be up there where it needs to be once the singles round starts up. We're all anxious to see how she handles it."

▶ CROSS COUNTRY

Arkansas offers challenge

DEBO ADEJUNMOBI
Collegian

K-State's cross country season rolls on this weekend with the NCAA Championship Pre-meet in Fayetteville, Ark.

Coach Terry Drake said several nationally ranked schools will attend the meet, allowing his squads to compete against some of the top runners in the country.

"It will be a good chance to run against some nationally ranked teams that we don't usually get a chance to see throughout the course of the year," Drake said. "I think that's going to be the fun part of the meet."

The women's team will be looking forward to it. Last Saturday at the KSU Invitational the lady harriers dropped out of the top 25 with a disappointing third-place finish. With a good showing Saturday, they could jump right back in.

"I think for our women, it's going to be a chance to beat some of these nationally ranked teams, and hopefully for us, to get back up into the rankings," Drake said. "After dropping out last week, I think we're looking forward to getting back in."

On the men's side, senior Billy Wuggazer, who finished sixth overall at the invitational, should again lead the pack. He said this meet will allow him to see how he stacks up with the top runners in the country.

"Team-wise, I don't think we can look at doing anything really great this meet," Wuggazer said. "I think it will be more of how we stack up against all the good runners individually."

Band incident prompts AD to make plea to fans

WESS HUDELSON
Collegian

Athletic Director Max Urick wants to stop fans from throwing objects onto the field at KSU Stadium.

"I want to appeal to our students not to do that," Urick said. "It could cause personal injury to fans, the players, coaches — anyone."

At last Saturday's game against Minnesota, members of the band were struck with Power Bars, causing extensive damage to instruments.

Urick said the bars were handed out as a result of a promotional agreement between the makers of Power Bars and the athletic department.

They were intended only for students who wanted to sample them.

"The problem was not the product, but the behavior," Urick said.

Several disciplinary actions could be taken by the athletic department if necessary, Urick said.

"The ushers have already been instructed to remove any individual from the contest caught throwing objects at the game," Urick said. "If necessary, we can take an individual to court and get a restraining order in extreme situations. Officials also have the authority to call penalties on the host team in these situations."

Urick said the policy at the moment is not to allow any cans or bottles into K-State contests.

However, food, such as apples and oranges, are allowed in the stadium.

Additionally, anyone carrying a bag into KSU Stadium must show attendants its contents.

"I don't want to stifle any spirit," Urick said.

"I just want to stop anything bad from happening," he said.

Wildcats travel to Boulder to open Big 8 season against 18th-ranked Buffaloes

JULIE KUHLMAN

The time has come.

The Big Eight Conference volleyball season is here, and K-State is heading to Boulder, Colo. for its first conference match.

The Cats will face the 18th-ranked Colorado Buffaloes at 8:30 p.m Saturday.

Additionally, K-State will face the Tar Heels of North Carolina at 2 p.m. Sunday in Boulder.

The return home doesn't bring an easier schedule for the team.

On Oct. 5, K-State will take on the Kansas Jayhawks at 8 p.m in Ahearn Field House.

"I feel our past tournaments have helped prepare us for the Big Eight," volleyball coach Jim Moore said.

After an upset loss to Oral Roberts, Moore said the Cats found their momentum again to pound Wichita State Wednesday.

The Cats beat the Shockers in three games, which Moore said gave the Cats what they needed after the loss.

"It was good to get things back on track after the Oral Roberts loss," Moore said.

"We managed to rally at a crucial time. That was a huge momentum lift."

The first game consisted of 47 side-outs between the two teams which Moore said were good practice for future opponents.

"It was really the first time all season that we forced someone to side-out," he said.

"To beat good teams, we will have to force them to side-out, and we did that tonight."

Yolanda Young had 21 kills for a .447 percentage which lead the team.

"Without Toy (Yolanda) we don't do as well," he said.

Compiled from Collegian staff and Associated Press reports

"Rubber ducky, you make science so fun"

In this age of computers, lasers and orbiting satellites, scientists are learning a lot from rubber duckies.

Some 29,000 rubber ducks, turtles and other bathtub toys spilled overboard on Jan. 10, 1992, in the North Pacific when a freighter carrying the cargo on its deck was hit by a storm.

So far, 400 of the bobbing toys have been found along 500 miles of Alaskan shoreline, and that is helping researchers trace wind and ocean currents.

"This is serious science," said Curtis Ebbesmeyer, an oceanographer at Evans-Hamilton Inc., a consulting company in Seattle. "We are learning a great deal."

They also analyzed an earlier example of inadvertent oceanographic science when 61,000 Nike shoes fell off a ship in 1990 and floated toward the West Coast.

If only they could apply this science to those darn oil spills, we'd be sitting pretty.

Imagine tracking the course of cute little baby dolphins and seals with about 400,000 gallons of crude sludge.

Run little girl, it's Michael Fay, and he's been sniffing butane

Michael Fay, the teen-ager flogged in Singapore for vandalizing cars, has gone into drug rehab for treatment of a butane-sniffing habit, his stepmother said Wednesday.

Jan Fay said her 19-year-old stepson was admitted to the Hazelden clinic in Minnesota several weeks ago after she and his father, George Fay, learned he had been inhaling the gas from pressurized cans to get high.

Butane is used in cigarette lighters.

Fay told her he was inhaling butane because it made him forget what happened in Singapore.

Smatterings has obtained secret reports that are very, very confidential, and you have to be like a 79th-level mason to even touch, so don't even think about looking for them.

They say Fay's father had taken off his belt and was just "waiting for that boy to get back."

"Rectum? Hell, she killed him." No, really!

A high school Latin and Spanish teacher was charged with murder after admitting she beat her husband to death with a candlestick during a furious argument.

Marilyn Kennelly, 61, surrendered to police Wednesday.

Mrs. Kennelly told officers and medics responding to her 911 call on Aug. 29 that she had hit her husband over the head with a glass candlestick holder and kicked him during an argument, police captain Ronald Beliveau said.

Francis J. Kennelly, 61, died the next morning at Norwalk Hospital of a ruptured spleen and internal bleeding.

She was released on bond Wednesday.

Her attorney, Eugene Riccio, would not discuss what Mrs. Kennelly allegedly told police, but he said she is innocent.

"I think as time goes by, the situation will become more apparent," he said.

Riccio, in a Smatterings exclusive interview, said his defense of Mrs. Kennelly will implicate that Colonel Mustard commited the murder in the parlor with the lead pipe, not the candlestick.

Why we don't write for Harper's

The Smatterings desk has decided to expand its horizons and do some research of college life.

All these numbers are factual, and extensive research was put into these findings. Also, the Smattering desk has some rich, undeveloped land in the northern part of Antarctica for sale, real cheap.

The Smattering's Index —

- Percentage of people who return to their car that is parked on campus to find a traffic control officer just giving them a ticket — 87.987
- Average number of people in one night who harass waitresses and bartenders for another drink 10 minutes after last call — 25
- Percentage of students who only show up for class on a test day — 71.21
- Number of times a day President Jon Wefald said the words "K-State" and "great" in the same sentence — 156
- Number of Collegians out of the daily circulation of 14,000 picked up off of classroom floors — 10,427
- Number of times remote radio co-host Aaron Decker of "A Purple Affair" says the word "outstanding" in one 60-minute show — 58
- Number of chickens that will probably be sacrificed in pre-game barbecues or other rituals next Thursday at the K-State-Kansas football game in Lawrence — 69

WEEKEND

Aggieville's Accommodations

Students living in Aggieville see the rituals of college life displayed beneath their living room windows.

They live in apartments above the former Kite's Bar and Grill, Lair Gauche and Dean's Retail Liquor within sight and sound of Manhattan's busiest party scene.

"It's definitely a partying place," Devon Turley, fifth-year senior in sociology and criminology, said. "There hasn't been a weekend without a keg on the porch."

Although the nightlife in Aggieville is busier than most places, Aggieville residents said they don't find themselves partying and cutting class more.

In fact, some residents said they go out even less than they did before living in the 'Ville.

Brock Peterson, fifth-year senior in agricultural economics and finance, said he goes out less this year because his classes require more work.

"I can put a lawn chair on the balcony, get a case of beer, not go out and still have a good time watching Aggieville," Kyle Aldrich, junior in finance, said.

Aggieville dwellers said it's easier to get distracted with the bar action visible from their living room windows, but they're keeping themselves under control.

Chris Hunter, fifth-year senior in construction science and management, said living in Aggieville is exaggerated.

"I lived in a frat house that was real wild," he said. "This is pretty calm compared to a fraternity."

The apartments in Aggieville have a few more parties than the average place, but that's not what really drew the residents to the area.

The number-one reason students live in Aggieville is for the prime location — convenience.

"It's close to school," Chad Smith, junior in computer science, said. "And living here puts less miles on my car."

In addition to being within walking distance of campus, the apartments are in the middle of all the action.

The rent is higher than the same-size pad outside of the 'Ville, but residents said they are getting their money's worth with the prime location.

"These are more expensive, but you get what you pay for," Aldrich said.

Genay Gibson, senior in speech, said she is living in Aggieville because of inexpensive rent for her place above the Lair Gauche.

"Living here isn't a big deal," she said. "It's hard to park and it gets loud."

Aldrich said he has everything he needs in Aggieville.

"I have a place to work out, movie theaters across the street, and the bars a stone's throw away," Aldrich said.

Having the bar district as a backyard is a definite advantage in calling Aggieville home. DUIs are not a problem.

"It's within crawling distance of the bars," Smith said.

Residents have a bar-scene forecast in their front room. They just look out the window to see when their friends are out and if the bars are hopping.

They can take a break at home when the bars get tiring and then go back out for another round.

"If you don't like it," Smith said, "it's only three minutes from home."

Just living by the bars is often entertainment in itself, Gibson said.

> DEVON TURLEY
> fifth-year senior in sociology and criminology & Aggieville resident

"People down on the street don't know we're up here," Gibson said. "You can sit and watch them."

"For the first week, we didn't have any cable. This was our entertainment," Smith said, referring to the large bay windows overlooking Champion's Pub & Grill.

"The drunks are stumbling around not knowing where they're going," Brian Thimesch, senior in finance, said. "They lie in the streets."

Peterson said the funniest thing he's seen from his view above old Kite's was a drunk girl crying in the street.

"She fell off the curb," he said. "I saw her on crutches the next day."

Katie Creal, senior in secondary education, said she's seen many moons from the apartment.

"And Katie saw more than the moon," her friend Turley added, laughing.

Residents find puke-puddles on the sidewalk every weekend, which are left to rot.

"That's so annoying," Thimesch said. "I never noticed it before I lived here."

Another distinguishing trait of living in Aggieville is that friends drop by frequently before and after an evening on the town.

"It's a good place for pre-partying and after hours," Aldrich said.

"We are very hospitable," Creal said. "There hasn't been a weekend yet without a full house."

Although there are numerous visitors, the residents said they haven't had problems with troublesome drunks.

"There are lots of visitors," Jenni Smith, fifth-year senior in engineering, said, "but there's never been anyone bad come up here."

Parking can be another thorn in the side of the Aggie-dweller.

"There's nowhere to park around here, unless you're lucky enough to find a spot on the street," Gibson said.

Residents also said they worry about their cars getting hit by drunks, and the constant traffic is a hassle.

"The only difference is there's so much more traffic in Aggieville. It's always busy," Jenni Smith said. "We're smack-dab in the middle of it."

The area does tend to be noisier than a neighborhood, with drunks closing the bars every night of the week.

"When people stand outside after the bars close, you can hear everything they say," Gibson said.

Bryan Key, a fifth-year senior in mechanical engineering who lives above the old Kite's, said he can hardly tell what's going on outside with the windows shut.

"The biggest drawback is the stupid speaker that blares all night into the apartment," he said. "It plays elevator music."

Creal summed it up best.

"This is my K-State experience," she said.

Violin adds voice, shines through Drovers

AMY ZIEGLER
Collegian

The Drovers traveled from Chicago to the Midwest to deliver 1-1/2 hours of pure energy and Irish-tinged rock to K-State students at 7 p.m. Thursday in the Union Plaza.

The Union Program Council Eclectic Committee brought one of the most unique bands in the alternative music scene to Manhattan in a performance which was introduced as the "musical event of the year."

One of the main highlights of the Drovers was the violin.

The violin not only had a voice in the band, but at times, it shined through the guitars and the drums to be one of the leading instruments.

It would heighten the intensity of the music during the times when the music had an alternative sound, and the next moment, it would sound like the element of an orchestra or a folk group.

With all the different instruments such as a mandolin, drums, a violin, and a tambourine, one would think they would blend together in a mass of noise.

Instead, the instruments complemented each other and made the Drovers stand apart from most bands on the scene.

The band is known for its live-stage presence, but didn't convulse on stage or explode with energy and emotion.

The members stood on stage, concentrated on their music and appeared as dignified and professional musicians.

The music could easily speak for itself and didn't need a lot of stage antics to make the Drover's performance shine.

They manipulated the instruments to make simple magic.

After a while, they even showcased their talent by switching band roles.

The drummer grabbed a tambourine, the lead singer traded his electric guitar in for an acoustic guitar, and the violinist started to play a mandolin.

By changing the instruments, the Drovers changed from an alternative-style band to an almost folk and Irish group.

The people who came to the show all sat down on the lawn at the start of the performance, and after a request from violinist Sean Cleland, the students started to come forward and dance by the stage.

In a city bombarded by country music, the Drovers gave K-State students the opportunity to experience something completely different.

Eric Bohn, junior in psychology, said he enjoyed the performance by the Drovers.

"I like what I've heard so far. The violin is a great touch in a band like this, and they have a cool rhythm section," Bohn said.

Jennifer Johnson, sophomore in philosophy, history and anthropology, said she first heard the music in the movie, "Blink."

Other students may not have seen the movie, but they definitely know who the Drovers are now after their incredible performance at K-State.

Sisterly love turns sinister in true play

TERRY SCRUTON
Collegian

"My Sister in this House" is a play that is certain to raise more than a few eyebrows.

Based on a true story, the play takes place in 1933 in Lemans, France. The play tells the story of the events leading up to the grisly murder of a Lemans socialite and her young daughter.

The plot of the play concerns two sisters who were raised in convents and work as live-in servants for a cruel mistress named Madame Danzard.

The sisters love each other dearly. As the play progresses, however, this love turns into something more than just the sisterly variety.

Their love and devotion to each other causes tension in the household. The sisters become somewhat lax in their duties, causing Madame Danzard to grow increasingly angry toward the end of the play.

SHOW TIMES

"My Sister in this House" will be at 8 p.m. today and Monday in the Purple Masque Theatre.

The acting in this play is fine. Jennifer Grace is very convincing as the shy, introverted Lea Lutton. Laura Camien turns in a good performance as Lea's elder sister, Christine.

The best performer of the show, however, was Deidre Ensz, who plays the malicious Madame Danzard with snooty, almost sadistic glee. It's obvious Ensz relishes her role.

The play also features Melissa Pamperin as Madame Danzard's prissy daughter, Isabelle, who makes Christine jealous by monopolizing Lea.

The direction of this play is nicely done as well. It can't be easy to turn a small theater like the Purple Masque into a large, multi-room house. This troupe manages to pull it off.

There were a couple of scenes in which the dialogue was supposed to be taking place in separate rooms at the same time. Here, the dialogue overlaps, making it difficult to follow.

If there is one main problem with this production, it is the play itself. The early dialogue sometimes seems to go nowhere.

All in all, "My Sister in this House" is intriguing enough to hold a viewer's interest for the entire evening. The performances are engaging enough to warrant seeing the play.

Viewers should be forewarned, however, the play does contain a violent ending, a brief nude scene, and several kisses between the lead actresses.

Freshman seeks advice for marriage, school

DEAR CASSIE, by Cassandra Duveaux

Dear Cassandra,

After a lot of thought and arguments with my parents, I want another view. I want to get married.

I'm a freshman and have been dating the same guy for awhile, and we've discussed marriage a lot. The only reason we're waiting is because both of our parents would cut money if we got married. I don't get much financial aid now anyway, mostly loans, because my parents make "too much" money. I guess what I really want to know is could we both go to college full-time if we were married?

Signed,
Young Love

Dear Young Love,

Often people think they are ready to get married, but they always have major obstacles to overcome.

You didn't tell me if your parents were against the marriage, but if they are, that should weigh into your decision.

As for being able to afford school, it shouldn't be too hard, as you are likely to be eligible for for financial aid.

Just be prepared to pay back some loans.

If you two are really committed to each other, and ready to work through the obstacles, by all means, go for it!

Lollapalooza? No, it's Deltapalooza II.

K-State is having its own version of Lollapalooza, a national alternative-music tour, tonight.

Deltapalooza II will feature Turquoise Sol, Bosom and L.A. Ramblers.

The second-annual concert will be at 7 p.m. at the Wareham Opera House. The event is sponsored by the Delta Delta Delta sorority.

This year, Deltapalooza II will be indoors instead of being in Memorial Stadium.

"I think the concert will be much better inside because the Wareham has more of a concert atmosphere," Kerry Moriarty, Tri-Delt philanthropy chairwoman, said.

The concert was moved inside because the Wareham has better facilities for such an event, she said.

"We moved the show inside this year because last year, people tried to get in without paying," Kelly Strain, junior in interior design, said. "We tried to fence in Memorial Stadium, and people would get through the fence or sit outside the fence and listen."

Deltapalooza II has been publicized more than last year's event. Ticket and T-shirt sales are up from last year's figures.

"We have been doing well on the ticket sales so far," Strain said. "We pre-sold tickets and shirts to the fraternities and sororities earlier, and we were pleased with those results."

The Tri-Delts are selling tickets and T-shirts at a table in front of the Union until today at noon.

"We have had a lot of interested people come up and look at the shirts and ask about the concert," Sarah Schroeder, junior in pre-veterinary medicine, said.

Early exposure and pre-sales of tickets have been profitable. Tickets bought in advance are $5. About 125 tickets have been sold.

For the people who missed out on the pre-sales, tickets will be sold at the door for $7 each.

"We will have a lot of people hear about it on the radio or on campus and buy their tickets at the door," Moriarty said.

This year, Deltapalooza II is expected to bring in more people and money. Moriarty said she expects 200-300 people at the concert.

"Overall, we just want to make more than last year," she said.

Deltapalooza is sponsored by K-Rock, Walson Inc., Varney's Book Store, Rusty's Last Chance Restaurant & Saloon, On the Wild Side and Pyramid Pizza.

Proceeds from the concert go to St. Jude's Children's Cancer Research, Strain said. Last year, the concert raised about $1,000.

Emergency crews speak with passengers of a Chevrolet Blazer that rolled onto its side in a two-vehicle accident Thursday afternoon at Old Claflin Road and North Manhattan Avenue. Three people were injured. Two females with head injuries were taken to Saint Mary Hospital, and another went alone. The north-bound driver of the Blazer was preparing to turn left on Old Claflin Road, tried to change lanes and was hit by the other vehicle.

Group wants to bring in music with positive message

TERRY SCRUTON
Collegian

"The youth of today need a positive message," Sally Anderson, Manhattan resident, said.

"We hope to encourage students to stay on the right track," she said.

That was the idea behind Heart for Youth, a volunteer organization founded by Anderson and Karen Thurman, Manhattan residents.

Both women said they wanted to bring music to Manhattan that has a more positive message than many of today's mainstream artists.

"We've both been to Christian music concerts with our kids in other areas," Thurman said. "We thought Manhattan would be a good center for the area to bring the larger, more well-known groups in."

Along with music, the organization is sponsoring Heart for Youth Week from Sept. 29 to Oct. 1. The week will feature athletes such as Paul Coffman and Gary Spani telling their success stories at local middle and high schools.

Teams from Heart for Youth will visit schools in Ft. Riley, Junction City, Wamego and Manhattan.

Manhattan Middle School will be host to one of the teams today at 8:15 and 9 a.m.

The week will finish at 8 p.m. on Saturday, Oct. 1, with a concert featuring pop singer Kathy Troccoli.

Troccoli is best known for her singles "Tell Me Where It Hurts," "Everything Changes" and "My Life Is In Your Hands."

Heart for Youth Week was started in February and featured, among other actors, Billy Zabka of "The Karate Kid," lecturing at area high schools.

Thurman and Anderson said they believe these kind of role models reach out to the students more effectively than teachers or parents can.

"We feel that kids will listen to someone famous that they recognize," Anderson said. "The kids will listen to their message and bring that message back to the parents and teachers."

"Sometimes it takes that special role model for kids to be able to listen," Thurman said.

Local response to Heart for Youth week has been positive.

"Last year, there was an OK response," Marvin Marsh, principal of Manhattan Middle School, said. "This year, they're bringing in those athletes, and there should be a much better response."

"It was real positive," Farrell Miller, principal of Junction City Middle School, said. "The actors were not only entertaining, but they focused on staying in school and doing the right thing."

Miller said children were very positive in response to last year, and they are anxious for this year's presentation.

"You get someone like Paul Coffman," Miller said, "and it's someone the kids see all the time on television. Kids listen to that."

Not all response, however, has been positive. Gail Bennett, teacher at Manhattan High, said some parents were questioning the group's agenda.

"There was some concern last year that their message was exclusively Christian and conservative," Bennett said. "A lot of parents were concerned that the school was promoting just one religious perspective."

▶ CAREER FAIR

Job opportunities abundant at fair

MOLLY WEIGEL
Collegian

With a stack of resumes and a map in hand, K-State students wandered around the K-State Union introducing themselves to prospective employers.

More than 150 companies were represented at the fair Thursday in an all-day event from 8:30 a.m. to 3:30 p.m.

Students said they had both positive and negative reactions to the fair.

"I found out that by having a four-year degree, you have a lot of options," Theresa Murphy, senior in human development and family studies, said.

Andy Farquhar, sophomore in hotel and restaurant management, said he got a feel for what employers are looking for.

"I'm a transfer student from Wichita State University. They don't have anything like this," Farquhar said. "I have an interview lined up tomorrow for an internship with the Hyatt."

Christian Freberg, senior in milling science and management, said he was somewhat frustrated with the companies, however.

"Milling science is a very specific major," Freberg said. "Companies seem really turned off if you are not in the major that they are looking for."

Jacquelyn Pinney, a May 1994 K-State graduate in human ecology, said she agreed with Freberg.

"K-State encourages students to broaden out and talk to companies outside of your major," Pinney said. "Unfortunately, I don't think they have told the companies to expect that."

Pinney was one of several graduates who came to the fair to look at career options.

Donnell Dantzler, a May 1994 K-State graduate in industrial engineering, had the same idea.

Dantzler, who currently lives in Kansas City, said he was impressed with the fair.

"Sometimes, they just want to give you their business card. There seemed to be opportunities at most of the booths," Dantzler said.

Students weren't the only ones who had something to say about the fair. Several company representatives had their input as well.

"For the most part, I thought it went really well," Stephanie Frey, with Ernst and Young, a Kansas City accounting firm, said.

"I've been to career fairs at K-State for four years. It seemed like this year not as many students came by," Frey said.

Dave Sedlock, with Sprint Corporate Audit Services out of Kansas City, said there seemed to be some confusion as to what the format was.

Most employers agreed that having all the colleges together was beneficial.

"It was much better to have everyone in one central place," Kevin Kolbeck, account executive with Black and Decker, said.

James Akin, director of Career and Employment Services, said he was very pleased with the outcome of the fair.

"It was a fantastic University-wide effort. We had excellent student volunteers, from freshmen to graduate students," Akin said.

Akin said evaluation forms will be collected from the companies and the students.

"We will rely on their input to make the necessary adjustments for future career fairs," he said.

Bicycle regulations dominate discussion after riding his bike on a sidewalk on campus.

Nabeeha Kazi, public relations director for SGA, asked Camp if he thought student and campus police relations improved after the incident involving him and the K-State Police.

"I don't feel everything is resolved," Camp said.

"I'm not sure if the campus police and student relationship has improved. Things did die down, so I could get back to my school work. I don't think it's improved, but it hasn't gotten any worse. I'm just glad it didn't get as bad as it could have gotten."

Ronnie Grice, captain of K-State Police, said it is important for students and officers to sit down and discuss issues, and he hopes more gatherings like the forum will be held in the future.

"Students have a responsibility to get to know officers, even when there's not a crisis," Grice said. "Things can then be completely and totally avoided."

Terry Teske, computer information specialist at K-State, said he was appalled when he heard of the new bike regulations, but now believes things are being done to change the situation.

"I'm glad they did this," Teske said. "I was impressed by the people who came and with the parking commissioner. It's too bad it took all this to make it happen."

Proposal recommends busing, shuttle service

this list together," Finkeldei said. "It does no good to be safe on campus if you walk into the city and can't feel safe."

The committee also recommended several non-safety items. It recommended a bus and shuttle service running through the city and more scholarships for students are also on this list.

Brenda Halinski, graduate senator, proposed an amendment to strike the item to link Farrell Library by computer with the Manhattan Public Library.

The city would pay money to Farrell to buy extra books under the agreement, Finkeldei said. The amendment failed.

Another priority of the report was to expand recreational facilities in Manhattan, such as a new ice rink so the hockey team wouldn't have to drive to Kansas City to practice.

This proposal will now be given to President Jon Wefald. These recommendations will pass through a mayoral committee, which includes two students. The allocation will then be voted on by the Manhattan City Council.

"I think it is important that students submit a list," Henry said. "Otherwise, all of the planning and research we did on the issue of annexation would be for nothing."

TIPS FOR WRITING A CLASSIFIED AD

Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.

Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.

Consider including the price. This tells buyers if they are looking at something in their price range.

CATEGORIES

To help you find what you are looking for, the classified ads have been arranged by category and sub-category. All categories are marked by one of the large images, and sub-categories are preceded by a number designation.

WE DO NOT USE PHONE NUMBERS OR LAST NAMES IN PERSONALS.

Working it Out

Wildcat Workouts:

Enjoying exercise is a great way to help you adhere to a workout program. Aerobic exercise, which develops cardiovascular fitness, helps you enjoy other activities, strengthens your heart muscle and improves the efficiency of other body systems. Additionally, aerobic exercise can help you control your weight, cope with stress and strengthen your immune system. To achieve these benefits, choose a continuous activity you can enjoy. To stick with it, join with others in exercising.

Wildcat Workouts are a fun way to develop cardiovascular fitness. Aerobics, Step Aerobics and Circuit sessions are set to upbeat music with energetic exercise leaders to motivate and challenge you. Take advantage of the variety of times and sessions that are offered to meet your exercise needs.

Keep in mind the F.I.T.ness concepts: Frequency, Intensity and Time. Reach and maintain your target heart rate for at least 30 minutes three times per week. Vary your activities to include strength and flexibility training.

Wildcat Workouts presents:

Wicked Weights

Halloween Workout

October's special event, "Wicked Weights" will be held Tuesday, October 25, at 5:30 p.m. Don't get spooked--just wear black or orange for this frightfully fun workout.

Pool Action

There's something for everyone at the pools. Swimmers and non-swimmers can enjoy Aqua Aerobics for a great workout. Those looking for a cross-training opportunity can join in our Deep Water Jogging sessions. Swimmers can condition in the 8-lane pool with wave-reducing lanes, backstroke flags, kickboards, pull buoys and hand paddles. Recreators can enjoy the 6-lane pool for water basketball, family swim, or simply FUN! Recreational Services provides over 50 hours per week of open swim at the Ahearn Natatorium. So, JUMP IN!

Who's Who at Rec Services

MICHELLE BISHOP, who is from Wichita, Kansas, has been an exercise leader for Recreational Services since her freshman year. Michelle, now a junior in nutrition and exercise science, said leading step-aerobics gives her a chance to motivate people. Michelle is excited about the expansion because the new facility will have its own room for aerobics sessions. In the future, she hopes to become a nutrition exercise consultant.

DAN BOOE, native of Cherryvale, Kansas, will be graduating this December. Dan, senior in elementary education, has worked for Recreational Services as a building manager for almost two years. He is doing his student teaching at Chapman High School this fall and hopes to stay in Kansas upon graduation, where he will pursue his career as both teacher and coach. In his free time, Dan enjoys fishing, hunting and athletic activities.

MY FAVORITE WORKOUT!

CHICO CRICHLON, sophomore in pre-respiratory therapy, is a regular user of the Rec Complex weight room. Chico works out six days a week and follows a one-hour self-established routine. The first day Chico does bench press and triceps, the second day is devoted to back and bicep exercises followed by leg and shoulder exercises the third day. He repeats this routine to complete the rest of the week. In addition, he does abdominal exercises four days a week. Along with regular exercise, Chico eats a low-fat diet and gets plenty of rest to help him through his busy schedule.

- It is the responsibility of every participant to see that weight plates, bars, handles, clamps and other items are properly used and returned to their storage area after use.
- Clamps are to be used with all free weight workouts.
- Do not drop weights or bang weights on machines.
- Use a spotter with all free weight lifts.
- Do not waste time or delay when others are waiting to use equipment.
- Shirts and shoes (not open toe shoes) are required in the weight and fitness rooms.
- Do not use equipment in such a way that it will damage walls, mirrors, ceilings, or floors.
- Weight belts should be removed when laying on stomach to avoid the buckle damaging the upholstery.

OUTDOOR RENTAL CENTER will be CLOSED during the winter months. October 31 is the last day of operation this season.

CONSTRUCTION UPDATE

Changes are very noticeable in the Rec Complex area. Exterior stone work continues across the face of the building and is close to completion. Windows are being placed and the roof work will begin this month.

Inside the building the walls are being placed, air ducts are being hung, fireproofing sprayed, and other mechanical and electrical work continues. Installment of flooring in the new gym should also begin this month.

Playfield light work continues with the light poles in place. Electrical hookup will be complete this month. No use of lights is expected for programming this fall.

Visitor's day showcases projects, goals

JENNIFER PETERSON
Collegian

At the Land Institute in Salina, they choke their own chickens, study organic farming and plow their fields with horses.

The Land Institute is a research and education organization that studies sustainable agriculture.

On Sunday, the Land Institute sponsored its annual visitor's day, and more than 400 people attended the open house.

Some of the visitor's day activities included lectures on landscaping and organic gardening, and tours of the prairies and facilities.

"People come from all over the world to see the Land Institute," Antonio Serrano, Land Institute intern, said.

"The institution is more well-known in the world than it is in Salina itself," Volker Wittig, Salina resident and former Land Institute intern, said.

"We get people from all over the world, leading thinkers, visiting the Land Institute," said Matthew Logan, director of development for the Land Institute.

"The head of the Soviet equivalent of NASA, a physicist, visited a couple of weeks ago," Logan said.

"It (the Land Institute) is a well-kept secret," Vernon Wielbe, Hillsboro resident and Land Institute visitor, said.

"The mission of the Land Institute is to promote healthy relationships with the earth," Logan said.

The four main projects that the Land Institute is working on are perennial polyculture research, Sunshine Farm, Matfield Green and the education program, Logan said.

"Perennial polyculture research asks questions about the nature of agricultural practices now," Logan said.

"If you remember anything about the Land Institute, remember that our mission is to save soil," Logan said.

Perennial polyculture looks into ways of saving soil by using perennial crops instead of fertilizer and chemicals.

The second project, Sunshine Farm, provides its own energy and sponsors its own fertility, Logan said.

Tractors and combines at Sunshine Farm run on bio-diesel fuel, which is made from extracting oil from sunflowers, Logan said.

In addition, the farm also uses draft horses for plowing.

"The key to Sunshine Farm is our accounting book," Logan said.

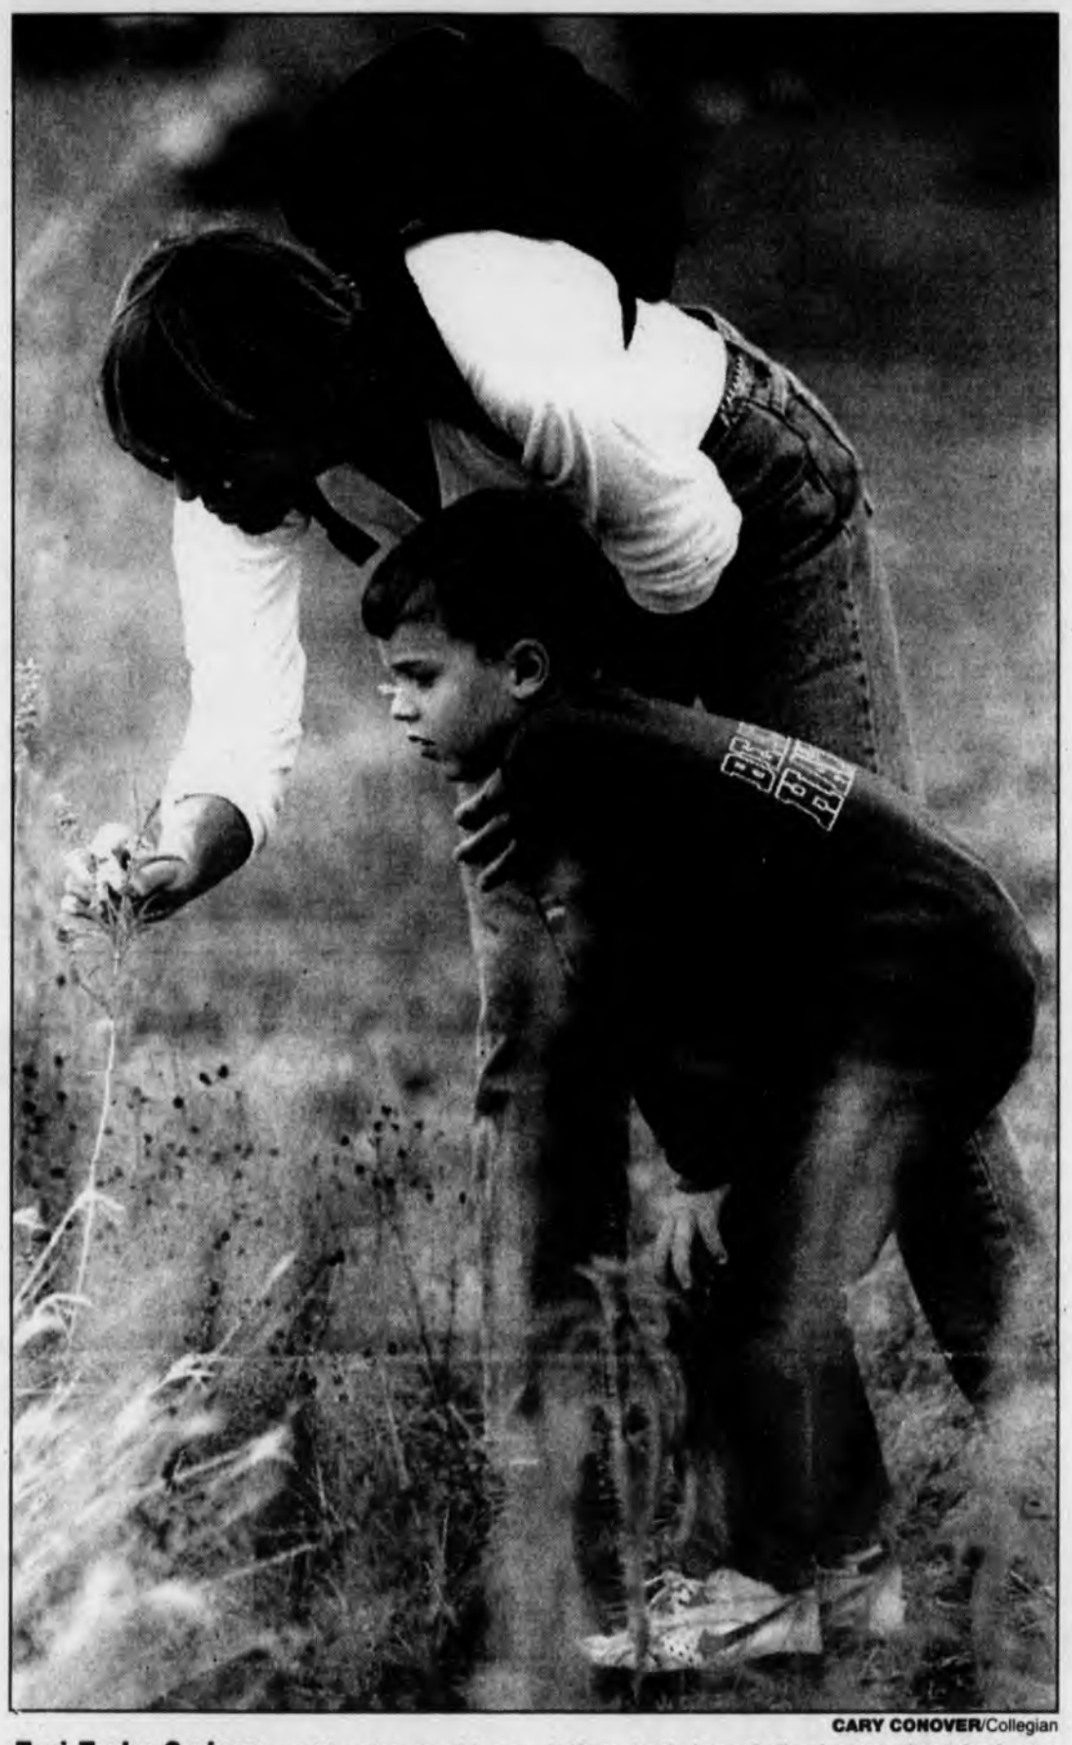
"Money is not the true measurement of food production. Everything has energetic value," Logan said.

Logan used the example of a shovel.

A shovel might cost $15, but at the farm, that doesn't matter.

At Sunshine Farm, they take into account how much energy it takes to grow a tree, how much energy is required to cut and fashion the shovel and how much energy it costs to transport the shovel to Kansas, Logan said.

"It's an incredibly detailed process that you can't even imagine," Logan said.



Matfield Green, the third project, is a study of a rural community.

"At Matfield Green, we are applying our studies to human communities," Logan said.

"Eventually, we hope to use our Sunshine Farm accounting on a community-wide basis," Logan said.

The final project at the Land Institute is their education program.

Letter to show parents a need for more funds

LISA ELLIOTT
Collegian

K-State students and their parents will be receiving letters from the student body president's office soon.

The letter is a grass-roots effort to educate students and their parents about the rapidly increasing price of a good education.

"It doesn't do much for us to have a great University and have tuition too expensive for students," Mike Zamrzla, chief of staff, said.

The letter is still in the developmental process, he said. Part of the letter will be statistics on the increasing tuition rate and the amount of funds received from the state for higher education, Zamrzla said.

"Ten years ago, students paid 25 percent of their education. Now, they pay 35 percent," Brad Finkeldei, student body vice president, said. "We shouldn't be shouldering that cost."

Student Governing Association's goal is to get parents involved in lobbying for more funding for higher education.

"It's important that students have access to education beyond high school," Zamrzla said.

Zamrzla said they hope to create a sandwich of pressure on the Kansas Legislature with the parents on one side and student government on the other.

"We need citizens to call and write — 'I want my child or grandchild to have access to a quality education,'" he said.

SGA has been putting pressure on the Legislature for a long time, but there has been little grass-roots pressure on the Legislature, he said.

"We don't want to price our students out of an education," Finkeldei said.

Higher education is even more important in the global society, Zamrzla said. A good education gives students more marketability in the work force, he said.

"If we want our state to be a better place, education is the answer," Finkeldei said.

Finkeldei said while there are many important issues facing the legislature right now, higher education should become a top priority.

"We think higher education has an effect on the other issues," Zamrzla said. "We hope that by addressing higher education now, it will have an effect on the other problems later."

Zamrzla said SGA isn't sure how it will pay for the mailing.

Religious leaders share meaning of inner peace, harmony, respect

LESLEY MOSS
Collegian

Speakers representing Christianity, Islam and Judaism addressed the topic of violence and how faith is an ingredient in the journey to peace Sunday.

About 70 people were present at the Interfaith/Ecumenical Dialogue at the International Student Center.

The dialogue began at 7 p.m., following a soup-and-salad supper.

Sister Mary Christine Fellerhoff, from Sisters of Saint Agnes of Milwaukee, Wis., said the habit of categorizing things into good and evil parts causes people to make comparisons that can lead to violence.

"I believe violence comes from our own hearts, where sin is created," Fellerhoff said.

She said indifference and lack of awareness contribute to violence.

"There is a hunger in the world for spirituality, which cannot be achieved without inner peace," Fellerhoff said.

Fellerhoff said inner peace leads to non-violence, and prayer contributes to harmony.

Fellerhoff said dialogue is one way to have a heart-to-heart connection with another person.

Hamed Ghazali, vice president of the Islamic Association of North America, opened his statements by saying, "Peace be among you all."

He said peace can lead to peace on personal, familial, community and universal levels.

"We need to take care of the Earth and make it a better place and respect human values and behave as human beings," Ghazali said.

Ghazali said the Islamic faith encourages action in fighting violence.

Taking action is a step to harmony, and offering services to people who suffer will have an effect on people's hearts, Ghazali said.

Rabbi Larry Karol, from the Shalom Temple in Topeka, said being respectful to all people and cooperating with others to bring peace where it was not originally found will help harmony.

Different faiths can work to achieve peace by joining in a common cause like hunger, homelessness or poverty, Karol said.

Ashley Souther, sophomore in political science and international studies; said he thought the three religions were represented equally.

"I did think some were better speakers than others, and this was unequal, but representation was the same," Souther said.

"I think it is very important to have a dialogue such as this one because one may begin to think in terms of how movies represent a specific nationality of people," Souther said.

Souther said he believes thinking of others on a personal level is necessary to achieve peace and harmony.

At the end of the evening, everyone joined hands in a circle to meditate.

NEWS BRIEFS

▶ K-STATE SPONSORS REGIONAL CONFERENCE FOR COLLEGE UNIONS

The Association of College Unions International met this weekend to discuss ideas on programs, services and operations of student unions.

The K-State Union sponsored the three-day regional conference titled "Focus on Students: Advancing the Union's Role."

ACU-I is divided into 16 regions, Bill Smith, director of the Campus Activities Center at Wichita State University, said.

K-State is in region 11, which is made up of schools from Kansas, Missouri, Oklahoma and Nebraska, Smith said.

"The main goal that ACU-I has is to educate students," Smith said.

K-State has been planning and organizing the conference for almost a year, Cliff Pierron, president of region 11, said.

"There will be educational sessions on specific topics," Pierron, fifth-year senior in journalism and mass communications and English, said.

The educational sessions covered topics including diversity, leadership and time management, Pierron said.

"This year, we want to allow students the opportunity to have more input," Pierron said.

In order to involve more students, round table discussions were offered, Sarah Hadley, Union Program Council adviser, said.

The conference also provided a leadership challenge course, team building sessions, campus tours and a dinner with movie themes, Hadley said.

Ann Claussen, assistant director and program director for the Union, was officially recognized as the incoming ACU-I regional representative for region 11.

"I have been involved with ACU-I since I was in college," Claussen said.

Claussen said her new responsibilities include chairing the Steering Committee, coordinating programs and services and organizing the association's primary events.

Smith, who delivered the keynote speech, said he was very impressed with the way K-State students and staff organized the conference.

The conference concludes today with a closing luncheon and awards presentation.

▶ POETRY READING DURING RACIAL/ETHNIC HARMONY WEEK OPEN TO PUBLIC

"Anything goes except your clothes" at the poetry reading at 9 p.m. today in the K-State Union Art Gallery.

Students can read their own work or read a poem by somebody who has inspired them, Chrissy Hathaway, Union Program Council Arts Committee chairwoman, said.

Hathaway, a junior in secondary education, said it is fortunate that this poetry reading in the monthly series falls during Racial/Ethnic Harmony Week.

"We like to add as many activities to the calendar during this week, so there are lots for students to learn and chances to express themselves," she said.

Students aren't limited in any way in choosing the subjects they discuss, but readings are limited to five minutes, Hathaway said.

"We let anything go," she said. "An emphasis doesn't have to be put on racial and ethnic themes, because it becomes just that because of the mix of the people."

Dave Breneman, a junior in art and a member of the UPC Arts Committee, said that last year students read poems in Spanish and about aspects from other cultures.

Students interested in reading can sign up at the UPC office on the third floor of the Union.

"We usually only have five-to-10 people sign up," Hathaway said. "We open the floor up for the people to read who didn't sign up."

Refreshments will be served, and everybody is welcome to attend, Hathaway said.

"People are certainly welcome to come even if they are not reading," she said.

While trying to elude him, a greased pig is tackled by 8-year-old Brandon Florke Saturday afternoon at the Ogden Fall Festival. Also in the ring is his 6-year-old brother, Chris, and Trent Taylor, 7. It took the trio a little more than a minute to catch the pig.

Fall Festival

Getting dunked, arrested and 'pigging out' just a cow chip's throw away in Ogden

DOUG BASSETT
Collegian

If you sat at home this weekend, you missed a chance to catch a greased pig, bash an old car, listen to live music, drink beer, eat some roast pig and get arrested.

No, this wasn't a party in Aggieville. These are just some of the things you could have done if you had gone to the Ogden Fall Festival Saturday.

The festival started off this year with a parade at 10 a.m. The parade had 52 entries and consisted of everything from a marching band to the Manhattan Roundup Club.

A contest for the best in the parade was won by the Little Prairie Women Pot and Pan Band. There were also floats and a few old classic cars in the parade.

"The parade is about the most popular attraction of the festival," Anne Puett, chairwoman of the festival, said.

After the parade, there were plenty of activities.

If you wanted to have people arrested, all you had to do was pay $1, and they would have to stay in a cage for 10 minutes or pay a dollar to get out.

They also could be put in a dunk tank for people to dunk.

Matt Moseler, Ogden firefighter, said the proceeds for the dunk tank will go to buy new equipment and help maintain the old equipment.

Brad Clark, assistant chief in charge of the fire department, said all three of the department's firetrucks were in the parade.

"There are a total of seven firefighters here. We are showing people the firetrucks and also watching for accidents like heat exhaustion," Clark said, who was also an Emergency Medical Service worker for the festival.

The Festival lasted all day, with a barbecue dinner at 6:30 p.m. and a street dance from 8 to 11 p.m.

During the afternoon, there were craft booths selling handmade items and a cow-chip throwing contest.

The festival committee tries to make it an annual event, but doesn't have the festival every year.

Puett said she hopes to have the festival every year from now on, and that with good volunteers, it will probably happen.

"There are seven volunteers this year, and everybody has worked really hard," Puett said.

Mona Bass, volunteer member of the festival committee, said she enjoyed participating.

"This is my first year. I thought it was great. I loved doing it," Bass said.

Arts and craft show catches early Christmas shoppers

JULIE KUHLMAN
Collegian

Some early Christmas shopping was underway this weekend.

The Silver Dollar City Arts and Crafts Guild made its way to the Manhattan Town Center, and customers were pulling out their wallets.

"Around Christmas time is when we do our best business," Sue Batton, who makes hand-cut copper artifacts, said. "We were hoping some people would do some early Christmas shopping today, and it looks like they are."

The show had booths, which contained everything from wood-carved tables and chairs to homemade jelly, set up.

One of the more popular booths appeared to be Batton's.

"I hand cut 92 percent of everything I make, and it is all made from raw product." Batton said.

Batton said her work is unique.

"It is an art developed," she said.

She said nature is the theme for most of the products.

"It seems to sell the best, but we also do some functional things," Batton said.

Batton demonstrated how she makes the copper products on Friday and Saturday. Demonstrations will also be given when the show returns June 8-11, 1995.

Batton said a simple piece will usually take a half hour of work.

"A piece like that runs for only about $5," she said.

Many of the booths contained hand-carved wood furniture and animals.

"Some of the stuff I can make in two days," James McCarty, who carves wood-shaped animals, said. Suzette Findley, who had hand-sewn quilts displayed, said it's what most of the people with the craft show do for a living.

"I usually go to about 85 percent of the showings, and the rest of the time I am usually at home sewing," Findley said.

IN OUR OPINION

By the Collegian Editorial Board

Harmony week shouldn't be necessary

There shouldn't have to be a Racial/Ethnic Harmony Week.

Awareness of other cultures, races and genders is a goal that should be unchanging and constant, both on K-State's campus and in every student's life, not just because it's the politically correct thing to do, but because it makes sense.

Instead of everyone trying to be culturally aware and mobilized for one week of the year, the campus should attempt on every level to simply be aware of the influence and importance of diversity in our everyday lives.

It is the small changes, implemented over time, that will make the difference.

Paying attention to minority influences in K-State's curriculum should be a priority whenever it is pertinent to the academic topics at hand. Every professor who takes the time to point out the legitimate influence of a black architect or a Hispanic poet is making strides in the right direction.

Racial and ethnic harmony is not merely about speeches and forums. It is about the presence of Cesar Chavez and Maya Angelou in our classrooms.

It is about knowing more about the world than we can see from our windows.

It is in our best interests to know as much as possible about other cultures. The global village has arrived, and we are sitting in the middle of it. To ignore the importance of anything not white, male and American would be to sell ourselves short.

As the world gets smaller, the picture we see has to get bigger. With any luck, in 20 years, a Racial/Ethnic Harmony Week will seem like an afterthought.

TOLES

Self-defense a must for women

This one is for the ladies.

SCOTT ALLEN MILLER

Self-defense can prevent rape before it happens. Rape prevention has usually meant improving the self-esteem in men so they won't rape. This type of prevention may reduce rape but will never eliminate it or any other crime, because humans are brutal to one another by nature. There will always be rapists and rape victims.

Self-defense is the most practical rape prevention measure you can take. It doesn't matter what you wear, how old you are, or how pretty you are — you are a target for a rapist. Whether you're a victim of a rapist may be more in your control than you think. Rape is never the victim's fault because she didn't defend herself. (The Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, however, has more or less ruled to the contrary of that.) Self-defense in a rape is like wearing a safety belt in a car accident; no matter who's fault it is, you're better off with it. Self-defense skills might be the safety belt you need to keep an attack from becoming a rape.

When most girls on the playground are skipping rope and playing hopscotch, the boys are often rough-housing, playing aggressively and even fighting. These boys are socialized to value and develop self-defense skills and strength. Girls, on the other hand, are discouraged from learning self-defense and building muscle. They're left to hope that princes will always be at their sides, ready to save them from trouble.

This Cinderella complex, once "just" a form of self-limitation, is now deadly. Your lifestyle is probably more like today's men than your mother's. Statistics show that you're getting married later in life, living alone more and spending more time on the street and at work outside the home than your mother did.

You cannot, as your mother may have, rely on a man to defend you and fight your battles for you. You can't allow the men in your life to convince her that they possibly can. If you do, you are a perfect target for a rapist. You must learn the self-defense skills that most men learned as boys. You have to be as vicious, strong and tenacious as your potential attacker. Can you be? Of course you can! The failure to teach self-defense to women undermines rape prevention the same ways gun control undermines crime prevention. The paradoxical misconception persists that with the right laws and education, Utopia is possible. In reality, nothing has nor will ever rid any society of rape or any other crime. This is why men and women must be taught and allowed to defend themselves. Instead of teaching kids how to play their favorite sports, perhaps public schools would better serve society by teaching martial arts in physical education class.

Criminals don't share the same values as the society that wants to stop them. Criminals respect force and pain, not reason and compassion. If you accept this as truth and act accordingly, you will have a chance of preventing and surviving a rape.

This is not a perfect world. Not knowing how to defend yourself from a rape is like sleeping alone with your front door open every night. Planning to hit an attacker "where it counts" is simply fooling yourself into a false sense of security. Boyfriends and brothers can't be with you 24 hours a day. In 1994, you and only you can take responsibility for your own safety and peace of mind.

Take responsibility for yourself by learning martial arts, lifting weights, or learning to properly use a firearm. Don't be afraid! Don't bury your head in the sand by thinking rape can't happen to you. Don't convince yourself that yours is the weaker sex; that's a lie. There is more power within your mind, spirit and body than anyone knows. It's not your fault if a rapist attacks you, but wouldn't you want to know how to stop him?

When shit happens, the CIA finds out

It's time to re-evalute the roles and aspirations of the Central Intelligence Agency.

DAN LEWERENZ

On the surface, if you didn't know any better, you'd think the agency had gone right down the toilet.

I'm not just talking about the end of the Cold War or charges of sexual discrimination or even the whole Ames affair.

I'm talking about the CIA's penchant for studying what goes right down the toilet.

It seems that for years, the American intelligence community has done its best not only to collect the shit on foreign leaders — we've been collecting the shit from foreign leaders.

I can see the want ads now.

WANTED-Highly educated individual, fluent in Russian, firearms training highly recommended. Experience with diapers and/or plumbing necessary. Apply at Central Intelligence Agency. Must demonstrate ingenuity by finding agency. Must bring own feces. Firearms provided. There is a point to this. Part of the role of the CIA is to inform the president on the health of foreign leaders. As many are understandably unwilling to send their medical files to Washington (for fear they'll be lost in the mail), and some are unable to afford the cost of an examination in the States without health-care reform, our dauntless intelligence gatherers must find another way to elicit this information.

Talk about guys who are not afraid to get their hands dirty.

The CIA is rather fanatical about this part of their job. Among their more noted accomplishments was the discovery of an unnaturally high testosterone count on King Farouk of Egypt.

While the king was in exile in Monte Carlo, the CIA was able to reroute all of the urinals in Farouk's favorite casino. This, coupled with round-the-clock surveillance, allowed top-American officials to copiously study the urine of one of the most famous foreign ex-dignitaries in the world.

And you thought the White House plumbers were good.

It is very likely that the CIA will be taking this particular task much more seriously in light of events this summer. The death of Kim Il Sung, the sole ruler of North Korea for the last 40 years, came as a complete shock to our government. North Korea's nuclear potential and plans for disarmament were on the table, making the moment especially tense. And the CIA knew nothing.

I'll bet that was rough when the shit hit the fan — no pun intended. There have been some rumblings about abolishing the CIA. Since the end of the Cold War, the agency's raison d'etre has been called into question on numerous occasions.

But I think in this, they have found something worth salvaging. The CIA was created to do the shit-work for the OSS, now they are living up to that.

In fact, the intelligence community's fascination with all things excreted (might one say that they are anal about this?) could be extended to other branches. If the FBI did domestic fecal surveillance, perhaps the whole Waco tragedy could have been avoided.

I don't know how, but everything seems easier in hindsight.

I might even be in favor of the establishment of a Federal Office of Excremental Oversight, authorized under the Justice Department. Directors could be appointed by the president and approved by the Senate.

Agents could play with the toilets of suspected criminals, trying to determine psychological profiles from stool samples. (By the way, what does it mean if you look in the toilet before you flush, and how would this change?)

Regardless of the CIA's future, its past and present will undoubtedly be good for long hours of amusement. And they will all be recorded in the anals of history.

Dan Lewerenz is a senior in philosophy.

Men did not know answer to riddle

Dear Editor,

Last Wednesday, in my class, my instructor told a riddle: A plane crashed into the ocean, and there were two survivors, a doctor and a nurse. They swam to a deserted island, fell in love and had a baby. After a few years, the three were rescued by a ship. The crew members were surprised to find out the doctor was not the baby's father and the nurse was not the baby's mother. How could this be?

Of course, the doctor was a woman, and the nurse was a man. There are two women and more than 20 men in my class. Both women answered correctly but only one or two of the men did.

Why? Later, we talked about sex-bias language (manpower, businessmen, etc.). Some of the men snickered and or said, "This is stupid" under their breath.

Men, it is not stupid. If it were just one word it would be no big deal. But it is all of these sex-biased words that try to squash women down and put men one step higher.

Women, stand up for yourself! Attend the Women's Union meetings every Sunday at 8 p.m. in Union 206. My last comment: Men, don't treat me like a subordinate. God created every person equal. Just ask her.

Math may be difficult; but necessary

Dear Editor,

Sunday afternoon I decided to take a break from my calculus nightmare and peruse the Collegian. I thought to myself that the editorial page is always amusing, and I was not disappointed by Christy Little's column on Friday, Sept. 30.

Christy, you seem to think that mathematics is only for engineers, architects and physicists — a future English/journalism teacher has no need for esoteric math like algebra. I will grant you that I am a student of engineering and probably have a biased opinion, but I am afraid I must disagree with you.

Although mathematics may have very little to do directly with poetry, I would say that poetry and literature are intimately connected to our society.

Since our society has an increasing technological orientation, and mathematics underlies all of science and technology, it would seem prudent to me to make an effort to understand mathematics.

Isn't poetry and literature a reflection of the human condition and society? If so, how can you hope to understand literature and poetry when you are ignorant about a potentially large portion of the subject matter?

Since we live in a democracy, you have the right to vote and inflict your opinion on the rest of us. John Allen Paulos states in "Innumeracy: Mathematical Illiteracy and Its Consequences,""... the inability to deal with numbers and probabilities leads to misinformed governmental policies, confused personal decisions, and an increased susceptibility to pseudo-sciences of all kinds." I agree with his sentiments. Paulos goes on to state that enumerate people also have a strong tendency to be misled by their individual experiences, the media, and drama. I believe that these tendencies lead directly to many of our misinformed government policies. Mathematics can help you separate the facts from fantasy before you vote. You will be bombarded by numbers and mathematics your entire life (e.g., picking a good stock investment and assessing the risks from a medical procedure).

I encourage you to take a few more of those dreaded math classes now so that you can learn to better manipulate and interpret numbers, facts and ideas. If you need more motivation than I have provided in these few paragraphs, try reading the book I mentioned above. Maybe you could even write a critical essay on it for one of your literature classes?

To claim that mathematics does not apply to your chosen field of study and, therefore, does not need to be studied is short-sighted and naive in my opinion.

Further, I would prefer that you, as a future teacher, did not pass on your attitude to future generations of students and poets. College is about more than picking up a few skills and a trade. It is about educating yourself so that you can understand and contribute to our society in an informed and rational manner.

Don't sell yourself short and take the path of least resistance. But perhaps because you are of a more literary bent, you would appreciate the more elegant sentiment offered by Dante Alighieri (taken out of context, of course).

Into the eternal darkness, into fire and into ice.

The Divine Comedy [c. 1310-1320].

Math is part of a basic education

Dear Editor,

I find the Christy Little column appalling. It advocates deliberate ignorance of an entire field of endeavor that permeates modern life.

Perhaps Little would be happier in a time that was more poetic but lacked certain conveniences; like word processors, electric lights and Barbie dolls that say "Math is Hard."

Math and the offshoots of math such as electricity, computers, TV, chemistry and biology etc. (math is kind of basic to all science) are essential to modern life.

How can a journalist discuss statistics without understanding them? (Well, I guess that happens all the time, but then math is apparently beyond most journalists.)

You also suggest that engineers should take more engineering courses, but basic skills in communication are essential to engineers.

Your close-mindedness on the subject of math is scary in one who purports to want to teach. By ignoring the big picture in your education, you lose sight of the fact that the world is more than sonnets. You end up being a person that believes food comes from a supermarket and gasoline from a pump at the gas station.

While it is true that food comes from a supermarket, that superficial perspective is one that impoverishes the one who holds that view. Much as the view that journalists shouldn't undertake to study other fields of endeavor impoverishes the journalist.

Weather delays Loveless concert

JULIE KUHLMAN
Collegian

It was a "hail" of a concert.

The tickets said she would perform rain or shine, and she did. But when the hail came, it was a bit too much.

Patty Loveless signaled her band to quit and announced to the crowd at Sunset Zoo Sunday night she would have to quit singing unless conditions improved.

Luckily, the weather let up, and the concert continued.

Loveless was the featured performer Sunday night at the first "Party On the Plains" Country Music Festival at the Sunset Zoo.

Two local bands opened for the show.

The first was Shootin' Blanks, who sang predominately covers of popular country tunes such as "Should Have Been a Cowboy" by Toby Keith, and a song fitting for the evening "Iola, Don't Bring the Rain."

They also sang a few of their own, including "No Faces No Names" and a song named after their group, "Shootin' Blanks."

Rio then followed, singing older country tunes like "I Want to Kiss You All Over" by Exile and originals like "You Turn Me Around."

Loveless took the stage, opening with a song about a girl who just can't stand to see her man being looked at by other women in "Jealous Bone."

Then, she turned around and sang about the other side of love when a man pays just a little too much attention to his woman in "Chains."

Loveless proceeded to tell the crowd where a great portion of her music's roots have come from.

Country music legends such as Loretta Lynn, George Jones and Patsy Cline have inspired her career, but rock artists such as Elvis Presley and Chuck Berry have also influenced her songs.

In the middle of her tribute to some of these legends, the rain and hailstones came, which resulted in a 40-minute delay of the concert.

When the rain finally let up, Loveless came back out, singing "The Blue Side of Town" before switching to her heartwarming ballad about life's changes in "How Can I Help You Say Goodbye."

She gave the audience a taste of her new compact disc, "When Fallen Angels Fly," with three new cuts.

Loveless followed with other hits, such as "Halfway Down" and "Holding on to Nothing but the Wheel."

The crowd began to whoop and holler when she began "Blame it on your Heart," a song about a man who does his lady wrong.

Finally, she ended the concert with her recent hit single "I Try to Think about Elvis," only to be brought out once more by chants of fans.

Loveless sang "I'm That Kind of Girl" in her encore performance, which she said could fit Kansas women everywhere.

The live performance of Loveless gave the audience an interaction with the star, which made even her most touching ballad more heartwarming.

Patty Loveless sings to a crowd of fans Sunday night at Sunset Zoo. She sang as part of the first "Party on the Plains."

"We have student interns from Berkeley and Harvard," Logan said.

The students work at the Institute for 43 weeks, growing their own food, working and taking class, Logan said.

"In class we explore all issues and aspects of sustainable agriculture," Serrano said.

"We study the history of ecology and the understanding of the world population and trade."

"We get a sense of the world system and how it is related to agriculture," he said.

"It's a think tank of diverse backgrounds. You do not have to be in agriculture," Serrano said. "Some people are in philosophy."

There are no term papers, tests or grades, Serrano said.

"I get to study how I have always wanted to study," Serrano said.

"The complete freedom we have, to me, is the most amazing thing," Serrano said.

"At the end of the year, the results and data are presented at KSU," Serrano said.

He said the Land Institute interns also participate at the sustainable agriculture symposium at K-State.

The interns eat the animals they raise and food that they grow in their organic garden.

"We even kill our own chickens," Serrano said.

"You learn to eat with the seasons," Wittig said.

"You forget about seasonability when you can just go buy tomatoes at the grocery store in December," he said.

"Growing your own food teaches you a lot. I used to be a very picky eater," Serrano said.

"Once you grow your own food, it tastes better."

Quarterbacks falling by wayside

ASSOCIATED PRESS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — It's just not safe to be a Big Eight quarterback these days.

Nebraska's Brook Berringer has become the second Big Eight signal caller this year hospitalized with a partially collapsed lung. He's also the second Nebraska quarterback in less than a week to visit a Lincoln hospital.

Iowa State has lost two starters at various times this year — Todd Doxzon and Robby Duncan. In Missouri's game a couple of weeks ago against Illinois, the Tigers were down for a while to the third-string signal caller.

Kansas' Asheiki Preston sustained a partially collapsed lung in September this year and forced the Jayhawks to bring transfer Mark Williams off the redshirt list.

Oklahoma, dusting off its old wishbone offense against Iowa State Saturday, knows the triple option can be especially rough on the quarterback. So on Saturday against Iowa State, the Sooners used backup Terence Brown every few series, resting and protecting Garrick McGee in a year when an epidemic of injuries seems to be striking quarterbacks.

Berringer replaced Tommie Frazier, who was hospitalized for treatment of a blood clot in his leg. Berringer was expected to be back this week for the second-ranked Huskers, but it's the Nebraska defense that will probably come under attention by coaches.

The Huskers (5-0), 40-point favorites over Wyoming, emerged with a 42-32 victory despite a lackluster first half when the Cowboys scored 21 points and amassed 185 passing yards.

Cornerback Barron Miles has a fancy name for the halftime speech delivered by exasperated coaches.

"We call it getting yelled at," Miles said.

Meanwhile, Colorado continued its thrill-a-minute tour. The Buffs, used Neil Voskeritchian's 24-yard field goal to turn back then No. 16-ranked Texas 34-31.

Golfers travel to Illinois, Nebraska for tournaments

BILL MCNALLY

The K-State men's golf team will try to rebound off the poor performance it experienced last week in Lawrence.

The team will be traveling to Bloomington, Ill., to play in the D.A. Weibering Invitational at the Crestwicke Country Club.

This tournament will consist of 17 teams. Three of the teams competing in the tournament finished in front of K-State in Lawrence last week. Iowa State, Southwest Missouri State and Nebraska will be the three teams K-State will try to get back at this week.

"This will be the first time anybody on the team has played on this course," Coach Mark Elliott said. "I feel like I am taking a good group to Bloomington this week."

"The team has been practicing good, they just need to carry the practice techniques over to game time," Elliott said.

Coach Elliott said Jason Losch gained a lot of confidence from last week's tournament and hopes he will show more improvement this week.

"Troy Halterman is a good, solid player that finished 14th last week but has the right attitude to do good this week," Elliott said.

Elliott said it is plain and simple that if the team plays well, it could finish in good standings. If it plays like it did in Lawrence, it will finish at the bottom.

■ The K-State women's golf team hopes to keep the momentum going from last week's outing in the Cyclone Golf Classic in which it finished in sixth place.

The team finished with a good second round, shooting a 324.

"The girls are anxious to play," Coach Tim Jennings said.

The team plays today and Tuesday at the Husker Classic in Lincoln, Neb.

The tournament will consist of 13 teams in which four of the teams are in the same region as K-State.

"This will be a physical and mental endurance test for the girls," Jennings said.

The team will play 36 holes today starting at 8 a.m. and 1 p.m., and 18 holes on Tuesday starting at 8 a.m.

"This will be the first time anybody has played on the Pioneers Golf Course in Lincoln," Jennings said

Debbie Crystal has really stepped up into the leader's position, shooting a 36-hole total of 165 last tournament, and she will try to lead the pack during the Husker Classic, Jennings said.

Richelle Bond and Mitzi Taylor had decent outings last week but have a lot of room to improve, Jennings said.

If the team is going to have a good showing, this is the tournament to do it in, Jennings said.

Teams take on top-25 competition

DEBO ADEJUNMOBI
Collegian

The K-State men's and women's cross country teams had one of their toughest tests of the season this past Saturday at the NCAA Championship Pre-Meet in Fayetteville, Ark.

On the women's side, the 21-team field featured nine of the top-25 teams in the country. The Wildcat women finished in 12th place with a team total of 300 points.

They were led by Charity Swartz, who finished 42nd overall in the 153-competitor field. She completed the 5,000-meter course in 18 minutes, 25.2 seconds, just edging out teammate Irma Betancourt, who finished in 18:26.9.

Arkansas won the women's team championship, posting a low total of 72 points, just beating out Villanova (82 points). The team was led by Megan Flowers, who finished third overall with a time of 17:17.8. Villanova's Jennifer Rhines was the overall winner of the event with a time of 16:50.

The K-State men finished 15th (443 points) in the 21-team field that had five of the top 25 in attendance.

Leading the way for the Cats was senior Billy Wuggazer, completing the 8,000-meter course in 24:43.6. Geoff Delahanty and Mikkel Bjergso were next for the Cats with times of 26:23.8 and 26:24.3, respectively.

Georgetown (90 points) beat Arkansas (97 points) to prevent the Razorbacks from sweeping both titles.

The Hoyas were led by 12th-place finisher Ian Urbina (24:14.8). The overall winner of the event was Godfrey Siamoisye from Blinn College.

Intramural wrestlers showcase skills during 3-day, all-University competition

DEBBIE PILANT
Collegian

Fraternity, residence hall and independent wrestlers took part in the intramural wrestling tournament last week at the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex.

Preliminary matches took place Monday trough Wednesday, and the divisional finals were Thursday. The event ended with the all-University finals Friday.

In the fraternity division, there was one match-up almost everyone had their eyes on. That was the match-up in the 150-pound class between Trey Schell, of Pi Kappa Alpha and Ryan Chiaverini, of Sigma Chi.

The match was tight from the beginning with neither wrestler scoring a point in the first round.

Then, Schell took control scoring two quick points on a takedown. Chiaverini then tied things up by the end of the second round with two one-point holds.

Schell came out in the third and final round scoring a two-point takedown, putting him ahead 4-2. Chiaverini got in a final one-point hold, but it wasn't enough. Schell won the match 4-3.

Schell said the match was tiring for him.

"It's hard going full blast like that," he said. "It took it all out of me."

He also said that was the toughest match he'd had in the tournament, but he likes it that way.

"I wrestle better under tough conditions," he said.

He said he felt he had a good chance to win going in. He said that feeling came from having confidence in himself.

Schell won despite a cut on his chin, which he received in his second match. He said it wasn't a factor in this match.

In residence-hall action, two friends and floor mates met in the 126-pound class.

Leroy Gay and Josh Ropski, both of the Haymaker 7 team wrestled in one of the first matches of the night. Ropski said the two had become good friends through the meet. Before then, they didn't know each other well.

"I just knew he was a good wrestler," he said.

He said he tried to leave the friendship off the mat, and make it like any other match.

"The mental part is different, and you just have to think about the mat," he said.

In the independent division, Jeff Holsapple, of the Pin team, won the 166-pound class by pinning Eric Corder of the Northwest team. He won the all-University tournament in the 175-pound class last year, but came down to the 166-pound class because he and a teammate wanted to switch places.

"I feel better about wrestling at this weight," he said.

The Pikes won in overall points in the fraternity division while Tau Kappa Epsilon came in second.

In the independent division, the Northwest team won the independent race with the Pin team finishing second.

Marlatt I came out on top in the residence-hall division, and Haymaker 7 ended the tournament in second place.

The champions of the different divisions competed in the all-University Championships on Friday.

In that meet, Gay kept to his winning ways in the 126-pound class, defeating Michael Flentie.

Keith O'Halleran won the 196-pound championship. He said the tournament was much tougher than he'd expected.

"I hadn't wrestled in a while, so I wasn't in top shape," he said.

He said he'd had byes through the tournament, so he'd only wrestled three times in the meet.

"It would've been better if I'd wrestled more people, but I'm still pleased with how I wrestled," he said.

Shawn Fox won the championship in the 158-pound class, defeating Corey Dukelow. He said he tried to win the match in the first round.

"I figured I had to get ahead in the first round because I knew I couldn't win it in the next two," Fox said.

Jon Ray won the 185-pound class by defeating Scott Higbee. He said it was a tough match because he didn't get the opportunity to wrestle before the tournament.

"It always sneaks up on me," he said.

In spite of that, he said he thought the match went well.

"I got the first takedown and went from there," he said.

Casey O'Conner won the 166-pound championship by defeating Holsapple in the final match of the night. He said intimidation is an important part of his strategy.

"Wrestling is 70 percent mental and 30 percent physical," he said.

Broken-hearted student stops moping around

Dear Cassandra,

I am the letter writer that went by the title "Losing Weight and Sleep." I wanted everyone to know I am doing great and not moping around waiting for the world to come to an end. The secret to my "recovery" was some of the best friends in the universe who happen to be great listeners. And I also tend to be going fishing a lot! Life is what you make it, and it took a while to remember that. I'm still losing sleep but that's only because I'm having so much fun now. So my advice to those like "Been There" is don't sit around and mope. Hang with those friends you know really care for you and in time things things can only get better!

Maybe we should get a group together.

Signed,
From Losing Weight to Smiling Single

Dear From Losing Weight to Smiling Single,

You wild and crazy dude, you. It's great to hear you made lemonade out of lemons. Good friends and keeping busy is a great prescription for a broken heart. I suppose next week you'll write me with a new problem — how to keep all your dates straight.

▶ LIVE MUSIC REVIEW

Bands raise funds for Deltapalooza

AMY ZIEGLER
Collegian

Turquoise Sol, an eight-member band from Lawrence, gave an intense but brief performance at the second-annual Deltapalooza at the Wareham Opera House downtown.

The band kicked off the Delta Delta Delta sorority philanthropy by playing a 40-minute set, including songs from its compact disc, titled "Fields of Joy," to a scarce audience.

Many of the sorority women sponsoring the philanthropy were there, but the other ticket buyers didn't show up until nearly the end of Turquoise Sol's performance.

The people who decided to come later missed the best performance of the night.

Turquoise Sol, a band made of three KU students and five Lawrence residents, showed Manhattan a whole new world outside of country music.

The band could have easily been classified as jazz with the strong horn section in the middle of the stage, but the congo drum gave it a Jamaican flavor.

The band capped its set with an outstanding performance by percussionist Tony Magliano and bassist Nolan Sellers on the congo drums.

The two band members kept the energy and intensity rolling by pounding on the drums, jumping up and down on stage, and giving the audience something to remember them by.

The next band to hit the stage, Bosom, from Manhattan, had a tough act to follow.

The band has improved its stage presence and chemistry since its performance at Charlie's last weekend, but some of the same problems that it had at the last performance came back to haunt it.

The loud drums, bass and guitar once again drowned out vocalist Jason McLendon's lyrics instead of complementing them.

The loud instrumental background music forced McLendon to also increase his sound, which resulted in a mass of noise.

McLendon has a wonderful voice, but as long as he has to compete with three other instruments, the audience will have to struggle to understand his lyrics.

Auxiliary percussionist Paul Horton, senior in graphic design, was the highlight of Bosom's show.

In his last performance with the band, Horton boosted enthusiasm for Bosom's music in the songs "Haystacks," and "Spanish" by working wonders with a congo drum.

The last band to perform at Deltapalooza was L.A. Ramblers, a six member rock 'n' roll group from Lawrence.

By the time they got up on the stage, the crowd had thinned out considerably.

The Ramblers deserved a much larger audience, but the band still put on an impressive show because of vocalist's Stephanie Turner's strong, clear voice and energetic and upbeat stage presence.

The live music event was a success overall, and gave Manhattan an opportunity to sample three different bands and at the same time raise money for St. Jude's Children Cancer Research.

Consumers help in bread-tasting project

PRUDENCE SIEBERT
Collegian

About 160 typical Midwest consumers tasted bread Saturday and Sunday and earned money while doing it.

As part of a graduate student's research project, consumers were paid $10 to sample and critique six types of bread.

"We're comparing different ingredients, including flour quality," Shannon Alonso, graduate student in foods and nutrition, said. "Some are made with lower quality ingredients. We're wanting to see if the consumer notices the dif-ference in breads made with different quality ingredients."

The research will provide Alonso with her thesis project, "Consumer Perception of Pan Bread Quality."

Sponsored by a Kansas commodity group, it is to be completed by August 1995.

Alonso is taking course work in researching at the American Institute of Baking.

She will be presenting a brief overview and general analysis of the project to the American Association of Cereal Chemists in Nashville at the end of October.

Alonso's research will help in the marketing and utilization of wheats, Carole Setser, professor of foods and nutrition, said.

"I think it will help the bread industry in general," Alonso said. "It will show what is important to consumers in their bread and what consumers like most about bread."

One of the goals of the project is to determine if the consumer really does notice a difference in breads made from different qualities of flour, Setser said.

"We know a baker would tell the difference, but we don't know if the consumer would," she said.

Alonso said she plans to work in the baking industry.

Good season of deer hunting expected

JENNIFER PETERSON
Collegian

The first day of archery deer hunting in Kansas was Oct. 1.

"People are saying they have seen a lot of deer this year," said Pat Spain, office assistant at the Kansas Department of Wildlife and Parks.

"Everything has been great so far," said Michael Weisbender, owner of Ole' Mike's Shooters, Supply and Tackle.

"The numbers are much farther ahead of last years. Quail, pheasant and deer numbers are way up," he said.

"I would say we've sold a good number of permits to KSU students," Weisbender said.

People can purchase a hunting license by going to the Kansas Department of Wildlife and Parks office at Tuttle Creek Reservoir or at different vendors around the community, Spain said.

To buy a permit, people buying it must present a driver's license, and if they were born after July 1, 1957, they are required to take a hunter-safety course, Spain said.

"The hunting-safety course teaches gun safety and the proper use of different types of weapons," Weisbender said.

"There's a lot of good hunting in this area," Weisbender said.

The public land at Tuttle and Milford are good hunting, Weisbender said.

The biggest percent of bow hunters enjoy it because they want to get next to nature, he said.

"I've never known a deer hunter yet that didn't enjoy just sitting and waiting," Weisbender said.

"I enjoy hunting because I get to be out in the wide open with my friends and get away from it all," Bryce Guinn, senior in marketing, said.

"We've had quite a good traffic of students in the store," Weisbender said.

After buying the bow and the accessories, everything will probably cost $250, Weisbender said.

HUNTING

The deer archery season runs through Nov. 29 and will resume again Dec. 12-31.

Along with owning a hunting license, there are several rules hunters must follow.

There are hunting violations, Spain said.

"Hunting out of season is a big one," she said.

There are two Riley County conservation officers, and the sheriff's officers are also authorized to give citations, Spain said.

TIPS FOR WRITING A CLASSIFIED AD

Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.

Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.

Teams study canyon site

Students help design pathways for Tuttle canyon.

KIMBERLY WISHART
Collegian

Architecture students had a crash course in geology Thursday and Friday at Tuttle Creek Dam and Spillway.

They were participating in a Tuttle Canyon charrette.

"A charrette is a very intense design experience," Madlen Simon, assistant professor of architecture, said. "We met with two geologists at Tuttle Creek to gain geologic knowledge of the area. Our involvement was to do something to increase public understanding of Tuttle Canyon Spillway through a geologic center."

Simon organized K-State and University of Kansas architecture students and professionals into six teams to study the site and design the geologic center.

"Some of the teams were interdisciplinary with architecture, landscape architecture and interior architecture students plus professionals, and one team was just landscape architecture," Simon said.

"Each team had to come up with their own idea of a geologic site," she said. "For some it was a building, for some it was paths to lead around the place."

Simon gave the teams a set of things to consider.

"They need to consider who would use the area, whether it be schools, geologists or tourists. Their designs need to have handicapped accessibility, and they need to provide a display area for fossils taken out of the area," Simon said.

The teams worked from 9:30 a.m. to 6 p.m. Thursday. On Friday, members from each team presented the ideas they had come up with to a panel of jurors at the American Institute of Architecture Conference on Design at the Holidome.

Cynthia Morales, junior in environmental design, along with Don Marrs, architect at DMA Architects in Salina, presented their designs, which they called Time Impressions.

"We wanted to bring the community in, and the tower is the point thing that draws you in at the highest point," Morales said. "There are paths at the bottom. They are handicap-accessible from the cable car without ruining the natural landscape."

This cable car running through the canyon made their project different.

"A cable car descent could transport anyone who wanted to view this geologic wonder," Marrs said. "You can get close to the surface in a cable car without disrupting the landscape."

Eric Goldstein, graduate student in landscape architecture, focused on the future of the site and talked about the effect of the slow motion of natural forces.

"We created an ecologic center focused on the future," Goldstein said. "It's ecological because the land erodes so quickly that you have to focus differently on how the site is maintained."

Goldstein said they would minimize the amount of structures at the site, build an interpretive educational center and a recreational facility, like access paths.

Once the groups were represented and had explained their design boards or videos, the jurors critiqued them.

"They gave us viewpoints on each project and on the project together as a whole," Morales said. "They were impressed that in six hours we came up with designs and did the boards. They liked to combine them all to make one idea that tackled all the issues."

The main idea of the project was to get students and professionals to interact, Simon said.

"I think it's a great opportunity that provides teamwork experience similar to what they'll find in a professional office. They had the chance to work with people at all levels in different disciplines," Simon said.

MARK LEFFINGWELL/Collegian

Working with other schools and professional architects, John Nickle, third-year student in landscape architecture, works on a site analysis for a visitor's center at the Tuttle Creek Spillway.

Takaki tells of difficulties at Berkeley

BROOKE GRABER FORT
Collegian

"You can take your multicultural class and shove it up your ass!"

These words proved to be the catalyst for the multicultural requirement at the University of California at Berkeley, Ron Takaki, professor of ethnic studies at Berkeley, said.

Takaki was the keynote speaker of Racial/Ethnic Harmony Week and the second Lou Douglas Lecture speaker this fall.

He said Berkeley passed the multicultural requirement in 1989.

"I have to confess the faculty didn't want to pass the requirement," Takaki said.

"In the fall of 1987, students of color totaled 52 percent of the undergraduate population. Our faculty was over 90-percent white.

"These students were saying to the faculty, 'Read our faces. We do not see ourselves in the books we read or hear our voices in the lectures we attend,'" Takaki said.

Takaki said these students came up with the idea of a multicultural-class requirement so they could learn about themselves and other cultures.

Racial/Ethnic Harmony Week

"The faculty, initially, was very defensive," he said. "The students began to have rallies. They sat in buildings," Takaki said.

There was a faculty club in the middle of campus, which faculty regarded as their reserve, he said.

Takaki said between 15 and 35 students had a sit-in in the narrow hallway leading from the faculty club to the sandwich lounge during lunchtime.

"Imagine the faculty showing up with all these bodies blocking the sandwich lounge. Some faculty members got angry. One angry faculty member was a conservative political science professor," Takaki said.

The political science professor shouted the fighting words, "You can take your multicultural class and shove it up your ass," he said.

"This led to an explosion," he said.

Takaki said professors began to reconsider the multicultural proposal as the debate went on.

"In the debate, many of us realized that this allowed us to more accurately understand the people that make up the American society," he said.

All students at Berkeley must take two humanities courses and two social sciences courses, and one of these must meet the multicultural requirement, he said.

Multicultural courses that meet the requirement are now offered by 26

Ag secretary quits during investigation

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Agriculture Secretary Mike Espy resigned Monday, saying an investigation into gifts he accepted from people and companies who do business with his department was too distracting for him to stay on. He predicted he would be exonerated.

"I owe it to the president to allow his agenda to go through with a minimum of distraction," Espy said in announcing he would leave the Cabinet effective Dec. 31. Both Espy and his attorney said there was no evidence that any government practice or policy was affected by the gifts given to Espy or his girlfriend.

"I must personally overcome the challenge to my good name," said Espy, 40.

A court-appointed independent counsel is investigating whether Espy violated rules governing contacts with companies that do business with his department. Among the companies involved is Tyson Foods Inc., the nation's largest poultry company. The Arkansas company has longtime ties to President

MIKE ESPY'S PAPER TRAIL

The list below describes the amounts and items Mike Espy repaid to groups Sept. 21. Espy resigned as Agriculture Sectretary Monday, saying he failed himself by not being careful in managing details.

- $6,200 — to the government for a government-leased car.
- $450 — to a pesticide trade association for a night in a West Virginia resort.
- $90 — to Quaker Oats for Chicago Bulls tickets.
- $700 — to the Fembank Museum of Natural History for four Super Bowl tickets.
- $194 — to the government for repayment to his home state of Mississippi for expenses.

Espy was the second member of the Clinton cabinet to step down.

Revisiting Espy's trip to K-State

COLLEGIAN STAFF

On Feb. 3, U.S. Secretary of Agriculture Mike Espy was a Landon Lecturer. The following is a look at what he said to a K-State audience.

Promises made; promises kept.

U.S. Secretary of Agriculture Mike Espy discussed the pledges he made upon taking office and the fulfillment of these in his first year as secretary.

"We've had challenges, but I would prefer to call them opportunities," Espy said. "Opportunities to keep our promises to the American people, opportunities to keep our promises to the American producer, opportunities to be judged on our deeds and not just on our promises."

Espy said he had promised to Manhattan could be new Cessna site

AMY SIMON
Collegian

Manhattan is sitting in the first-class section after Cessna narrowed its list of possible sites for a new plant.

Manhattan is one of five Kansas cities in the running for a Cessna plant to manufacture a new line of single-engine airplanes, Dave Franson, Cessna vice president of public relations, said.

Independence, Hays, Emporia, and Pittsburg are sitting in the section with Manhattan as possible candidates

. Cessna announced the finalists with a news release late Friday afternoon, which meant disappointment for 11 other cities competing for the plant.

Jim Pearson, Manhattan city manager, said Cessna asked for a proposal. A report, compiled by several city departments and the Manhattan Chamber of Commerce, was presented to Cessna five weeks ago.

Pearson said that Kansas State may have helped Manhattan make the list of finalists. K-State, along with the Manhattan Area Technical Center, would provide trained workers for the plant.

"K-State is obviously a part of the make-up of Manhattan and provides opportunities that aren't available in other cities," Pearson said.

Franson said the plant would create 1,000 new jobs in the winning town.

"These are high-paying jobs that also require some training and technical skill," Franson said. "They will involve final assembly and flight tests."

Additional industry would also keep people from leaving the city to find work.

"The plant would provide jobs for people coming out of the military, as well as graduating students from high school and college," Pearson said. "These people may otherwise have to leave the city."

Pearson said the city has been working on a economic development strategy for several years, trying to add more diverse industry. He said that Cessna would expand Manhattan's economy without harming the city.

"There could be a smoke-stack industry that could adversely affect the quality of life, but this is not one of them," he said.

Franson said administrators will consider several factors when choosing the site for the Self exams fundamental to saving life

SARAH LUNDAY
Collegian

Throughout October, National Awareness of Breast Health month, Lafene Health Center is offering brochures and educational materials about new methods of detecting breast cancer.

Eileen Swanson, Director of the Women's Clinic, said women should be aware of their own health and methods of detecting breast cancer.

"Women checking their own breasts is necessary, especially after a menstrual period," Swanson said.

Some breast cancer risk factors, according to the "American Cancer Society: Facts and Figures 1994", include being over the age of 40, personal or family history of breast cancer and early age onset of menstruation.

Cathie Barry, assistant director of the women's clinic, said the key to detecting breast cancer early is for a young woman to become comfortable with her own body and be able to know when something is wrong.

Most young women do not do self breast exams. Self exams seem like something weird, and it takes a little while to get used to them, she said.

Although breast cancer is not common in traditional college students, it is possible, Barry said.

More common than breast cancer in young women is the occurrence of benign tumors and lumps, she said.

The most common benign tumor is a solid lump of fibrous and glandular tissue called fibroadenomas.

If a young women is concerned about breast health, Swanson said, Lafene offers breast exams, educational guides and a clinical nurse who is available to speak with campus groups.

BREAST CANCER DETECTION METHODS

- Stereotactic fine needle biopsy — A new technique useful to find extremely small lumps that cannot be detected on mammography. This combines computer technology and a mammogram.
- Genetic research — Research at the School of Public Health at the University of California at Berkeley has been closing in on the so-called breast cancer gene. Scientists reason that a chromosome could carry units of heredity called genes or that genes may be altered due to a woman's lifestyle or environment.
- Magnetic Resonance Imaging (MRI) — Like mammography, it produces high-quality images generated by using a magnetic field and radio waves. This may be useful in detecting smaller breast tumors that are not found by mammography.
- A key gene — This gene, recently identified, normally suppresses the growth of tumors. However, scientists report it missing in a number of different types of cancers. The gene could be implicated in as many as 60 percent of breast cancer cases.

▶ RETIREMENT NOT TOO FAR AWAY FOR POPULAR CARTOONIST GARY LARSON

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Gary Larson, the creator of the syndicated cartoon "The Far Side," plans to retire at the end of the year, his syndicate announced today.

Larson has drawn his cartoon of the absurd, featuring things like cows in singles bars and bacteria with family lives, for 15 years.

It is distributed by Universal Press Syndicate to nearly 1,900 newspapers.

The last release will appear Jan. 1.

In a statement released today, Larson, 44, said his main reasons for retiring were "simple fatigue and a fear that if I continue for many more years, my work will begin to suffer or at the very least ease into the Graveyard of Mediocre Cartoons."

However, Larson will continue to work with Universal Press on several projects, including "The Far Side" books, calendars and greeting cards, Universal Press president John McMeel said.

The projects would in most part be based on existing cartoons, the syndicate said.

Larson took an extended vacation from October 1988 to January 1990, but this time he is retiring for good, said Jake Morrissey, an associate editor at Universal Press. "He is going to wave goodbye and walk away," he said.

Larson, who is based in Seattle, was out of the country this week and unavailable for comment, Morrissey said.

In 1991, Larson received the Reuben Award for Outstanding Cartoonist of the Year from the National Cartoonists Society, which also named "The Far Side" the best syndicated panel in 1985 and 1987.

The Kansas City-based Universal Press Syndicate is the largest independent newspaper syndicate in the country.

▶ FLORIDA COURTROOM FOCUS OF ATTENTION FOR PRO-CHOICE SUPPORTERS

PENSACOLA, Fla. (AP) — Abortion-rights supporters and foes are focusing their attention today on a single federal courtroom and a former minister who claims killing abortion providers is justifiable homicide.

Eighty prospective jurors have been summoned for today's start of the selection process in the trial of Paul Hill.

"If we don't win this case with a firm conviction that's upheld on appeal," said National Organization for Women President Patricia Ireland, "it's going to make it very difficult whenever there's a lesser act of violence."

Hill is accused of killing Dr. John B. Britton, 69, and his clinic escort, retired Air Force Lt. Col. James H. Barrett, 74. Barrett's 68-year-old wife, June, was wounded in the July 29 shotgun attack outside the Ladies Center.

Hill, a 40-year-old former Presbyterian minister and a frequent protester at the clinic, was arrested a few minutes after the shootings. Specifically, Hill is charged with breaking the Freedom of Access to Clinic Entrances law, enacted earlier this year, and violating a federal firearms law. He could get a life sentence if convicted.

Hill also faces a possible death sentence in state court, where he faces charges of murder, attempted murder and shooting into an occupied vehicle.

"Really, the eyes of the country are on Pensacola and the Department of Justice and how aggressively they're going to move to stop this religious terrorism," Katherine Spillar, national coordinator of the Feminist Majority Foundation, said from Los Angeles.

"We had to get a new law passed to make it be recognized, Spillar said.

"Now we want to see how vigorously this law is going to be enforced," Abortion opponents see the clinic-access law as an effort to stifle their freedom of speech.

"It is using Draconian punishments aimed primarily at demonstrators," said T. Patrick Monaghan, a New Hope, Ky., lawyer who defends abortion protesters.

▶ BREAST IMPLANTS MAY BE RESPONSIBLE FOR ILLNESSES, ACHES AND PAINS

SPRINGFIELD, Mo. (AP) — Judith Doraty got silicone implants 22 years ago. Now, she can barely get out of bed some days. She said she feels like a modern-day leper and a medical outcast.

With little known about illnesses possibly linked to breast implants, and with lawsuits in abundance, many women with implants are having a hard time finding doctors.

Doraty's joints ache, her muscles are limp, and red blotches cover her chest and face. Her family doctor in Lebanon doesn't know what to do and has suggested she see a rheumatologist, a doctor who treats arthritis and connective tissue diseases, in Springfield.

None of the doctors she called would see her, and all refused to give an explanation. All she got, she told the Springfield News-Leader, was a terse explanation from receptionists: The doctor won't see her because she has breast implants.

"When I got refused medical treatment, I just went berserk," Doraty, 54, said.

The four rheumatologists Doraty called declined comment to the newspaper.

Across the nation, women with implants are being set adrift by the medical establishment, one doctor in St. Louis said.

"I've got women flying in from Chicago, Tennessee and Kentucky because they can't find a local doctor to see them," said Dr. Thomas Osborn, a rheumatologist at Washington University, who treats implant patients.

Doctors who agree to treat the women are sympathetic to those who do not. They said little is known about the illnesses the women have, and many doctors don't feel qualified to treat their strange symptoms.

Partnership hopeful with city, K-State rowing club

JOYCE LEFTOFF
Collegian

The Manhattan Parks and Recreation Advisory Board recommended a proposal yesterday from Alan Koch, K-State rowing coach, for a partnership between the K-State rowing program and the city of Manhattan.

Koch, a United States Rowing Association licensed official and 1967-1971 K-State rowing team member, said the lengthy discussion and eventual vote went about the way he thought it was going to.

"They know the revenue is not going to offset the cost," Koch said. "That will probably be the major issue at the city commission level."

The goals of the proposal are to recruit interested individuals from the Manhattan community and introduce them to rowing, while allowing individuals who are already skilled at rowing the opportunity to use the facilities.

If passed by the Manhattan City Commission, funding from the city would include $32,600, which would be spread out over the first three years. Every year thereafter, $6,500 would be allocated for maintenance programs.

The fee for participation would be $50 a person for the summer session, which would run from the middle of June to the end of July, three days a week.

One of the opposing board members, Mike Toy, said he didn't feel like the board was doing its job.

"We are in no position to take on any programs," Toy said. "Our cup is already full."

When solidifying the motion to pass the proposal, Ethel Steichen, board member, said the board would ask the city to not take the money from the Parks and Rec budget.

In reply, Toy said, "Why

Gymnastics center wants to join city

JOYCE LEFTOFF

Dan Brown, owner of the Manhattan Gymnastics Center, would like to enter into a partnership with the city of Manhattan.

His proposal, which he presented to the Manhattan Parks and Recreation Advisory Board yesterday, included $1,000 in scholarships each year and a $5 increase for membership.

"I want to run the city's program," Brown said. "We've been trying to do this for three years now. They don't think they are in competition with private enterprise, but they are."

Brown said the K-State Gymnastics Club also works out at his facility.

Kim Jones, Manhattan resident, said she doesn't want the board to close down the Parks and Rec-sponsored program at Heartland Gymnastics.

Jones was the organizer of a petition circulated to show support for Heartland.

"Where the Manhattan Parks and Rec are having the gymnastics now is made just for little kids," Jones said. "The little kids don't have to be in the way of the older ones."

Ethel Steichen, board member, said she didn't want to see a gymnastics monopoly in Manhattan and doesn't like the idea of scholarships because she thinks the lower-income participants would be embarrassed to ask for help and eventually drop out.

"I am much more troubled by the idea of a monopoly," Steichen said. "Holding the price down is important to me. I also like the stability of the Heartland program."

"If people perceive your program as a competitive program, and their children or the parents themselves are not comfortable, they won't join the program and will miss out."

Steichen also said to listen to the 51 signatures on the petition and the various letters to board members and city commissioners.

"It is a tremendous endorsement of a program that meets the needs of many people," she said.

At this point in the discussion, Brown started defending his facility.

"We have a good program and facility," he said. "At what point am I stable enough to do this with you?

"I've asked nicely several

American Red Cross needs your help

The American Red Cross will be in the Union collecting blood today through Friday.

The American Red Cross is saving lives today. It does it every day.

Specifically, it is taking blood donations from 11 a.m. to 6 p.m. on the second floor of the Student Union on Tuesday and Wednesday.

The Red Cross will be collecting from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m Thursday. It will finish up on Friday. Its hours are 9 a.m. to 2 p.m. on that final day.

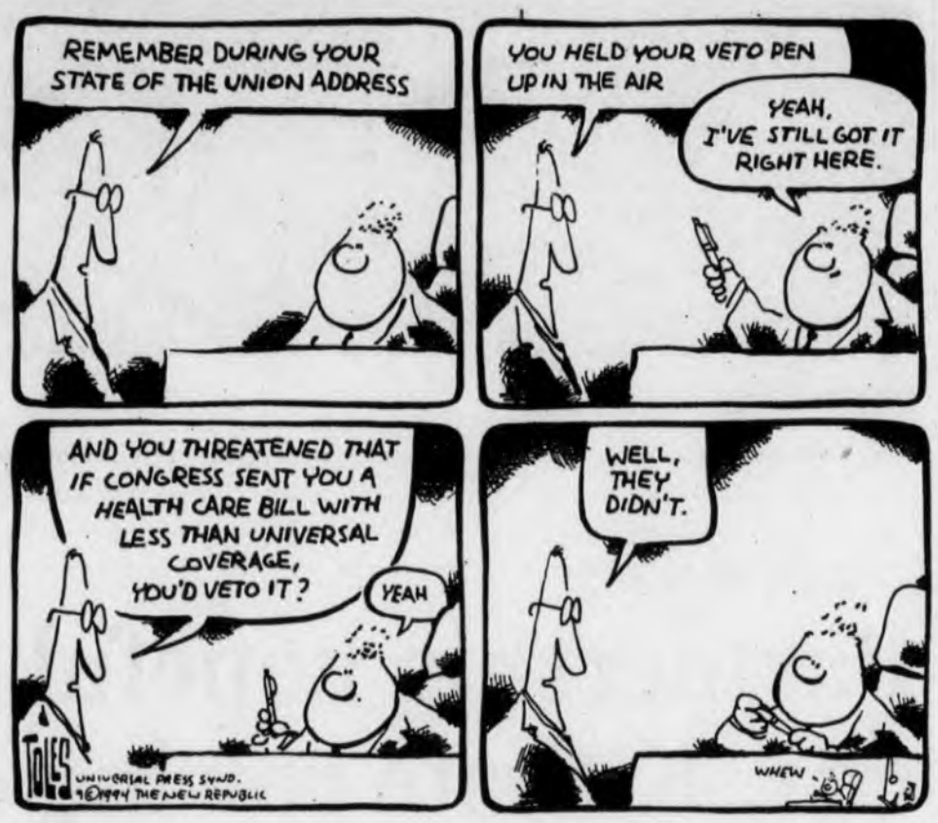
Give blood.

According to the Red Cross, while only about 59 percent of the population is able to give blood, only five percent of the population actually does. Dodie Faulconer, head nurse of the Bloodmobile, said that statistic is even lower for K-State.

Give blood.

One pint, your pint, can help three people. Units of plasma, packed blood cells and platelet cells (to make blood clotting agents) can be made from one pint.

Rita Currie, a health educator for Lafene Health Center, said a victim in an auto accident can use up to, or more than, 50 units of blood.



Give blood.

If you, your parents, your brother or sister, or anyone you love ever needs blood, you better hope someone gave blood.

Saving lives is as simple as two words.

Give blood.

Tax increase may hurt Manhattan businesses

KRISTIN BRIGHTON

Many of you don't consider Manhattan your home.

However, it is the place you live. You go out to dinner here, you party here, you shop here, you buy pencils, notebooks and textbooks here.

And because you do all of these things, the decisions Manhattan voters make Nov. 8 will affect your bank balances.

Besides electing politicians, we will be voting on two important issues: building a new county jail and a city-economic-development package designed to help the local economy if Fort Riley would be downsized or closed.

The passage of either of these proposals will raise Manhattan's sales-tax rate by .5 percent. In other words, if both pass; Manhattan will have a sales-tax rate of 7.4 percent.

That's not as high as some major cities, but it would give Manhattan the honor of being tied with Perry as having the highest sales tax in the state, said officials at the Department of Research and Revenue Analysis at the Kansas Department of Revenue.

The Manhattan Mercury has an on-going series called The Grand Jury. The paper has an established cross-section of the community it informally polls on a semi-regular basis to see how people in Manhattan feel about different issues.

In the Sept. 11 issue, these people were asked for comments about the jail proposal. Here's the response of one juror.

"If the question is posed as it has been by the County Commission 'to locate the law enforcement center at the present site and pay for it with a sales-tax increase,' I will vote for it and make my major purchases out of city and out of county."

This is a problem local businesses often face. People like to leave town to shop, making shopping into a mini-vacation. They take their money out of Manhattan and spend it in Topeka, Kansas City or Wichita.

Heck, why not shop out of town? There are more stores, less of a possibility that someone else you know will buy the same outfit and more of a likelihood that you can find a bargain, right?

But when we shop away from Manhattan, we are only hurting ourselves. Less money staying in town will only ensure less people will find local jobs. If local businesses are making less money, then they will hire less people.

If those same businesses are not being supported by the community, then they will be less inclined to sponsor events or contribute to organizations and charities. When we drive to Topeka to shop at Sam's Club or somewhere, we are not helping our city. Sam's products may be made in the USA, but he doesn't give a lick about a local boy scout troop or Alpha Alpha Alpha's next philanthropy event.

By raising our sales tax higher than the main shopping towns of our state, we will only be implanting in the minds of consumers all over the area that it is more expensive to shop in Manhattan.

I wouldn't call this economic development.

Compare these tax rates of neighboring areas to the proposed 7.4 percent sales tax for Manhattan: Topeka, tax rate 5.9 percent; Pottawatomie County (not including proposed tax on areas within Manhattan city limits) 5.9 percent; Overland Park, 6.5 percent; Kansas City, Kan., 6.9 percent.

To consider raising our sales tax, we must be sure that the reasoning is sound, for if not, we might be pushing more shoppers away and not getting the results we thought we were investing in.

It is easier to sell something that can be seen. While the site for the new jail has been the source of controversy for years (if passed it will be built across the street from Manhattan Catholic Schools), it is easier to make a decision on the importance of something with specific blue-prints and estimated dates of completion.

We must update our jail facilities. The longer we put it off, the more expensive it will be. There is no getting around it. Having a sales-tax rate of 6.9 percent is high, but it is not that much higher than other competing cities.

But, as one of the spokesmen for the Economic Development Steering Committee said to the City Commission last Thursday, there are "no guarantees" that any development package will be able to attract businesses to Manhattan.

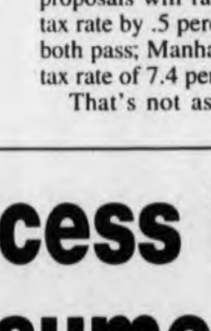
With the announcement that Cessna has included Manhattan as a finalist for its new plant, one has to wonder if Manhattan can attract new businesses without such a plan.

We must take risks sometimes, but when faced with losing present business, one has to wonder if the risk is worth it.

Since we do not know whether or not Fort Riley will close, who will be president in 1996 or even if Cessna is going to build its plant here or not, it will be hard to convince me and the rest of Manhattan that we should devote $2 million a year (the estimated result of a .5 percent sales tax increase) to a plan with "no guarantees."

Regardless of the outcome, the economy of Manhattan affects all of this campus, not just those of us who consider Manhattan home. Since K-State was annexed last summer, all of you are eligible to vote in Manhattan if you do not plan to vote in another city. Register soon and get informed about the issues.

It is up to those who vote to decide whether or not the proposals are worth the risk of spending one penny for every dollar we spend here in Manhattan.



And while you do this, begin to practice the cheapest form of economic development. Think locally. Shop Manhattan whenever possible.

Kristin Brighton is a sophomore in mass communications and English.

Success in jobs and grades consumes students' lives

For students preparing to leave K-State, or those hoping to leave, most consider establishing a career as the first important step after college.

In fact, the impetus for the college experience is to secure a career. This is certainly not wrong, but finding the right career rarely provides us with the benefits we would expect.

JOHN HART

David Awbrey, editorial page editor of the Wichita Eagle, recently critiqued the American obsession with the career column in the Kansas City Star.

"It's a sign of dubious progress that while Americans once worried about whether they would have jobs, many of them now worry whether their jobs have them.

"The attitude toward careers is a major change in how Americans perceive themselves. Once people based their identity largely on their family, nationality, ethnic background, religion or where they lived. Today, many middle-class Americans define themselves mainly by occupation — lawyer, doctor, accountant. Indeed, the energy and time invested in a career can virtually shut out other aspects of life," Awbrey writes.

Americans not only look to careers to provide them with material security but with psychological security as well. A person's self-esteem rises or falls with a promotion or demotion, a raise or pay cut. In a society that rarely affirms the objective or intrinsic worth of the individual, it is understandable why Americans seek to define their value by what they do or possess rather than who they are. In political and professional circles, the question is "what do you do?" not "tell me what kind of person you are."

In our quest to find significance, we attach ourselves to as many symbols of success as possible. We look to titles, degrees, fashion, and material possessions to provide us with a sense of importance.

Philosopher William James wrote 100 years ago, "The moral flabbiness born of the exclusive worship of the bitch — goddess SUCCESS. That — with the squalid cash interpretation of the word success — is our national disease." While many Americans accept the old adage that money can't buy happiness, we live as if greed's cousins, prestige and status can. This attitude, which is deeply embedded in the American psyche, is evident among college students. We often base our self-esteem on our grades, scholarships, titles in student government, our social image in greek houses or how many people know us around campus.

In our pursuit of attaining self-worth through holding powerful positions or attaining personal wealth, we cut ourselves off from those things that may provide us with the security we long for.

According to management experts Tom Peters and Nancy Austin, "The cost of excellence is giving up family weekends, Little League games, birthday dinners, evenings, weekends, lunch hours, gardening, reading, movies and most other pastimes. We have a number of friends whose marriages or partnerships crumbled under the weight of their devotion to a (career) dream. We are frequently asked if it is possible to 'have it all' — a fully satisfying personal life and a fully satisfying hard working one. Our answer is no."

Awbrey writes, "The greatest personal crisis for many Americans today isn't financial destitution, but a poverty of the spirit, a bankruptcy of the inner life. This is especially true for many people who have achieved some level of material comfort and are wondering, 'Is this all there is to life?'"

The most banned book in America ahead of the times, the Bible, sums up the matter: "What good is it for a man if he gains the world but forfeits his soul?"

John Hart is a senior in political science.

▶ TAGGING

People were incorrectly labeled

Dear Editor,

This is in response to the article "Tagging in Manhattan," which appeared last Friday.

Although this is a letter to the editor, it would probably go just as well in the corrections. First of all, I would like to express my disappointment at the way the article was written. It is a terrible misrepresentation of all legitimate tagging crews. In the same way, it would be extremely offensive to many K-State students to print an article about comparing L.A.-style street gangs to campus fraternities simply because they are a large group of males who have a family-like structure, show strong male unity, often dress alike and have their own lingo.

This article was a mistake. A tagging crew is not a "gang." Many gangs do tag to mark their neighborhoods but that does not make a tagging crew a gang. A tagging crew is a group of graffiti-style artists who get together because of common interests, much like the Thespians or Writer's Guild. In fact, many former gang members join tagging crews as a way out of the gangs. As for the "FCC," it is by no means a gang. It is a graffiti crew, with members as K-State and representation as far away as Seattle, Tulsa and Kansas City. The use of FCC is more of a political statement than the treehouse club you made it out to be.

As for your confidential informant "Bob," I hope for his sake he is not planning on claiming his set (gang) in any legitimate neighborhoods. For starters, ICG is spelled Insane CRIP Gang, not CRYPT gang. Crypt is a word that belongs with Tales From the Crypt on HBO. Second, the use of the six-pointed star belongs to all Folks, strong allies to the entire Crip Nation, not just the ICG's. So to Det. Moldrup I say, come on. You know who you can and cannot talk to. To the students who read the Collegian five times a week, don't believe the hype.

▶ ELECTION

Stevens would best serve Manhattan

Dear Editor,

The recent debate between Sheila Hochhauser and Ann Stevens highlighted the fact that students who are legal residents of Kansas need to register and vote in the upcoming November elections.

This is an opportunity for KSU students to put a legislator into office who understands the needs and concerns of students as well as those of the University as a whole.

Ann is a business manager for the College of Human Ecology and as such is familiar with student problems and concerns. As a member of the KSU administrative staff, she knows firsthand the problems of trying to provide a first-class education to students under the pressures of limited facilities and limited available funding.

It is doubtful that trial lawyer Sheila Hochhauser would identify to any great extent with students. This belief is supported to some extent by Hochhauser's statement that during the flood she was vacationing in Europe. When she heard what was happening, she did not return home to her constituents during their time of need, but hired someone to "... keep (her) informed ..." Couple this with a 92-percent fail rate on bills she introduced in the Kansas Legislature, and I think it quickly becomes apparent who would be the best choice in November.

'River Wild' a slow, predictable movie

TRENT FRAGER
Collegian

It is a shame to waste good actors on bad material.

Take, for instance, Meryl Streep in "She-Devil," "Death Becomes Her," "The House of the Spirits" and now "The River Wild."

Streep plays Gail, a former whitewater rafting tour guide and strong wilderness woman, who believes her marriage is close to finished.

So, she and her son leave their domestic lives in Boston for the roaring rapids of the river. To their happy surprise, workaholic husband Tom (David Strathairn) joins them just in time to climb aboard.

But this ain't no peaceful vacation. There are two bad guys on the loose on — would you believe? — the very same river.

Kevin Bacon plays Wade, who, with his dim-witted accomplice, holds the family hostage, taking advantage of Gail's navigational expertise to get the criminals out of the reach of police. To do that, they have to conquer the Gauntlet, the deadliest rapids in the world.

"The River Wild" is a joke. It is no more exciting than sitting in a pool, and no more entertaining than drinking water.

There is very little that is unpredictable in this film. How long will it take before Wade slips up and one character escapes? How long till they conquer the Gauntlet? How long till Gail destroys Wade?

More problems: sophomoric writing; contrived acting, particularly by Bacon; forced environmental plugs. It is laughable how Wade plays with Gail's naivete, leaving the audience confused. Isn't she supposed to be intelligent?

The most dramatic moment of the film comes when the family dog leaps from a 50-foot cliff into the river to be with one member of the family, who has escaped from the criminals. It is the dog that is the most-developed character in the cast.

But, Streep holds her character together well with determined discipline she is known for.

This film's plot is all-washed-up. "The River Wild" is trite and too hyped up to make much sense.

In summary, it is a waste of valuable time, good money and good talent.

RIVER WILD

"The River Wild," starring Meryl Streep and Kevin Bacon, plays at 8:15 p.m. daily at Seth Child Cinemas, 2610 Farm Bureau Road.

Casting perfect for 'Six Degrees'

RUSSELL FORTMEYER
Collegian

Stylishly set in New York City, the film "Six Degrees of Separation" is an urban-contemporary, philosophical take on the divisions of life; those divisions primarily being race and class.

Ouisa and Flan Kitteridge (played to perfection by Stockard Channing and Donald Sutherland) are high-faluting New Yorkers, living the life of the established rich.

Flan, an exclusive art dealer who makes million-dollar deals, and Ouisa, a woman with no qualms about passing her hand across Michelangelo's Sistine Chapel fresco of God creating Adam, live in a fabulous, Central Park apartment filled with objects d'art.

When a young, African-American man named Paul (Wil Smith, a.k.a. Fresh Prince), claiming to be a friend of the Kitteridges' typically-spoiled, Ivy-league kids, stumbles into their lives out of nowhere, they accept him into their home, rather unexpectedly.

What's very different about Paul is that he also claims to be famed African-American actor Sidney Poitier's son. Paul also cooks gourmet food, romances about the meaning of life and spills delicious stories of his life with father Poitier all over the place.

His main point, and also the topic of his faux thesis, is the idea that everyone is separated by six degrees. Every sixth person is exactly the same.

Based on a true story, which inspired John Guare's wildly successful Broadway play, the movie stays marvelously close to his original script.

The idea came to Guare after many of his New York friends told him a similar story about a man, passing himself off as Sidney Poitier's son and their kids' friend, entered their house and attempted to befriend them.

Supposedly, he had met a friend of the many children at a university, and in exchange for sex received information regarding the lives of the children's rich parents.

With this information, he had planned on entering the upper class, leaving behind his poverty-stricken life.

The movie version offers the availability of the New York City backdrop of the haves.

Flan and Ouisa are seen in all the places "to be seen" — the Museum of Modern Art, exclusive restaurants and their kids' Ivy league schools. This isn't Woody Allen's angst-ridden New York, but an easy-going, fly-by-night city filled with rich, successful, not always interesting people.

Channing, recreating her award-winning Broadway role, makes a tour de force return to screen after a notable absence as the free-spirited Ouisa. Channing's very New York-ish characteristics garnered her a Best Actress Oscar nomination in 1994.

Sutherland, always a determined actor, smoothly fits the more restricted part of Flan.

Probably the most shocking performance is that of Wil Smith. Smith's homosexual, philosophical impostor is a very daring first effort on his part. This is a very un-Hollywood movie if there ever was one.

If Smith's performance is any indication of his acting career to come, I can't wait.

▶ ASSISTED SUICIDE

Michigan Supreme Court to rule on Kevorkian cases

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LANSING, Mich. — The question that Dr. Jack Kevorkian has pushed onto the national agenda with his highly publicized involvement in 20 deaths now falls to the Michigan Supreme Court.

Do people facing painful death or incurable illness have a constitutional right to assisted suicide?

The court will hear oral arguments Tuesday on whether Michigan's assisted suicide law is constitutional and whether Kevorkian can be tried on murder charges in two assisted-suicide deaths that occurred before the state ban was in place.

"Dr. Kevorkian has become the figurehead in the assisted-suicide debate. However, the argument presented here goes beyond the man and arrives at the fundamental principles of liberty and the role of government in our modern society," Kevorkian's lawyer, Geoffrey Fieger, wrote in briefs to the court.

Fieger wrote that Kevorkian and others challenging the law aren't out to create a new constitutional right. Instead, he argued, "the right to end pain and suffering by the act of assisted suicide is a right which has always been implicit in the concept of liberty."

"Certainly, the state has an interest in protecting life. However ... the state does not have an interest in prolonging suffering and death and in forcing a competent adult to endure pain and suffering under the guise of 'protecting life.'"

Michigan's assisted suicide ban, passed in an effort to stop Kevorkian, took effect in February 1993.

The Michigan Court of Appeals on May 10 ruled the law unconstitutional on technical grounds — but said there is no constitutional right to assisted suicide.

The appeals court also said Kevorkian could be charged with murder in two 1991 deaths.

Oakland County Prosecutor Richard Thompson, who sought those murder charges, argued in his brief that the "horrifying potential for abuse" justifies banning assisted suicide.

"Making assisted suicide a constitutionally protected right — no matter how well-intentioned — will inevitably lead to the killing of the most vulnerable and voiceless in our society, the elderly, the mentally and physically handicapped and our children who are retarded or chronically ill," Thompson wrote.

Thompson and an assistant, Errol Shifman, wrote that Fieger is trying "to sidestep an untenable legal position by playing word games."

Instead of talking about assisted suicide, Fieger and Kevorkian focus on "the right to end suffering or self-determination," their brief said.

Under that standard, assisted suicide "could not possibly be limited to people suffering unbearable pain and suffering because we would all have a 'right to self-determination.'"

ACLU attorneys Robert Sedler and Paul Denenfeld noted that courts have acknowledged that "the entitlement to control of the body" covers the right to refuse unwanted medical treatment, disconnect life-saving machines and get an abortion.

"It likewise protects the right of the terminally ill to make the choice to hasten inevitable death," their brief said.

"The state cannot have any interest in 'prolonging dying,' which is exactly what it is doing when it prohibits the terminally ill from making the choice to hasten inevitable death by the use of physician-prescribed medication."

▶ BIG EIGHT COACHES

Frazier closer to action

CRESTON KUENZI
Collegian

The main topic around the Big Eight Conference seems to be quarterbacks.

The injuries to many of the team's quarterbacks have caused most of the discourse.

After Nebraska quarterbacks Tommie Frazier and Brook Berringer were hospitalized within the same week, Coach Tom Osborne said he's hoping they will both be ready to play very soon.

"Tommie will not play this week, and he is iffy for Kansas State," Osborne said. "If nothing unusual develops, he should play against Missouri.

"As far as I know in Brook's case, there are no complications. I think he's a little sore, but he should be able to start practice early this week."

Osborne said he was happy with Berringer's performance against Wyoming.

"We thought he did an excellent job," Osborne said. "He did a nice job directing the offense in passing the ball and also running."

Iowa State coach Jim Walden said he is looking forward to the return of his top two quarterbacks.

"Todd Doxzon was running a lot better last week and Robby Duncan is almost 100 percent, so by the time we get to Kansas, we should have both them of back," Walden said.

Oklahoma State coach Pat Jones said it's important to have an experienced back-up quarterback.

"You'd like for your back-up to have been in the program for awhile," Jones said. "When you run into problems is when the guy has no experience."

Gary Gibbs, Oklahoma coach, has been using a couple of methods to keep his quarterback, Garrick McGee, healthy.

"We put in an offense with three backs in order to take some of the pressure off of Garrick," Gibbs said.

Gibbs has also been substituting in the back-up, Terence Brown, every third or fourth drive.

"I think it's very beneficial from his standpoint," Gibbs said. "He does a nice job running the option and he's a good leader."

Gibbs said it is also helpful to McGee.

"He took a lot of hits during the first three ballgames," Gibbs said. "It gives him a chance to rest and a chance to see what's happening on the field from the sideline."

Kansas coach Glen Mason has a couple of concerns dealing with quarterbacks. Not only is Asheiki Preston questionable for the game against K-State, but he also has to find a way to stop Chad May.

Mason said May reminds him of some of the quarterbacks he's seen during his career.

"He kind of reminds me of the Chuck Long's and the Everett's that I used to see in the Big Ten," Mason said. "He's got an awfully strong arm.

"He knows the offense, and he directs the offense."

Mason said the thing that stands out most about May is his decision-making.

"The most impressive thing about it is he's thrown so many passes without an interception, which means he's making some awful good decisions," Mason said.

K-State coach Bill Snyder said it is difficult to prepare for the Jayhawk's quarterbacks, Preston and Mark Williams.

"Both of them are so proficient," Snyder said. "They both throw 70 percent or better.

"They're also good at breaking contain, getting the ball outside, and are a real threat with some of the option stuff."

▶ MONDAY NIGHT FOOTBALL

Turnovers destroy Oilers in loss

ASSOCIATED PRESS

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Forget Deion Sanders. The Pittsburgh Steelers are the NFL's true prime-time players.

The Steelers reversed a season-long succession of bad starts, turning Barry Foster's 115 yards and the helpless Houston Oilers' numerous mistakes into points on their first four possessions and a 30-14 romp Monday night.

Kevin Greene recovered two of four first-half fumbles by harried quarterbacks Cody Carlson and Bucky Richardson and the Steelers continued to excel on Monday, bolting to leads of 20-0 in the first quarter and 30-0 in the second half.

The Steelers now 5-0 on Mondays under coach Bill Cowher, were working on their third successive Monday night shutout at home until Richardson threw two touchdown passes in the final 9:11.

"We're tough on Mondays — if we could play every game on Monday, we'd go to the Super Bowl," wide receiver Andre Hastings said. "The defense was relentless and the offense didn't mess around like we usually do."

The Steelers had been outscored 24-3 in the first quarter and trailed in all four games by at least 10 points, but this night Houston (1-4) never had a chance.

Steelers	30
Oilers	14

Foster had 100 yards by the first minute of the second half and Neil O'Donnell shrugged off his worst NFL start with a pair of big-play first-down passes in the Steelers' fourth Monday night victory in the last two seasons.

"It looked like Houston wasn't ready to play," Foster said. "But getting some points early definitely pumped us up. When I'm getting so many yards untouched like I was, you know I'm getting some great blocking."

The Steelers' defense, which seems to play off Cowher's rah-rah intensity on Monday nights, forced a beaten-up Carlson (3-for-7, 18 yards) out of the game in the second quarter.

"He's got a sore shoulder and a broken nose and was wearing a face shield, and we knew he'd be real cautious," linebacker Greg Lloyd said. "We did a good job of disrupting him."

A rattled Richardson wasn't much better, fumbling two of his first three snaps, but it was already 20-0 by then and it hardly mattered. The Oilers didn't score until Richardson pass plays of 76 yards to Ernest Givins and 2 yards to Haywood Jeffires, after rookie Bam Morris' 1-yard TD run made it 30-0.

Fraternity carrying game ball to Memorial Stadium Thursday

Fraternity sets goal for leukemia charity at $25,000

BILL MCNALLY
Collegian

The University of Kansas and K-State football teams are getting ready to knock heads on Thursday night.

The people of Manhattan are getting ready to invade the town of Lawrence.

The Phi Gamma Delta fraternities from both KU and K-State team up each year to run the gameball, at the stadium in which the game will be played.

All the money raised goes to help fight leukemia.

This marks the 21st annual FIJI Run for Leukemia. In 1974, Rod Morgan, a Fiji fraternity brother, died from leukemia. Since then, the two fraternities have worked together to raise money to help fight leukemia.

"This year's goal is $25,000, and if we can reach that amount, it will boost the total earnings to $500,000," Trevor Williams, philanthropy chairman for the K-State Fiji chapter, said.

The running will start around 8 a.m. in Manhattan and will end in Lawrence in plenty of time for the game on Thursday night.

The KU chapter will come to Manhattan, and the two chapters will intermingle and spread themselves throughout the course.

The planned course for the ball is to leave the Fiji house at 1919 Hunting Ave., traveling down Sunset Avenue to Anderson Avenue.

From there, they will venture their way through Aggieville and make their way back out to Bluemont Avenue. They will cross Tuttle Creek Boulevard and maneuver their way by the American Legion and McCall's Patterns onto Kansas Highway 24, which is the main route to Lawrence.

The towns that the course will travel through will be Wamego, St. Mary's, Rossville, Silver Lake, North Topeka, Perry and finally Lawrence.

Then they will hunt their way to KU's Memorial Stadium in time for the 7 p.m. kick off.

"It is a lot of fun to put on this philanthropy, because regardless of rain or shine we still run the gameball to the town in which the game will be played," Williams said.

At halftime of the football game, members from both fraternities will present a check for the amount raised and a football to the

K-State upends Sterling College in season opener

Club planning open tournament to raise funds

WESS HUDELSON
Collegian

The men's tennis club took on Sterling College in its first match Saturday, Oct. 1, capturing six of the nine matches.

"We actually have a pretty good team this year," Brian Timmons, president of the tennis club, said.

Timmons scored an 8-0 victory over Matt Hendricks in No. 5 singles action but was defeated in No. 3 doubles along with partner Ioannes Romer by Hendricks and Andrew Krashica.

Peter Gunadisastra captured No. 1 singles for the Cats by upending Sean Getchell 8-2. K-State took five of the six singles matches.

However, Getchell was victorious in No. 1 doubles when he and his partner, Ryan Schloemer, defeated Brett Krug and Ken Conklin 8-3.

Timmons said the Cats' upcoming matches could be more challenging.

"We have teams like Cowley County (Community College) scheduled so the competition should get better," Timmons said. "They were one of the top junior-college teams in the state last year."

He said K-State could have anywhere from two to five more matches this fall to play, but the schedule is not set.

"Right now I have a lot of question marks about who we're going to play," Timmons said. "All I can do is call the other people and see what kind of open dates they have."

One date set is the team's annual fund-raising event coming up Oct. 22-23.

The club sponsors a tournament open to all of Manhattan, Timmons said.

The open tournament includes divisions for adult-men's singles, student-men's singles, men's doubles, women's singles, and women's doubles.

"The tournament is basically open to anyone who wants to enter the event," Timmons said.

The Family Cat gets points for sounding English

The Family Cat

★★ Think twice
★ Giggle at it in bargain bins

CASEY MILLER
Collegian

The undisputed kings of music critics Beavis and Butt-head would criticize The Family Cat as "another English band with a whiny lead singer."

True, the Cat is one of the few English bands that sound English.

Most of the great ones, The Beatles, The Stones, and Zeppelin sounded American because America was the place to sell records, and they grew up on rock 'n' roll.

This doesn't mean that the British-sounding Family Cat are bad, though.

The music on "Magic Happens" has some of that Beatlesque quality of catchy pop songs with simple melodies.

At the same time, the band is able to break up the simplicity with unusual guitar riffs and quirky lyrics.

This is the first U.S. release by the The Family Cat, who are unheard of on this side of the Atlantic. In England, however, their debut went No. 1 on the alternative charts.

A quick glance at the U.K. charts will explain this. Those wacky Brits will listen to anything. In fact, the "Dukes of Hazzard" soundtrack is still riding high on the British charts.

The compact disc looks to be a keeper, so pick it up if you are a fan of that sappy English stuff.

Towel Rack should reduce ego before worrying about other problem

Dear Cassandra,

After exhausting all other options, I am turning to you and the other Collegian readers, for advice on my "big" problem.

To get right to it, I have a hard time finding a girl to have sex with me.

You see, I am rather well-endowed, and many girls find it quite intimidating. Once I get a girl into my bed, I am getting used to comments like, "I'm sorry, but that just won't fit!," or the very complementary, "That's just way to big for me, it's going to hurt too bad!"

This usually puts a serious damper on my evening, because along with being notably sized, it also takes quite some time for me to reach orgasm (without actually having intercourse).

Girls usually get tired of trying to please me, so they quit. So when a girl refuses to proceed with the "big" event, I usually end up having unusual discomfort the next day.

So please help Cassandra - what do I do? I can't have a surgery for size reduction, and I can't just speed things up, so am I just screwed (or not - for that matter! !).

If anybody has any advice, please help me ...

Signed,
Towel Rack

Dear Towel Rack,

The reason for your "big" problem is your big attitude. Don't you think you should worry about caring for a girl before you worry about how she's going to please you in the sack?

You probably can't proceed with the "big" event because your big head keeps getting in the way. I'd get tired of trying to please you, too.

Trust me, I've been with all kinds of guys, and I haven't turned one down yet. Chances are, you're not as big as you think you are, Tiny.

The first step you should take is reducing the size of your ego.

You'll figure the rest out.

Smith resigns to make time for busy schedule

CRESTON KUENZI
Collegian

Just weeks after student body president Jeff Peterson was hospitalized, the Student Governing Association was dealt another blow.

Yesterday, Michelle Smith, SGA's special project director-library, resigned from her position.

"I am sorry to leave Jeff at such an inopportune time, but I know he will understand my command to my constituency, as he has the same heart-felt convictions toward the student body of K-State," Smith said.

Smith said her resignation stemmed from an increasingly busy schedule.

"When I accepted the position, the only other time-consuming activity I had was being the president of the Young Democrats," she said.

At the beginning of the semester, Smith was elected president of the Multicultural Student Council and president of Sigma Lambda Gamma.

Brad Finkeldei, student body vice president, said Smith will be missed greatly.

"She did an excellent job on the communication between students and the library," Finkeldei said. "She worked very hard on the issue of the wall and was trying to do different things with that."

Finkeldei said he was also impressed with Smith's productivity, and the fact she met with Dean Hobrock every week.

"We need someone as dedicated as Michelle to step in and take over her duties, including the weekly meetings, as they have proved to be very beneficial," Finkeldei said.

Smith said she wants the students to continue to support the library.

"I hope that students think about a senior gift to the library in order to meet the goal of $1 million for the national-endowment fund," Smith said.

The position has not yet been filled, but Smith said she recommends the position to a student concerned with issues involving the library.

Audience enjoys poetry reading

SACHA HANES
Collegian

About 40 people listened to peers share their poetry Tuesday night at the poetry reading sponsored by the Union Program Council.

Quoc Nguyen, sophomore in journalism and mass communications and member of the UPC Art Committee, said the poetry reading was in conjunction with Racial/Ethnic Harmony Week.

However, the poets were not limited to that topic.

Seven students shared their poems with the audience.

Several poets had read at readings before, but for a few, it was their first time.

"I like writing poetry, and I knew there would be people here willing to listen," Neleigh Lindfors, freshman undecided and first-time reader, said.

Justin Wild, junior in secondary English education, said he participated in readings all last year and plans to continue this year.

He has written poetry since he was young, and the reading of it just came with everything else, he said.

Some members of the audience were there for a requirement for a class, while others said they enjoy attending poetry readings.

"Poetry readings are like a revival of the Beatnik of the 60s and 70s," Elizabeth Davidson, freshman in journalism and mass communications, said.

Nguyen said poetry reading and writing is declining in the United States, compared to his homeland of Vietnam, where poetry is published in newspapers, on the radio and television.

"I am very happy with the turnout tonight. It shows that poetry is still alive in the United States," Nguyen said.

UPC sponsors a poetry reading on the first Monday of each month.

Parachuting accident results in man's death

KIMBERLY HEFLING
Collegian

A member of the K-State Parachute Club passed away Monday evening after a parachuting accident at the Wamego Municipal Airport Sunday morning.

William Dean, a soldier stationed at Fort Riley, turned too close to the ground while landing his parachute, which resulted in a high-speed landing, Kevin Rawson, president of the K-State Parachute Club, said.

Although Rawson, senior in construction science, was not present at the time of the accident, he said he has talked to several reliable sources who were at the scene of the accident.

Rawson said there had been false rumors spreading about Dean using faulty equipment.

"He had a fully opened and functioning parachute," Rawson said.

Dean was transported to the Stormont-Vail Regional Medical Center in Topeka.

Practicality gets votes

Tedious work is most important in political races

LEIGH BELLINGER
Collegian

Ron Thornburgh, Republican candidate in the Kansas secretary of state race, said even with his 20-point lead in the polls, the election is far from over.

Speaking to the College Republicans Monday night in the K-State Union, Thornburgh, sporting a purple tie, said the worst thing his campaign against Fran Lee can do right now is get comfortable.

"We stop sending the postcards. We stop making the phone calls. We stop doing those little things that win elections," Thornburgh, the current assistant secretary of state, said.

He told the group of more than 30 people that they need to get out and work hard to ensure a victory in November.

"I don't care if it's licking envelopes, licking stamps or writing postcards," he said. "That stuff's not glamorous. That's the stuff that wins elections."

Angie Barnwarth, junior in secondary education, said doing the tedious jobs, like licking stamps, comes with the territory.

"That's true for any campaign," she said, "but that's the part of the campaign that has to be done. It's very vital to campaigns."

She said she was impressed with the fact Thornburgh took the time to speak to a small group of students, when he could easily speak to a larger group in a town like Topeka.

John Potter, sophomore in finance, said he agreed.

"He's not forgetting the people," Potter said. "He's doing this for a reason, not just for himself. That's how he comes across to me."

In town for a fund raiser, Thornburgh also said during his speech that with the polls he's seen, it's a good year to be Republican and a bad one to be a Democrat.

"The numbers are looking incredible," he said, pointing out the leads several Republicans hold over their Democratic opponents statewide and nationwide.

He said with the election only a little more than a month away, his opponent in the campaign has begun to get desperate.

"She has started attacks against me, Bill Graves, and against the Secretary of State office. As a matter of fact, she's attacking Bill Graves so much, I wonder just which office she is running for," he said, referring to the current Secretary of State who is running for governor.

"I don't care if it's licking envelopes, licking stamps or writing postcards. That stuff's not glamorous. That's the stuff that wins elections."

RON THORNBURGH
Republican candidate for Kansas secretary of state

Becca Korphage, chair of the College Republicans, said the group is planning to bring other candidates between now and the election.

Next week it will sponsor a luncheon with Carla Stovall, candidate for state attorney general and a reception for Sheila Frahm, following next week's debate between the candidates for lieutenant governor.

K-State recipient of enviro-tech funding

HOLLY CHEGWIDDEN
Collegian

K-State has been chosen by the U.S. Department of Defense to receive a $1.2 million grant for use in environmental technology.

The purpose of the grant is to help in retraining defense workers laid off due to military base closures and downsizing, Stephen Swanson, K-State-Salina's head of Environmental Engineering Technology, said.

Swanson said $400,000 of the grant money will be used at the main campus for scholarships for both graduate and undergraduate students in environmental programs.

The remaining $800,000 will be used at K-State-Salina to develop a curriculum in environmental technology that will assist in the retraining of laid-off military employees, he said.

The new curriculum will be built on a model currently in use at K-State-Salina and will be used by 20 community colleges across the country, Swanson said.

The community colleges were chosen to participate in the project because they are located close to military bases scheduled for closing and will most likely have an influx of military workers requiring retraining, Swanson said.

"We, here in Salina, have proven that with a two-year associate's degree in technology you can get a job," Swanson said. "We are going to export our expertise to the other community colleges around the country."

Faculty from K-State-Salina and Manhattan will work together to develop the courses as requested by the Department of Defense, Mary Calentine, K-State-Salina development officer, said.

Funds from the grant will also be used to hire a curriculum coordinator who will work with the participating colleges to design application courses specific to the environmental needs of each community, Calentine said.

Swanson said the project will be a joint effort by K-State-Salina and the main campus, as well as the community colleges.

"It will truly be a team effort," he said.

Board rushes to vote on center

times, and it keeps getting pushed and pushed and pushed. What do you want from the Manhattan Gymnastics Center to do this?"

The board members were in a rush to vote on the matter since the lease for Heartland will be up in November.

Before the vote was taken, Nancy Olsen, a board member who has voted in favor of the partnership in the past and even seconded the motion to pass, had to leave. This left the vote to six of the seven board members, who voted the proposal down, 3-3.

Steve Hall, city commissioner, said the board needs to get the proposal before a full-body vote and definitely vote on it.

"If it's a seven member board and they leave it in a 3-3 tie," Hall said, "I just think they should take another vote and not let it linger like that."

Hall said he was in favor of the partnership and that the joint effort would be beneficial to taxpayers.

"If there are things we can do to cooperate together, I think we're foolish not to," Hall said. "I don't see any danger for a monopoly in a community like Manhattan."

Hall also said he didn't think government should be in direct competition with private enterprise.

"The job of government is to govern," he said.

Brown stormed out of the meeting after the vote.

"It's pretty sad that they need to compete against private enterprise," Brown said. "Everything's so political. Last month, they voted 5-1 to make it work. I think it's ridiculous!"

Brown said he went to Heartland to watch the city's program in the last two weeks and didn't see any board members or city commissioners observing the program.

"How can they make a decision without knowing what's going on firsthand?" he said. "It's the exact same program except it costs less.

"I asked them what to do to make it work, and they don't have an answer. Now, they have to renew their lease," he said. "It's too late.

"I don't know what I'm going to do," Brown said. "I truly believe if we combined our programs, we could save money, and the kids would benefit more."

Amendment would have to be passed for rowing money in 1995

wouldn't they be expecting us to take it out of our budget if the proposal was handed down to us?"

Nancy Olsen, board member, asked Koch what his view of the rowing program was after 10 years.

Koch said, "Hopefully we'll renew it and keep going. I envision this to go on a lot longer than I'll be here."

Koch said he didn't know for sure if the proposal would pass the city commission.

Steve Hall, city commissioner, said if the Parks and Rec board expected the city to fund the proposal for 1995, there would have to be a budget amendment since the '95 budget was already passed in August.

"If they recommend it for the '96 budget," Hall said, "it would be taken under consideration in the budget process that begins in January."

Hall said he couldn't give his opinion on the proposal because he wasn't sure what the advisory board was asking of the city.

K-State aims to beat KU again in bloodmobile

LEIGH BELLINGER
Collegian

Most students lying down with needles in their arms and blood pumping into bags in the Derby Dining Center probably did not know they were doing their part to beat the University of Kansas.

The Red Cross bloodmobile pulled into campus Monday afternoon and kicked off a friendly competition between the Wildcats and the Jayhawks to see which school could donate the most blood.

Ironically, the bloodmobile is at K-State the same week as the big football game between the two schools.

Since the competition began in 1993, K-State has held the honor for most blood donated every single semester, Reita Currie, health educator at Lafene Health Center, said. With the honor comes a traveling trophy, which is kept in Lafene, Currie said.

Currie said with this week's football game, the health center hopes to spur some competition and get students to donate.

"We want to beat KU and keep the trophy, but most of all we want to have an adequate blood supply for the community," Currie said.

Each unit of blood can help as many as three different people, she said.

The blood students donate during the week's blood drive will be taken to the Red Cross regional office in Wichita, Currie said.

Once there, samples of the blood will be sent to Tulsa for various types of tests, she said.

Donated blood is used for such things as surgeries, gunshot wounds, car accidents and even Caesarean sections. Because of recent disasters and more advanced surgeries calling for blood, the American Red Cross needs blood, Currie said.

"Just come out and give. We really do need all the blood donations we can get," she said. "People should remember they might need blood someday."

That was one of the main reasons many students said they came out Monday afternoon to donate blood.

"There's a little discomfort, but you might save a life somewhere down the line," Kevin Gebhardt, senior in criminology, said after his donation.

Heather Braden, senior in chemistry, said it was a good idea for the blood drive to begin in Derby, because it made donating blood more convenient for students.

"You hope it's not going to be your turn, but you might need it someday," Braden said when asked why she was donating blood.

Janine Gracy, coordinator for health education at KU, said KU's blood drive begins next week.

BLOODMOBILE

Beginning today, the Red Cross Bloodmobile will be in the second floor of the K-State Union. Hours are 11 a.m. to 6 p.m. Tuesday and Wednesday, 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. Thursday and 9 a.m. to 2 p.m. Friday.

She said the competition between the schools is a good way to get students involved in a community service.

Now, she said, if she could just figure out how to beat K-State.

"I hope they'll be depressed the day after the football game so they won't give," Gracy said, laughing about a possible Jayhawk victory over K-State.

▶ TELECOMMUNICATIONS

Prepare to use area code for all phone calls

ANNETTE RIEDL
Collegian

Starting Nov. 1, callers will have to dial the area code instead of just dialing one for long-distance calls, Sonja Block, telecommunications office assistant, said.

"You'll have to do this from home as well as from work," Block said.

"We're spoiled, so it will take us a while to remember to dial 1-(913) and not just the one," Block said.

All the nationwide phone companies are doing this, Block said.

As of Nov. 1, callers will have to dial one, then the area code, no matter where they are calling from or where they are calling, Susan Rolfs, Telecommunications accounting specialist, said.

Callers can dial the 913 now, if they want to get in practice for Nov. 1, Rolfs said.

They did this because the nation is out of area codes, Rolfs said.

"I know it's hard to believe that we could run out of area codes, but it is happening," Barbara, a Southwestern Bell service representative, said.

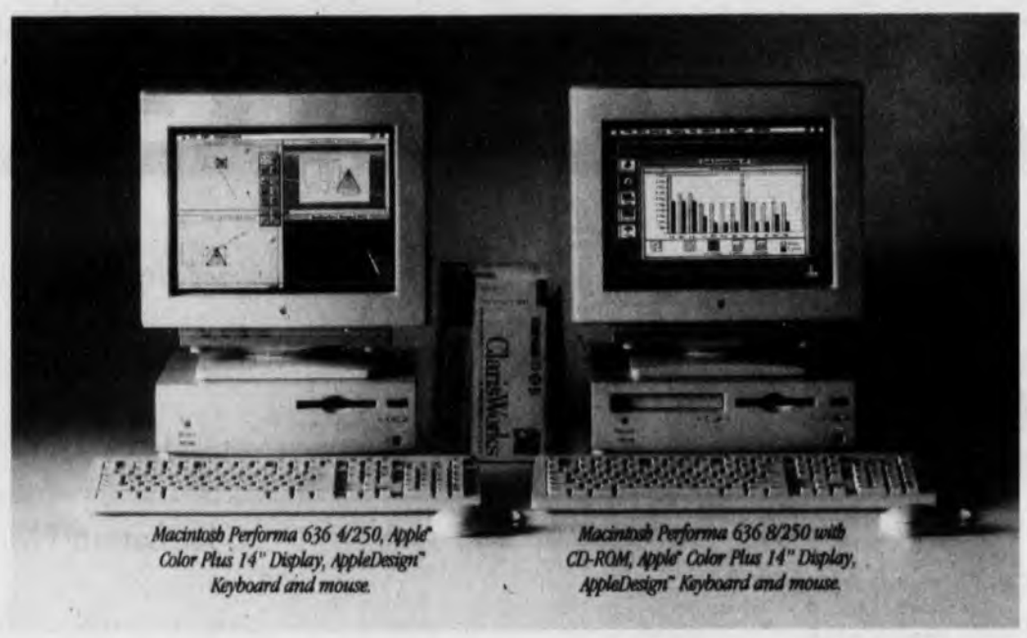
Southwestern Bell alone services a half million customers, she said.

If someone moves or changes their number, the old number must be held in the computer for 90 days before it can be recirculated, she said.

Long-distance companies plan to split area codes down the road, an AT&T representative said. The companies want to to try to get customers in the habit of using the area code, she said.

A call won't go through with just the one. Callers also need the area code, Rolfs said.

If callers forget to dial the area code, they will get a recording saying the call will not go through, Barbara said.



"I know it's hard to believe that we could run out of area codes, but it is happening."

CATEGORIES
To help you find what you are looking for, the classified ads have been arranged by category and sub-category. All categories are marked by one of the large images, and sub-categories are preceded by a number designation.

TIPS FOR WRITING A CLASSIFIED AD
Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.
Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.
Consider including the price. This tells buyers if they are looking at something in their price range.

WE DO NOT USE PHONE NUMBERS OR LAST NAMES IN PERSONALS.

Takaki inspires people to be multiculturally aware departments, and about 80 courses meet the multicultural qualification, Takaki said.

"On a day-to-day basis, we should be learning about the people that make up the United States," he said.

Takaki said it would be common for K-State students to say the University doesn't need a multicultural program because Kansas is a predominantly white state.

However, he said, whites will become a minority in the 21st century.

Takaki said the University of Minnesota is a predominantly white university that approved a multicultural requirement before Berkeley.

"I remember having lunch with the dean of arts and sciences at the University of Minnesota. I asked him, 'Why Minnesota, when your state and student body is 98-percent white?'" Takaki said.

He said the dean gave two reasons.

First, faculty at Minnesota consider the university to be a national university and realized they needed to offer a national curriculum; and secondly, students move to other states following graduation.

"Where do K-State graduates go when they graduate from K-State? Many of you go to Chicago and Los Angeles. It might be a good idea for you to know about other cultures," he said.

Takaki said both Time and Newsweek magazines have documented the "culture wars" during the past few years.

He said the culture wars have emerged as a debate between the two ways of looking at history: "eurocentric exclusionism" and "ethnic particularism."

Both eurocentric exclusionism and ethnic particularism ignore certain cultures, Takaki said.

"There is a third way to look at history. This is the way that emphasizes a pluralistic society," he said.

"Here, if you want to have a pluralistic multicultural program, you have to emphasize the ways people have lived in America and how different paths have crossed," Takaki said.

He illustrated the ways different cultures interacted when two groups, the Irish and the Chinese, migrated to America.

He said about 4 million Irish immigrants came to America between 1800 and 1900, and about 400,000 Chinese immigrants came to America between 1850 and 1900.

Of these immigrants, 52 percent of the Irish were women, while only 15 percent of the Chinese were women, Takaki said.

He said the female Irish immigrants worked in factories in America, while the Chinese immigrants worked primarily on the transcontinental railroad.

Takaki said the American government did not want the Chinese to have children in America; they simply wanted the Chinese as a work force.

Many of the female Irish immigrants worked in textile factories processing cotton, which was tilled by African American slaves on land that belonged to American Indians, Takaki said.

Michael Ott, senior in pre-medicine and business administration, said he thinks all students should be required to take a multicultural class.

"If we don't receive a diverse education, we only hurt ourselves in the end," Ott said.

Jonathan Winkler, junior in math and physics, said he agreed K-State needs a multicultural program, but said it also needs a more global perspective.

"I think there's a great need for courses in our curriculum that will cover Asian Americans and African Americans as well as the European culture," Winkler said.

Espy: ag department to win in any fair fight promote farm income, to seek new markets, and to have the U. S. Department of Agriculture present whatever any other government agency discussed issues relating to agriculture.

He said he also intended to help increase the public's awareness of rural issues and cut the Department's budget.

"It is a year later, and I've got to tell you that I think we have fulfilled most of these promises, but of course we still have some time to go," Espy said.

In the area of farm income, he said commodity prices generally were all up in 1993 as compared to the previous year.

Most prices went up because of last summer's bad weather, he said, but the government also did its part.

The government helped farmers by speedily aiding disaster-stricken producers, Espy said.

It also provided confidence to commodity markets by giving accurate crop forecasts and by taking steps to provide long-term help to the victims.

"We think that the prices will remain firm well into the growing season," Espy said. "That gives the agriculture communities some comfort."

People involved in agriculture also should feel good because trade barriers are falling down all over the world, Espy said. This will increase markets for American farm products.

The North American Free Trade Agreement and the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade will enable American farmers to compete effectively in world markets, Espy said.

"The fact is, because of NAFTA and GATT, we now have a more level playing field than ever before," Espy said.

"I'll tell you like I tell producers all over the world that in any fair fight, we will win."

The Department of Agriculture has won some fights with other government agencies in agricultural issues, but it also has lost some, Espy said.

One important victory was the concessions the department won from the Environmental Protection Agency in the proposed banning of the agricultural chemical, methyl bromide, Espy said.

The EPA proposed ban would have taken effect in 1996, but Espy said the Department of Agriculture forged a compromise that will delay the ban until 2001, which will allow time for development of alternative chemicals.

Espy said the Department of Agriculture helped include rural America in the enterprise-zone policy that the Clinton administration recently announced.

Three enterprise zones and 30 enterprise communities will be in rural America, he said. Each zone will have $38 million dedicated to them for economic assistance, he said.

"We talked to them, not at them," Espy said. "We tried to use the Clinton philosophy of working with one another."

Espy's final promise, cutting the budget, is in progress, he said.

The reorganization of the Department of Agriculture will mean the closing of 1,300 offices, reducing the work force by 8,500 and causing the elimination of 13 agencies, he said.

"We are consolidating based on mission and not acronym," Espy said. "We are trying to save you $2.5 billion, and that is real money."

Plant decision to be made in early December approximately 300,00 square-foot plant.

The city must be relatively close to Wichita, since that is where many of the aircraft parts will be manufactured. The city's airport must also be able to handle test flights for 2,000 planes annually, he said.

Cessna will also consider the available work force and overall quality of life in the city.

The five finalist cities can modify or add to their proposals until Oct. 26. Cessna officials will then study each community further and make a decision the first week of December.

Pearson said city officials are excited about making the final cut, but they realize there is much work still to be done.

"There is a recognition that the work has just begun," he said. "We are in a second stage right now, where we are trying to answer all of Cessna's questions and continue to be considered as a site."

The new plant also represents excitement for the Cesna Corporation as a whole, as it prepares to again produce single-engine planes.

Cessna halted production of the smaller planes eight years ago because of liability costs, Franson said. The company decided to begin production again after a law was passed in August to limit this liability to planes 18 years of age and newer.

"Cessna had been a leader in single-engine plane production for nearly 59 years," Franson said. "We are excited to reenter the market."

Resignation ends 2-year career

Clinton.

Questions also have been raised about Espy's acceptance of tickets to sports events, travel and lodging. Espy denied any wrongdoing, and has repaid more than $7,600 in expenses.

Espy said "I have failed myself" by not being as careful as he should in "managing some of the details" of his personal finances. And he apologized to President Clinton for any embarrassment he had caused the administration.

But he said allegations he improperly billed the government for travel or other expenses were "untrue and unfounded." Espy said he could not comment specifically on the allegations because of the investigation.

Espy said he had been fighting the allegations for months and had begun to feel as if he was "twisting in the wind, twisting in the wind ... The bough finally broke."

The resignation will end a two-year Cabinet career for Espy, a former Mississippi congressman who made history by being the first black, the first Southerner and the youngest person to serve as secretary of agriculture. He becomes the second Clinton-Cabinet member to resign, following former Secretary of Defense Les Aspin.

Espy took over at Agriculture promising change and a "new attitude," quoting from the Patti LaBelle song. He sped to the sites of crises including a food poisoning case and record flooding in the Midwest.

He also worked on global-trade treaties and an overdue move to reorganize the department.

But Espy's frenetic travel schedule also included professional sports tickets, corporate jet travel and lodging from Tyson Foods.

Espy's closeness with Tyson raised allegations, reported in March by the Associated Press, that Espy aides suppressed, then delayed, work on tighter sanitary controls in poultry plants.

And the AP reported this summer that Espy used government-paid travel to go to the Super Bowl, on the pretext of taking part in a Smokey Bear anniversary celebration.

On Sept. 9, a three-judge panel appointed Los Angeles lawyer Donald C. Smaltz as independent counsel to investigate Espy's conduct.

The White House conducted its own ethics investigation. On Sunday, White House Chief of Staff Leon Panetta said he thought Espy did a good job, but warned that the president does not want his aides to "engage in any conduct that raises questions about ethical behavior."

Espy's decision comes just as Congress was finishing work on major legislation overhauling crop insurance and reorganizing the department, both of which had been top projects for the department. Both measured passed the House hours before Espy announced his resignation.

The department had also completed work on legislation and was finishing rules to overhaul meat inspection.

Aides pointed to Espy's accomplishments on trade, opening Asian markets to rice, apples and other foods.

Miles McKee, K-State professor of animal sciences and industry, said that if the reports were true, it reflects poorly on both the food production industry as well as agriculture.

"Sometimes it's easy to jump to conclusions." McKee said. "What a shame if it is in fact true. It looks bad for Mr. Espy."

Former Kansas secretary of agriculture Sam Brownback said he wasn't surprised at Espy's resignation.

"In Washington, when you serve at the pleasure of the president and start getting in trouble, this isn't unusual. This was the best thing for him to do and the best thing for President Clinton."

Brownback said that he didn't know Espy during his tenure as Kansas secretary of agriculture, but met him later. He said that the controversy has been somewhat harmful to agriculture and that Espy has lost credibility.

"We need a strong secretary that's not tainted," he said. "I don't know how negative (to agriculture) it's been, but it certainly hasn't been positive. During the recent trade issues with Japan, agriculture certainly hasn't been on the agenda."

"A Tradition of Caring"....
GOLDEN ANNIVERSARY Celebrate 50
UNITED WAY 1994
Yesterday, today & tomorrow!....from the original 4 agencies funded by The Community Chest in 1944...to the current 13 agencies funded by The United Way, a strong community tradition of caring has and will continue far into the future with your continued support.
Your Local United Way Agencies: Red Cross, Big Brothers/Big Sisters, Boys & Girls Club of Manhattan, Boy Scouts, Crisis Center, Homecare & Hospice, Girl Scouts, Ks. Children's Service League, Manhattan Day Care Center, Manhattan Emergency Shelter, Retired & Senior Volunteer Program and Salvation Army.
In The 60's & 70's
1960's—The impetus began in the previous "flood decade" ... of helping others was continued into the 60's. By 1965 the Community Chest became The United Fund with a goal of $46,985.
1970's—The challenge of caring for families of Vietnam veterans and other local humanitarian needs again found The United Fund playing a major roll locally. The "Fund" became The United Way in 1978.

Speaker encourages students to be proud of Africanness

Racial/Ethnic Harmony Week

African Americans need to learn more about Africa and openly accept their Africanness, a speaker at a Black Student Union open meeting said Tuesday as a part of Racial/Ethnic Harmony Week.

Barbara Hammond, a K-State alumni and a graduate student in cultural anthropology at Northwestern University, said a trip to Africa last summer enabled her not only to collect research for her thesis, but to reflect upon some of her own experiences as an African and an African American woman.

"I was raised in a culture where I was told that I am not African, but I am African American. That's African, but a little bit different," she said.

This led Hammond to ask herself some important questions about her life, her background and culture, she said.

"During my experiences in Africa, I forced myself to confront the issue that even though I am African, do I really feel like I'm African? If I don't, why don't I?"

Hammond said during her trip, she realized Africans and African Americans do not know

Japan, Kuril Islands hit by earthquakes, at least 16 casualties

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOKYO — An enormous undersea earthquake killed at least 16 people in Russia's remote Kuril Islands late Tuesday, jolted Japan and triggered tidal waves on both sides of the Pacific.

A quake with a preliminary Richter scale magnitude of 7.9 hit near the sparsely populated Kuril Island chain north of Japan. About 200 people in northern Japan were injured by broken glass and falling objects.

The Pacific Tsunami Warning Center in Hawaii issued a tidal-wave warning for all Pacific islands and coastal areas, including the west coast of the United States and Canada.

In Moscow, Russia's Ministry for Emergency Situations said the bodies of at least 16 people were found on three islands in the chain.

Ministry spokesman Anatoly Streltsov did not say whether the victims were killed by huge tidal waves reported in the region.

One hit the small island of Zelyony, home to a border-guard unit and fishing settlement. Officials did not immediately know what happened to the residents, Streltsov said.

Aftershocks continued. In some parts of the Kurils, 18-inch cracks were visible in the earth after the quake, he said.

By early Wednesday, about 40 small tsunami waves had been observed in Japan. Most were less than 3 feet high, although one was 6 feet. There were no reports of any damage.

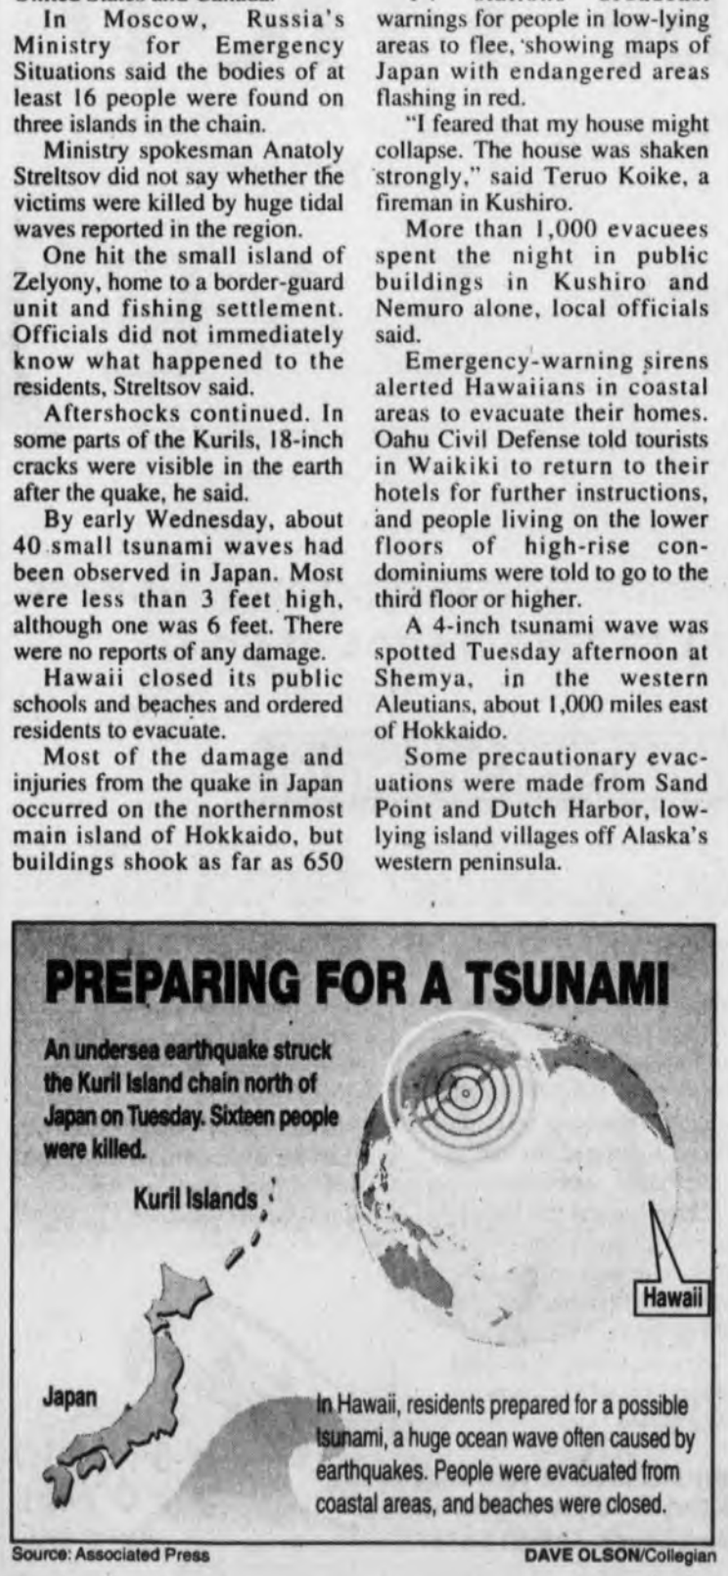
Hawaii closed its public schools and beaches and ordered residents to evacuate.

Most of the damage and injuries from the quake in Japan occurred on the northernmost main island of Hokkaido, but buildings shook as far as 650 miles away in Tokyo.

The quake, which lasted more than a minute, was centered 13 miles beneath the Pacific Ocean floor, near the southern end of the Kuril chain. Japan's Central Meteorological Agency estimated the quake's prelimary magnitude at 7.9, making it the strongest to hit the region in 26 years.

On Japan's lightly populated Hokkaido island, the late-night quake cracked roads, caused gas leaks and flooded streets. One fire was reported in the town of Nemuro, and more than 13,460 households in eastern Hokkaido lost electric power, Kazuhiro Kojima, of Hokkaido Electric Co. said.

TV stations broadcast warnings for people in low-lying areas to flee, showing maps of Japan with endangered areas flashing in red.



"I feared that my house might collapse. The house was shaken strongly," said Teruo Koike, a fireman in Kushiro.

More than 1,000 evacuees spent the night in public buildings in Kushiro and Nemuro alone, local officials said.

Emergency-warning sirens alerted Hawaiians in coastal areas to evacuate their homes. Oahu Civil Defense told tourists in Waikiki to return to their hotels for further instructions, and people living on the lower floors of high-rise condominiums were told to go to the third floor or higher.

A 4-inch tsunami wave was spotted Tuesday afternoon at Shemya, in the western Aleutians, about 1,000 miles east of Hokkaido.

Some precautionary evacuations were made from Sand Point and Dutch Harbor, low-lying island villages off Alaska's western peninsula.

USDA secretary resigns under fire

AMY ZIEGLER
Collegian

Former Secretary of Agriculture Mike Espy learned if you make mistakes in the political arena, you pay the price.

Espy resigned Monday after allegations surfaced that he had accepted gifts from Tyson Foods Inc., the nation's largest poultry company.

Casey Niemann, junior in agriculture business, said if Espy had not resigned, he would have been removed by the administration.

"It was the right thing for him to do. He was running out of lives as it was, and they were going to get to him one way or another. I didn't think he was even going to last that long, to be honest," Niemann said.

Niemann said Espy wasn't the right man for the job in the first place.

"His appointment was more of a political move on Clinton's part than it was a voice for agriculture in general. He fit what Clinton was looking for, but he didn't come from the traditional power cluster that the other agricultural secretaries had come from," Niemann said.

Hyde Jacobs, assistant to the dean of agriculture, said Espy's decision to resign was beneficial to the department of agriculture.

"Agriculture is a very important environmental and educational endeavor, and the secretary of agriculture needs to be environmentally and ethically sound," Jacobs said. "Questions were raised that made it difficult for him to operate effectively, and Secretary Espy came to the decision so the Department of Agriculture could move ahead."

Jacobs said Espy's work with the farm bill and with reorganization was halted by his resignation.

"It's hard to judge him because his progress was interrupted in mid-flight," he said.

Jacobs said although Espy won't have the opportunity to finish his work on the farm bill, he still left a mark on agriculture.

"I'm sorry to see him go. He contributed energy and insight to the process," he said.

Jacobs said it would be in the president's, country's and administration's best interest to elect a new secretary who is equipped with knowledge about agriculture policies and procedures.

"I'm not sure if Clinton will go outside or pick someone inside the administration, but at the same time, I suspect the president will be under pressure to choose someone who is somewhat familiar with agriculture so the department can move ahead expeditiously," Jacobs said.

Bert Pulaski, senior business and finance officer in the college of agriculture, said

Student Senate passes lobby amendment; duties won't change

TRINA HOLMES

A three-fourths majority of Student Senate passed a constitutional revision regarding its lobby team Tuesday night.

Derek Kreifels, the Legislative Affairs Committee chairman and junior in business management, said the revision is important.

"The lobbying issue is what gives students a voice to the governor, the Senate and the House in Topeka," Kreifels said.

Student Senate's ability to lobby is one of the ways students can keep tuition costs in check, Kreifels said.

"It's important because it's what helps us get tuition under control," he said. "If we don't do it, the state legislature will never know how we feel when they raise our tuition 7 percent, and so on."

Although the bill didn't change any of the duties of the lobby team, the bill's approval meant guidelines for the team would be committed to writing, Kreifels said.

The new campus phone books are here.

Gloria Freeland, associate director of student publications, said the books will be on sale from 8 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. today through Friday outside the Stateroom in the Union and maybe Monday and Tuesday next week, if there is enough demand.

"The books will also be available in the Kedzie main office, but we prefer people go to the Union because the initial demand usually overwhelms the office staff," Freeland said.

Freeland said the book has a new 80-page special section with different University policies, like the sexual-harassment policy and the Student Governing Association Constitution. The books cost $2.25 for students with an ID.

▶ WALK THROUGH CAMPUS TO SUPPORT RACIAL/ETHNIC HARMONY WEEK

If you have not participated in any of the Racial/Ethnic Harmony Week events, you can walk through K-State in support of racial and ethnic harmony Friday.

The walk begins at 5 p.m. at the Vietnam Veterans Memorial behind McCain Auditorium, Phil Anderson, Racial/Ethnic Harmony Week coordinator, said.

Walkers will begin at the memorial and proceed around campus, he said.

"The walk is open to anyone who is interested, and there is no cost for participants," Anderson said.

The number of people who participate in the walk varies each year, he said. Information has been sent to many campus groups, fraternities and sororities.

"Some of the girls in my house will be participating," Jamie Ralph, junior in special education, said. "It's one of our community-service projects this year."

After the walk is completed, Rev. Don Fallon, assistant dean of student life, will be speaking about what Racial/Ethnic Harmony Week represents.

▶ HOLOCAUST SURVIVOR GIVES ACCOUNT OF BEING ON SCHINDLER'S LIST

Jewish Holocaust survivor Zev Kedem escaped death as an employee of Oskar Schindler.

Kedem will deliver his speech, "The List of Life," at 4:00 p.m. Thursday in the K-State Union Forum Hall.

He will share his experience of being part of the Holocaust, Sarah Hadley, Union Program Council program adviser said.

Kedem grew up in the ghettos of Poland during the time of raids and survived as a Jewish boy in the concentration campus, Hadley said.

It was in a concentration camp in Poland that Kedem met Schindler, she said.

Kedem was separated from his family and sent to Auschwitz until the end of the war.

"In Auschwitz, he saw his mother in the selection line, where the prisoners were lined up, and the Nazis decided who would be gassed," Hadley said.

When the war was over, Kedem was set free, but he didn't have his family.

Kedem's father was killed outside of Auschwitz, and he would not see his mother for 40 years.

"He was liberated in 1945, at the age of 11 and sent to a British orphanage," Hadley said.

Kedem is now a documentary film maker in California, said Patrick Carney, chair of UPC Issues and Ideas Committee.

One of his most recent accomplishments was serving as a technical adviser to Steven Spielberg for the movie, "Schindler's List."

Kedem is also in the last scene of the movie, where the Holocaust survivors walk past Schindler's grave and place rocks on his headstone, Carney said.

During his talk, Kedem will show a video of scenes from "Schindler's List" and answer questions from the audience, Hadley said.

At around 5:30 p.m., there will be an open reception for Kedem in the Cats' Pause Lounge.

Kedem has been delivering speeches in Kansas and Minnesota this week, and K-State was fortunate to schedule a visit, Carney said.

This is one of the bigger events UPC has scheduled this semester, Hadley said.

"It's too bad it falls on the day of the K-State-KU game, but it shouldn't be a problem with the game," Hadley said. "We expect around 200 to 300 people to attend."

"Schindler's List" will be shown at 7:00 p.m. Friday and Saturday in Forum Hall. Admission is $1.75.

'Speed-the-Plow' exposes studios

RUSSELL FORTMEYER
Collegian

The Hollywood hustle of greasy, fast-talking schmoozers in a morally questionable world makes "Speed-the-Plow" a riotous black comedy that shouldn't be missed.

Bully for K-State Theatre to present such a contemporary, scathing comedy as which "Speed-the-Plow" ultimately is.

"Speed-the-Plow," the hit-Broadway play by David Mamet, which treated audiences to Madonna's stage debut, opens at K-State on Thursday evening.

"Speed-the-Plow" puts the Hollywood life under a microscope, finding the greed, temptations and backstabbing that happens in the highest offices of the studios.

To prepare for the play, director Lew Shelton, associate professor of speech, had the cast watch Robert Altman's Hollywood opus, "The Player," and Mamet's own "House of Games."

"I can't say that I've ever done that before," Shelton said.

Mamet, perhaps best known for his screenplay, "The Untouchables," and his plays, "Oleanna," "Glengarry GlenRoss" and "American Buffalo," received great critical success with "Speed-the-Plow."

Having Madonna in the show boosted ticket sales, but she received very lukewarm, yet hopeful, reviews.

Mamet has a very distinct style, he said.

Shelton said it has been hard to get the dialogue down.

"There's a kind of poetry about it," he said.

"I told them there will be parts of these characters we will never understand," Shelton said.

Take Bobby Gould, the mailroom boy turned Hollywood producer, who has the ultimate power of being able to "green-light" a project.

His lowly, kiss-ass sidekick, Charlie Fox, who coincidentally worked his way up with his buddy, Gould, only to become second best, works opposite Gould, offering his realistic, or rather insane, viewpoint.

Gould and Fox have just stumbled upon the greatest movie they could ever hope of making: a prison movie with sex, action, buddy situation and lots of violence. However, they also have the choice of a human, societal dissecting piece about nuclear apocalypse.

Enter Karen, the seemingly sweet-natured temporary secretary who nudges her way

St. Francis honored; pets receive blessing

MIKE HIND
Collegian

Barking dogs, scared cats and chirping birds were all part of the second annual Blessing of the Animals outside All Faiths Chapel Tuesday evening.

Around 15 animals were there, along with their owners to take part in St. Francis Day, said Cathy Chittenden-Bascom, an Episcopal campus priest.

St. Francis was a Franciscan priest who started an order that believed Christ and his followers lived in poverty, Chittenden-Bascom said.

The order lived outdoors and, in this way, connected with the animals, she said.

"St. Francis became the patron saint of animals," Chittenden-Bascom said. "He developed a oneness with them. He learned about God from the animals."

Tina Gifford, graduate teaching assistant in English, brought her 5-month-old English sheepdog, Emma, to the blessing because she said Emma was part of the family.

"She is here because she is a member of our family, just like my husband and myself," Gifford said. "I feel it's a form of baptism."

The blessing began with an opening song followed by prayers and Bible readings. Then, each animal was individually blessed with water and a prayer.

T.J. Zimmerman's 16-pound cat, Tiger, who is 10 years old, took the water and the blessing in stride, licking himself dry afterward.

Tiger's eyes, peering through his cage, remained wide all through the ceremony.

"I think he's scared," said T.J., son of Al Zimmerman, a Presbyterian campus minister.

The blessing ended with a song and closing prayer.

Linda Matthews, Manhattan resident, brought her long-haired Dachshund, Princess, out of concern for her health.

"She had some tests this year," Matthews said. "She is 8 and has a few health problems.

"I think it's very nice all the animals got along," she said.

IN OUR OPINION

By the Collegian Editorial Board

Still no protection from construction

The wall is gone, but nothing has been put up to replace it.

Did you think the epic of the wall between Farrell Library and Lafene Health Center was over?

Think again. The University tore down the wall right before Family Weekend, just a coincidence of timing. They put a chain-link fence in its place. A tarp was to cover the wall to prevent objects from within the construction area flying out and hitting someone. The tarp isn't up yet and isn't expected to be on the wall until the end of this week.

The first outcry when the wall came down was freedom of expression, but now the outcry should be for public safety.

The plywood wall was a solid force to keep debris out. The tarp might slow something down, but an object could fly right through the tarp. Does it take a pedestrian getting hit by a rock or piece of wood to get action done?

The only advantage is that Lafene is right next door in case someone gets hurt while walking to class.

It is time for K-State pedestrians to take action. Each and every person who has to walk by the wall should buy safety goggles and hard hats to protect themselves.

If you don't have the funds for these unforeseen expenses, take out an Emergency Student Loan. When the financial-aid assistant asks you what the loan is going to be for, tell them "crossing-campus survival expenses."

TOLES

Funds require class presence

I need a show of hands, now.

How many of you out there knew that our faculty has been deputized by the U.S. government?

(Long pause) I thought so.

Now don't get too scared. It hasn't really been deputized. None of the faculty members have been seen wearing stars, carrying handguns or anything like that.

DAN LEWERENZ

But they have been asked by the feds to help inform on students.

A memo dated Sept. 8 from Lawrence E. Moeder, Director of the Office of Student Financial Assistance, requests that faculty members report any student who has not been coming to class and has not provided a reason for absence. Last date of attendance forms have been provided, and faculty members are highly encouraged to return them with all speed.

I am not a constitutional scholar, nor have I studied financial aid extensively. But for the federal government to be keeping tabs on class attendance seems more than a little suspect.

For his part, Moeder seems as displeased about the idea as I am. "Unfortunately, even though this is a tremendous burden to place on instructors, the federal regulations do not give educational institutions much of an option.

"Compliance with the federal financial-aid regulation that addresses 'last date of class attendance' continues to be a predominant issue with the Department of Education in Washington. Institutions found in noncompliance face the loss of student financial-aid funding if corrective measures are not promptly implemented."

Moeder falls in the unenviable position of trying to enforce this regulation on campus. And if he neglects this duty, the consequences could be dire.

"For K-State students," the memo goes on to state, "this could result in a $50-million annual loss of assistance."

Although I do not know of a uniform response to this demand among the faculty, I can report what one member did. She chucked the sucker over her left shoulder. And I can't imagine the rest of the faculty being too keen on the idea, either.

From the students' point of view, this requirement must be frightening for those on federal financial aid. The form itself reiterates that instructors are not required to take attendance, noting that "if the student is meeting your class attendance expectations, there is no need to complete this form."

It would appear that continued reception of federal financial aid is somehow tied to this nebulous concept of "meeting ... class attendance expectations." Does that mean that, on top of potential damage to grades, a student could lose federal grants and loans because of poor class attendance? And that standard of class attendance is entirely arbitrary and can change from class to class?

Apparently so. The memo indicates that students will be informed of necessary withdrawal procedures (from class? the University?) and that a refund/repayment schedule will be established for the student.

Federal education funds exist to help students get an education, not make sure they go to class. And despite what some instructors and many parents will tell you, the two do not always go hand in hand.

Moeder concludes by stating that those with questions should call his office at 532-6420. I would like to encourage not only faculty, but students with concerns about their financial future to do so.

For while the University may be penalized for not complying with this regulation, others may certainly be penalized if we do comply.

Homeless life is hard to re-create

ERIN MANSUR-SMITH

Let's play pretend.

Imagine, what would you take with you if you knew you were going to be homeless? You'd be out on the street for an unspecified amount of time. Clothes? You can't take too many. Toilet paper? A blanket? Extra food?

Who would you go to if you knew you were going to be homeless? Your parents? Your friends? How long could they, if they would, put you up? Especially if you couldn't find a job right away. A week? Two? A month? OK, quick now. Think. How much money do you have on you? Imagine that being the only bit of change you have in your pocket to last you for who knows how long.

Now, let's raise the stakes. You have a 4-year-old child to take care of. Better yet, you're 65 years old. How about having a mental illness or a physical handicap? Doesn't really matter which. Take your pick.

Can you guess what the object of the game is? Survival.

Doesn't seem that easy, huh? Doesn't seem at all like fun? Maybe not, but it would be the experience of a lifetime.

A group of K-State students are going to get the experience of a lifetime this weekend. They will be participating in Urban Plunge, a program designed to teach "economically privileged" individuals what it's like to be homeless for two days.

The students will sleep on the streets, beg for change and try to apply for jobs without addresses. They'll even try to see if they'll be allowed to use the public facilities in posh restaurants.

Cindy Meyer, a campus minister, said the purpose of the program is to teach participants the hardships of living on the streets. It gives those who might not have it some kind of small awareness of what it might be like to exist under those kind of conditions and gain knowledge about the growing problem of homelessness.

The first thing I did when I heard that was laugh. You may think that's a strange reaction, but after living in and out of homeless shelters for three years, I get very cynical hearing about programs designed for people to "experience" homelessness first-hand. It's kind of like trying to undergo living through a fire or having someone close to you die. What dies is your self-esteem, your dignity and sense of self-worth. Being homeless is not as simple as going through two days of having someone on your "team" watch you while you catch some sleep. It's trying to keep moving so you don't have to worry about it.

But after the laughter died down, I was left with only one emotion: fear. I don't think anything bad will happen to the participants. In the 20 years this program has been in effect, no one has ever been hurt while in it. And I'm not afraid the students won't get anything out of it. One can't live on the streets for even a day and not come away with something. Even if that something is the knowledge of how to wash up in a public restroom.

What I am afraid of is knowing what they may learn, knowing what they may end up feeling, the people living through this experiment won't do anything about it when they're back in their homes, safe and sleeping on squeaky-clean sheets.

I'm afraid, in the end, they'll shudder when they talk about this to their friends and joke about how bad it was, but they won't do anything else.

I am grateful someone out there wants to learn and is willing to sacrifice a weekend trying to gain understanding, even if it's just an inkling of what the real thing is like.

I can only hope when those students walk away, they don't think it was only a game.

What would you do if you knew you were going to be homeless?

▶ SEXISM

Attitudes come from people, not words

Dear Editor,

Teresa Gillenwater, I applaud you for knowing the answer to the riddle. I remember hearing that same joke in my sociology class back home, but no one knew the answer (maybe that is because there were only 13 or so girls and 20 or so boys). I thought it was funny. In fact, I was a little embarrassed, just like most of us in that class felt afterwards. Sexism brings up a very vague and clouded debate in this case, in generations before us, we must deal with the facts. You say that very few men answered the riddle correctly. Is that because of the words or the attitudes of these men? Or could it be that it is a riddle, and you're not supposed to know the answer? It can't be the words, because there are even women who don't know the answer to riddles like that. It must be because it's a riddle. Before I get in deep, let's look at some definitions of those sex-biased words.

Sexism-n. 1. ATTITUDES or behavior based on traditional stereotypes of sexual roles.

Sexist-adj. 1. pertaining to, involving or fostering sexism.

God-n. 1. The creator and ruler of the Universe. Supreme being.

Did you learn that god was a woman from the word "God," or did you develop this on your own, or maybe someone told you this? From your own article, we can see that is your definition. As you can see, the fact is, sexism is an attitude, not a word. It does not stem from words. Well, there you have it, these words do not try to "squash women down and put men one step higher" as you arrogantly believe. Let's look at some of these definitions that are squashing women to a pulp.

Manpower-n. 1. The power supplied by HUMAN physical exertion.

Mankind-n. 1. Human beings collectively WITHOUT references to sex; HUMAN kind.

Human-adj. 1. of, pertaining to, characteristic of, or having the nature of PEOPLE.

And your word businessmen is not a wording in your letter proves to us that it is attitudes that are the "grass roots" of sexism, not language! Words do not discriminate, people do! You see, Teresa, it's those same attitudes that you have that causes sexism, racism and discrimination: putting down others based on artificial facts. Also, by assuming the meaning of a word without really looking into its true meaning, you become discriminatory.

Now to all women out there, don't let Teresa represent you with this article.

Trucks, vans endanger pedestrians

Dear Editor,

Why do you suppose that K-State groundkeepers, printing services, delivery people and UPS vans and trucks can drive on the sidewalks? I saw this when I was in class in Eisenhower, looking out the window. There was a truck parked between Eisenhower and Denison. There were five to six men standing around, talking while the students had to make their way around. When I looked outside a little later, the men and the truck were still there, and there was also a van in front of Denison. Within 50 feet of each other, there were two vehicles on sidewalks meant for pedestrians. How can this be when we students can't ride on the same sidewalk? How precisely does a bicycle endanger a pedestrian more than a truck or a van? Explain this to me, because the logic behind this escapes me.

▶ CAMPUS CONSTRUCTION

University chooses tarp over wall for safety

SERA L. TANK
Collegian

Cost and safety have been factors in deciding what to put up around the Farrell Library construction zone.

There was a plywood wall around the construction zone, but it was taken down Sept. 23. A chain-link fence was put up in its place.

The chain-link fence is effective in preventing people from going into the construction area, it but cannot protect them from flying dust and debris, Jerry Carter, director of facilities planning, said.

"The cheapest and fastest way to fix that is by going to Wal-Mart and buying tarp to cover the fence. I think we're going to do that, but it all has to be cleared by the state architect," he said.

Carter said the tarp isn't needed until there is activity near the fence.

"There is no code to specify how close or far you have to be. It relies on the judgment of the officials. In other words, what we feel is necessary to best take care of the students, faculty and staff," he said.

Dave DeBusman, director of the division of architecture for the state of Kansas, said there isn't any code that says there has to be any sort of solid barrier at all.

"We just do that for pedestrian safety. We want to do what is in the best interest of the students," he said.

John Luthi, the safety officer for Abbott Construction in Manhattan, said specifications regarding the use of a barrier depends on the project.

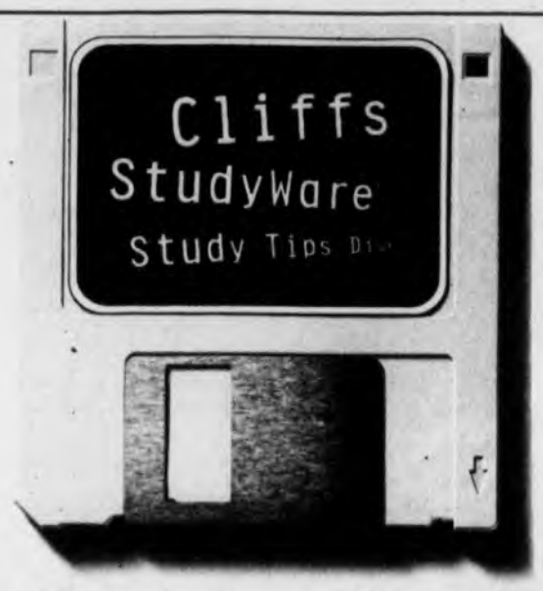
"There is just a general regulation for every construction project that says you have to protect the public. How you do that and the extent to which you do that is up to the state in this case," he said.

DeBusman said he anticipates the tarp will be up in a few days.

"They will be installing the tarp very shortly. It should be up by the end of the week," he said.

Safety is the most important factor in deciding what to use and when to use it, Carter said.

"Reasonably, we think the tarp is going to do. If it wasn't as safe, the state architect wouldn't allow it," he said.



Even though the tarp will be less expensive than the original wall, Carter said putting the wall up in the first place was a judgment call.

"We chose the wall first because the state architect felt the safest option at that point in time would be the wall. In other words, the workers are going to have to put it up and take it down every day."

New rules affect '94 campout

Greetings from your Athletic Ticket Sales Committee. The campout is back this year and better than ever.

There will be some changes, however, this year that will make it more efficient. For those of you who have not heard, both benches have been switched to the student's side of Bramlage Coliseum.

The opponent's bench will be directly in front of the ICAT section, and K-State's bench will be directly in front of the non-ICAT General Admission section. This promises to be a great advantage at all games if you all decide to make it be one.

First, the purpose of the campout is to sell and distribute basketball tickets. There are two separate sets of campers. One set will be ICAT. ICAT will be camping out for reserved seats.

ERIC McPEAK

ICAT has the opportunity to buy their tickets first so they will have the first choice in all of the reserved student seats.

Non-ICAT will buy their tickets after ICAT. The first 500 non-ICAT ticket buyers will be given general admission tickets.

This will allow you to sit anywhere in the section directly behind the K-State bench. After these 500 seats are gone, the remaining non-ICAT campers can choose reserved seats behind all ICAT people who have already received their tickets.

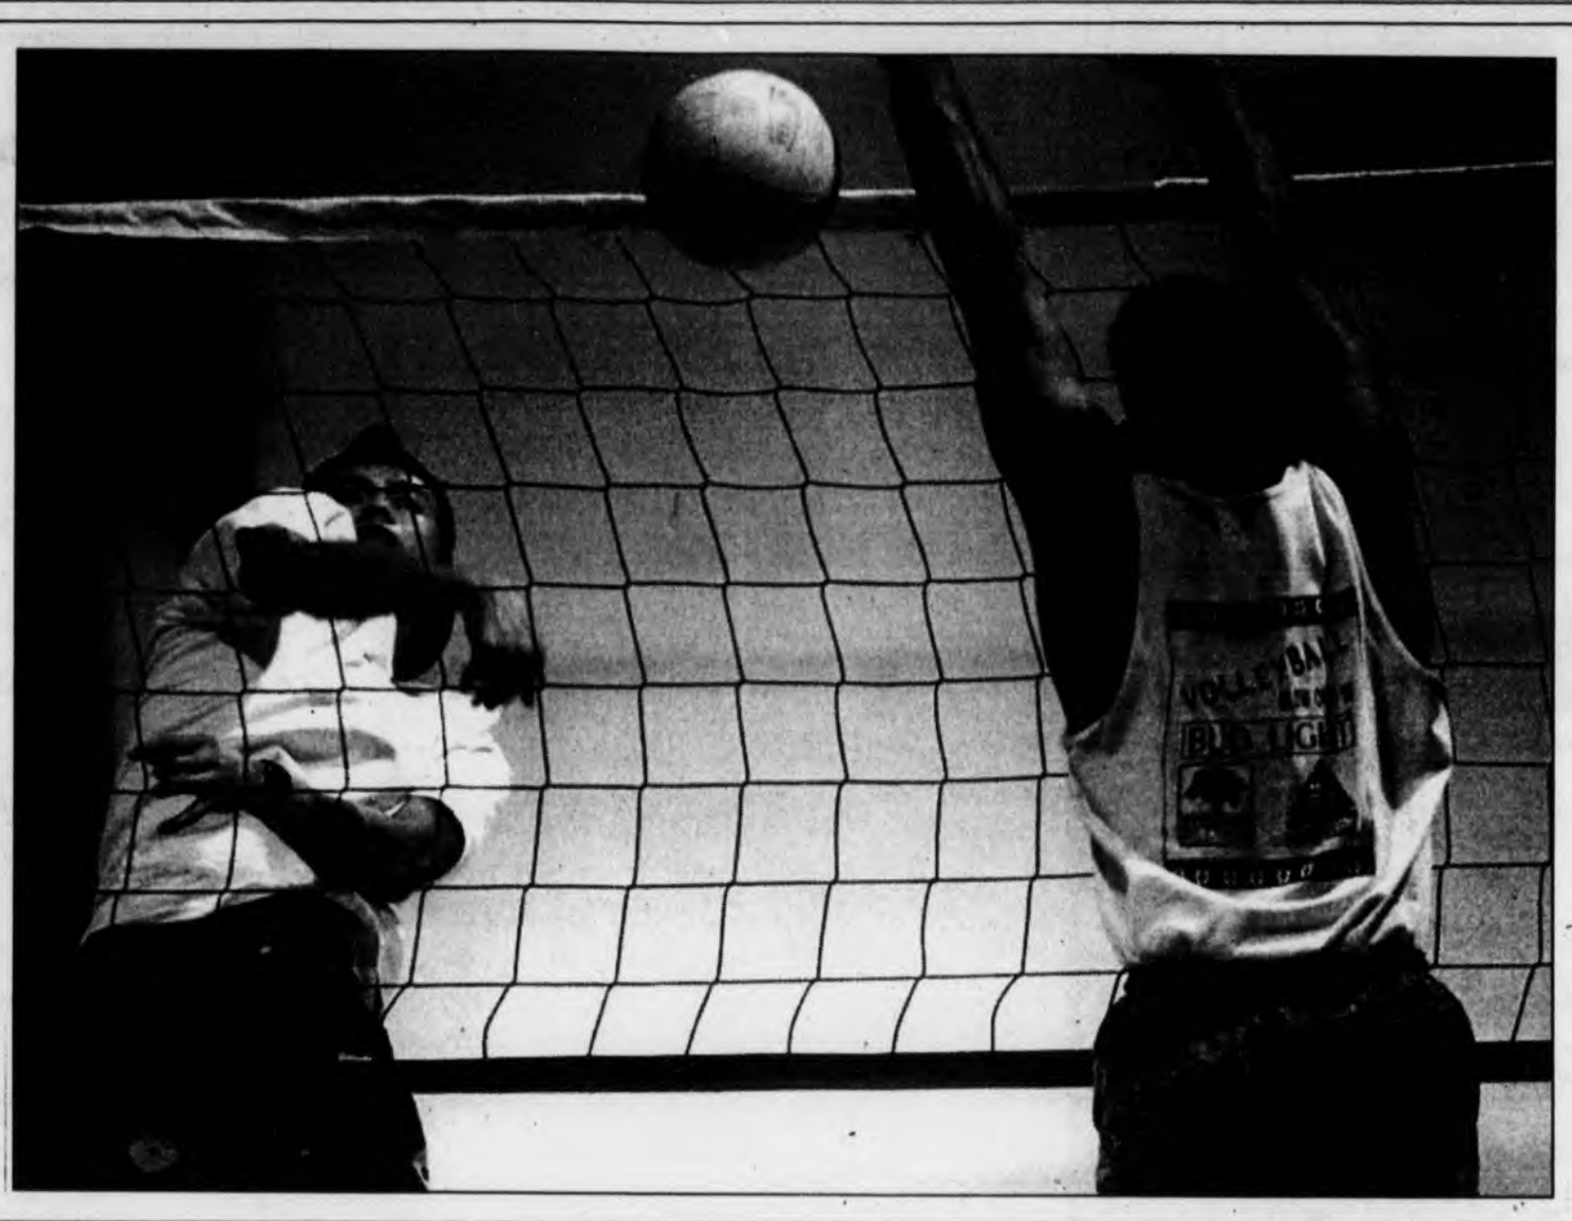
After everyone who has camped out for tickets has picked theirs out, it will be open to everyone who did not camp out at all.

Now when the flag goes up, there are several things that will be done. First, you will need to sign up for your place in line.

Next, you will have one hour to set up a tent and turn in your sheet of everyone that is going to be getting tickets in your group. This is a change from last year.

There will be sheets in the Office of Student Activities and Services. This must be done in an hour or could result in loss a place in line.

So you need to be talking to everyone now who is going to be getting tickets with your group because if their name is not on this sheet that needs to be turned in within an hour, then they will not get to buy tickets with your group.



Make sure you pick up those sheets as soon as you can.

Another rule that everyone must follow is that no alcohol is allowed. If anyone in your group is found with alcohol, your group will be placed at the end of the line with no questions asked. This rule will be enforced just like last year. Additionally, there will also be K-State police patrolling the area periodically.

The campout will be a lot of fun. Many activities are being planned that promise to be a good time.

If you have any questions about the campout, please drop me a note at the Office of Student Activities and Services. Also, be sure to come by and pick up a sheet to get everyone in your group signed up before the flag goes up.

See you all between now and November 1.

Volleyball team making good impression

JAMIE BUSH
Collegian

First impressions can be both well-accepted or disastrous.

For Sarah Happel, coach of the men's volleyball club, the impression she had after the 3-0 thumping of Wichita State on Wednesday at Ahearn Field House was a feeling of pure joy.

Playing after the women's match between the Shocker's and K-State, the men's team took up where the women left off and rolled off three-straight victories to win the match 15-4, 15-1 and 15-12 to put them at 1-0 for the season.

"I expected them to win, but I was pleasantly surprised of how well they worked together and played as a team," Happel said.

Happel, in her first year as the club's coach, also said she was pleased with the amount of fans that stayed to cheer on the men's team.

"A lot of people stayed after the women's game, at least 50, and I really think that helped us out," Happel said.

A former Wildcat player herself, Happel said that she had played a lot of volleyball with the guys on the team for fun.

Then last spring, they came up to her and asked if she would help coach a men's club team.

Happel said she agreed, and to at least one player, her decision to help out the team has been the focal point of the success this season.

"Sarah and Roseanne Davis help us a lot because they have a lot of knowledge of the game, and they help out in the decision-making process in deciding who is going to play and who isn't," Robert Segarra, team member, said.

"They don't get paid. They do it because they like it, and the success that we have had is because of them," he said.

Although the team is only in its third year, it has seen a drastic change since its debut in 1991 — a change for the better.

The team has since grown to 18 members and has organized practices at least twice a week, which Segarra said has helped bring the team closer together.

"The first year we had a team, it was comprised more of a group of individual players, and it wasn't really like a team," Segarra said.

"The second year we had a mediocre team because we lost quite a few key players, but this year, I think we are going to do well because we feel like a team," he said.

Even though the team will go into this Wednesday's match against Fort Hays State with an unblemished record, both Happel and Segarra said they feel as though the success they have had is only a forerunner of better things to come in the future for the club.

"I think the team played well, but I didn't think this match really showed what we are capable of doing as a team," Segarra said.

Although Happel said she is happy with the success so far, she said she prefers to take one match at a time.

"I think they did a great job, and I'm really excited about things to come," she said.

Frazier enters hospital

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LINCOLN, Neb. — Nebraska quarterback Tommie Frazier, sidelined with a blood clot, was hospitalized Tuesday after the clot formed again in his leg.

Osborne said to television station WOWT Tuesday night Frazier's playing status is doubtful for the rest of the season.

"I doubt if he will play any more this year," Osborne said.

"It's very weird," said George Sullivan, a Nebraska trainer for 42 years. "I've been here a couple of years, and I've never seen anything like this happen before. It's different because it doesn't appear to be a traumatic thing. For a healthy young man to have this type of thing develop really has us stumped."

Frazier spent four days in the hospital last month while a clot near his right knee was dissolved by enzymes and blood-thinners.

Osborne said Frazier will stay on blood for the next three to six months.

Snyder looking for road win

JULIE KUHLMAN
Collegian

Three wins, 14 losses.

This is K-State's record against Big Eight teams on the road since Coach Bill Snyder has been at K-State.

The three wins were over Oklahoma State in 1991 and '93 and one over Iowa State in '91.

So will Kansas be Snyder's most impressive traveling Big Eight win if the Cats pull it off Thursday night?

"Yeah, that's probably the case," Snyder said at the Vanier Football Complex in the Big Eight room during a weekly press conference. "A win in Lawrence would be great."

Safety Clyde Johnson said past K-State outings in Lawrence are history.

"The reason K-State doesn't win in Lawrence is because K-State has never had as good of a team as ours is," Johnson said.

Snyder said since he's been here, the biggest stake in the game has been "it's the ballgame between the University of Kansas against Kansas State."

What was once considered the "toilet bowl" is being televised on ESPN.

"Playing in front of 30 million people is always a motivator," quarterback Chad May said.

Nationally televised games help or hurt recruiting depending on their play, Snyder said.

"I guess you really go in and lay an egg," he said. "But, people know you've done something to get there."

K-State has also been preparing audibles in case of a noise problem with the home crowd.

"Most of the time you're playing against a hostile crowd," Snyder said.

Kuregian eliminated after 2nd-round loss

NICOLE POELL
Collegian

The outcome wasn't what she's accustomed to.

K-State tennis player Karina Kuregian was eliminated in her second-round match while competing in last week's Skytel National Clay Court Championship in Jackson, Miss.

Kuregian, an all-American ranked 16th in the nation, lost a two-set match Friday to 12th-ranked Jana Strnadova of Syracuse, 7-6 (7-3), 6-4.

"It was a very frustrating match for Karina," K-State tennis coach Steve Bietau said.

"At times, she played well and would take control and be in the match, but at other times, she was very inconsistent."

The loss eliminated Kuregian from tournament play, leaving her singles record at 1-1 on the season as she attempts a comeback from back surgery this summer.

Kuregian and doubles partner Dinah Watson were also eliminated in the second round of tournament play earlier in the week.

While Coach Bietau said he was glad Kuregian's back didn't hamper her performance at the tournament, he said she is capable of doing more.

"This was a good tournament for Karina because she got to play a lot of tennis," he said.

"I was happy that her back held up well, but at the same time, I was disappointed because she can play at a much higher level than she has."

▶ VOLLEYBALL

Wildcats return to take on Jayhawks

CRESTON KUENZI
Collegian

The football team is not the only one to face its ultimate rival this week.

The K-State women's volleyball team takes on the Kansas Jayhawks at 7:30 p.m. Wednesday in Ahearn Field House.

The starting time for the match is 30 minutes earlier than what appears on the schedule because of confusion during the coaching staff change last summer.

Coach Jim Moore said he thinks if they play to their capabilities, they can beat the Jayhawks.

"They lost in three to Wichita State pretty easily, and we beat them," Moore said. "They also lost to Virginia Tech, and we beat Virginia Tech pretty easily.

"We're not taking anybody lightly, for sure, and it's a team that we have to play well against in order to win."

The Hawks have struggled so far this year with a 4-12 record. However, they recently defeated Oklahoma, a team that finished third in the Big Eight Conference last year.

The Hawks have three starters and seven letter winners returning from a team that went 17-15 last year.

The Wildcats are looking to stop a losing slide that started this past weekend in Boulder, Colo.

The Cats were defeated by a then 18th-ranked Colorado team in three sets, 6-15, 9-15 and 6-15.

"In the first two games, we were close until they pulled away at the end," Moore said. "In the third game, they got off to a big lead, and we were able to come back and not roll over and die, basically.

"Overall, I thought we played very well against Colorado, because we had heard that was the best they had played all year."

However, Moore said he was not happy with just sticking with the Buffaloes.

"I don't care if we play UCLA or Stanford, I'm never going to be pleased when we lose, but we did some good things that we had not been able to do before," Moore said.

Moore said in order to beat a high-caliber team in the future they will have to exhibit more consistency.

"We just weren't able to sustain a high level of play for a long period of time," he said. "In order to compete with those kinds of teams, we need to be able to do that."

Yolanda Young led the team in kills in the match with 11, and Devon Ryning had 29 assists. The Buffaloes had three players with double-figure kills.

On Saturday, the Cats lost a disappointing match to North Carolina in five games, 9-15, 6-15, 15-10, 15-12 and 11-15.

"We were just awful," Moore said. "We couldn't get the ball on the court.

"We needed to play a lot better to win."

DO CREDIT RATINGS COUNT?

Letting a bill go delinquent will work against you

A bad credit rating in college can keep you from getting a job 10 or 15 years later.

Most employers check a prospective employee's credit rating before hiring because they feel a person should be responsible enough to handle their own finances if they are going to be working for them, Dale Thierolf, president of the Credit Bureau of Manhattan, said.

For example, Thierolf said he knew of an instance in which a person was passed up for a promotion for a $75,000 job because of an $18 bill he refused to pay when he was a graduate student at K-State 10 years ago.

When it is not possible to pay a bill, Thierolf said the most important thing to do is approach the creditor, whether it's a landlord or the telephone company, and discuss the problem.

"It's important to not wait until they contact you. If you realize a bill is due next Tuesday, and you can't pay it, call the creditor that day. Don't let the bill go delinquent," he said.

Thierolf said avoiding creditors will cause them to get mad. Then, they will not be willing to listen to any excuses or help find a solution to the problem.

When approaching the creditor, Thierolf said to have a realistic, well thought-out plan. This might include negotiating to pay one-third of the bill for three months.

Thierolf said most Midwest creditors are willing to work with individuals.

The most important thing people should do if they are in debt is to stop borrowing, said Loretta Whitney, president of the K-State Federal Credit Union.

"You can't borrow your way out of debt," she said.

"Some people with serious financial difficulties borrow on their credit cards. You get to the point where you think, 'If I can get through this month, I'll be OK the next.' We say to stop," Whitney said.

At this point, Whitney said, it might be necessary to re-structure the debt to refinance it and lower the payment. To stay out of debt, she said to be an educated consumer.

"An individual should decide to set up a budget and use good budgeting skills, then determine what their goals are to borrow money for," she said.

" If they've determined their goals and objectives, they can begin saving for those projects and begin earning interest instead of losing money."

Whitney said it is possible to borrow against savings acquired, yet still have the money from savings. When looking for a credit card, Whitney said individuals should closely look at things such as the interest rate and grace period.

"You should shop for a credit card like you shop for a new CD player," Whitney said. "It's a matter of becoming aware of the contract you're agreeing to."

Instead of calling the bank to find a checking balance, Whitney said to balance your checkbook because often checks have not cleared the bank yet, and the balance can be misleading.

In his opinion, Thierolf said writing a bad check is equivalent to using counterfeit money.

"It's illegal to write a check without money in your account, even if you think you'll be depositing a check the next day," Thierolf said.

"I feel sometimes people, particularly younger people, don't know how serious bad check writing is — to some degree, they almost feel it is a game."

Thierolf said it is easy to write a check $20 more than the amount purchased to get extra cash when insufficient funds aren't in your checking account and think you can worry about it later.

"You might be able to get by with it, but one day, the house will come falling down and the problems will become provable," he said.

When writing a bad check, Thierolf said people should think about how they would feel if their paycheck did not clear.

"When you write a check, you are obligated to make sure the money is there," he said.

Thierolf said people taking money from an automatic-teller machine using a credit card should be responsible.

"The day of reckoning comes," Thierolf said. "It's no different than anything else. You can't just take money out and party in Aggieville for three days. It takes planning."

SAVING TIPS

- An 8-ounce glass of water can be refilled thousands of times for the same cost as several cans of soda.
- Think before you drive. Save on gasoline by writing down errands in a logical order so you don't backtrack or drive out of your way.
- Don't buy new clothes until you've paid for the ones already in your closet.
- Wait until you have the money before you buy something.
- Don't be misled by the grace periods on credit cards. Grace periods only apply if you paid your previous month's bill in full.

Poll says one cause of divorce is money problems

Overuse of your Visa could be doing more than just raising the balance on your monthly statement.

It could be affecting your home life as well.

A recent Gallop Poll noted that 56 percent of divorcees surveyed gave financial difficulties as a reason for their divorce.

Whether financial problems cause a large number of divorces is like the question of which came first: the chicken or the egg? Dale Thierolf, president of the Credit Bureau of Manhattan, said.

"It's kind of related to the advice a minister gave me 44 years ago," Thierolf said.

"He said there are three things you don't talk about in a marriage — religion, politics and in-laws."

"The thing you do discuss from the beginning is spending, income and so on. This must be done by both parties."

When couples have communication problems, allocating income can be difficult, Loretta Whitney, president of the K-State Federal Credit Union, said.

"Managing debt is one major factor in reducing frustrations and differences that marriages sometimes have," Whitney said.

Fred Newton, director of University Counseling Services, is not sure if 56 percent is a correct number, but he said other subtle factors could be the cause.

"The underlying issue could be more general or abstract," Newton said.

"But couples fight over something they can focus on."

For example, Newton said, one member of a couple could feel put down, threatened or as though he or she were not valued. Instead of fighting over getting their feelings hurt, it's easier to fight over something such as financial problems.

▶ CITY COMMISSION

Relocation passes 5-0

LEIGH BELLINGER
Collegian

The City Commission voted Tuesday night to move the intersection of Shuss and Seth Childs roads 400 feet south of its current location.

The move would take place when Seth Childs Road is widened to four lanes next fall.

In agreeing to the relocation during Tuesday's meeting at City Hall, it allowed Manhattan to enter into agreements between the land's property owner, Jim Johns, and the Kansas Department of Transportation.

Moving the intersection farther south means the Johns' property can become more commercially viable, while the Southwind office park would lose direct access to Seth Childs Road. During the past two commission meetings, this issue had sparked sometimes heated debates between the two parties.

In an attempt to finally reach a decision, Mayor Helen Cooper said before the vote, they would not conduct a public hearing on the issue during Tuesday's meeting.

"I'm not trying to cut off discussions, but I think this evening we'd like to move on from where we left off," Cooper said.

She said she wanted the commission to make a decision that would be fair to everyone involved, even though not everyone might agree with every point.

On hand to discuss the $13-million widening project of Seth Childs Road was Corky Armstrong, senior squad leader in the bureau of design at KDOT. He said moving the intersection farther south could only help traffic once the road is widened and the speed limit increased.

"The spacing of the traffic signals are vital," Armstrong said. "That 400 feet is quite important for us to maintain good traffic flow."

When it was time to vote, Commissioner Roger Maughmer said he agreed with the other commissioners who voiced their concern over what effect the move might or might not have on the two parties. He said Southwind might be better off by moving the intersection, even though owners have said during the last two commission meetings the move would hurt Southwind.

"There's every possibility in the world that Southwind office development is better off when it's next door to whatever is developed in the Johns' tract than it is today when it's behind a hedgerow and next to a milo field," Maughmer said.

The commission approved the relocation 5-0.

Afterward, Joe Knopp, the attorney for the Johns, said the decision is one that would eventually benefit the entire community.

Now an agreement will be worked out between Johns and the city concerning the right-of-way needed for construction and covering the costs involved.

Espy's standards under question

Espy will not be difficult to replace in the administration.

"His leaving will not create a vacuum. The next person who steps in his place will be just as well qualified," Pulaski said.

Pulaski said Espy should have resigned because he openly went against the law.

"I hate to see any high person in the government have to resign because of laxity in their personal and business affairs, but Espy should have known better. Any person who knew the rules and regulations and violated them should resign," Pulaski said.

Pulaski said the government shouldn't make any exceptions, and Espy should have respected the standards of agriculture.

"He put himself above the law," Pulaski said.

Pulaski said the farm bill will not be affected the resignation.

"His departure will not phase the farm bill. It is made up of hundreds of people who contribute, including land-grant institutions who all put in a lot of input," he said.

Pulaski said he supports the Kansas Farm Bureau's decision to back U.S. Rep. Dan Glickman, D-Kan., as the next secretary of agriculture.

"He would be a good one because he knows agriculture. There are a lot of people in agriculture who could serve in that capacity with honor."

Fatal obsession

If you or someone you know, male or female...

- is preoccupied with weight or body size
- eats large amounts of food followed by self-induced vomiting
- uses laxatives or diuretics to control weight
- prefers to eat alone or eats secretly
- exercises compulsively
- denies he or she has a problem
- expresses feelings of being fat although they may even be underweight
- avoids meals (though they may prepare them)

...it may signal an eating disorder.

Most persons cannot stop their self-destructive behavior without professional help. Left untreated, the disorders can result in severe health damage, even death. Fly strips help, but renters still plagued by pests

Dear Cassandra,

I really enjoy reading your column because it offers me some good advice sometimes or gives me a good laugh.

My apartment complex has this problem with bees and flies. You can't even sit out on our decks, because they both come attacking like Japanese kamikaze planes.

My roommates and I have put up fly strips, and that has reduced the number of flies around us, although they're still around the complex. The girls upstairs say the flies come around because of the girls that live across from me.

Cassie, help me and my apartment complex rid us of this buggy-sweet situation. And keep up the good work!

Signed,
C.J.

Dear C.J.,

You've got the right idea with the fly paper and if it's working for you, maybe your neighbors will get the hint, and you can battle your annoying pests together.

Trash might be the source of your problem. Is there a dumpster near by?

If nothing pans out, and you still have a problem, especially with bees, let your landlords know. Maybe the entire complex needs to be sprayed.

Green Day kids pay punk homage to Pistols' classics

ANDREW TOMB

Enough about these Green Day kids, already.

It's not that they are not a decent-sounding group, but I have to think that they are trying to emulate the Sex Pistols.

And Green Day, you are no Sex Pistols.

Now for all you folks who never heard of the Sex Pistols, I feel the obligation to bestow a little history.

It's the late 1970s, and most of the hip and cool people are listening to the Bee Gees and saving up for a white suit.

Four leather-clad, angry Englishmen picked up guitars and started playing punk rock.

Defining punk rock is a lot like trying to figure out who won the San Francisco earthquake.

Best way I ever heard it described was "angry music, played by angry people."

It doesn't take much talent, just a lot of energy and a message, usually of frustration with the current political order.

It really wasn't anything new, as throughout history song has been used to give the middle finger to the establishment.

Paul and Silas, famous apostles, once sang hymns to God while they were in prison. Then the walls began to shake, and they were set free.

Punk rock liberated the rejects of the disco generation and made a lot of our current rock music possible.

I first heard the Sex Pistols when I was in the seventh grade, and I thought it was easily the coolest thing I'd ever heard. I stumbled upon an old vinyl copy of "Never Mind the Bollocks, it's the Sex Pistols" in a friend's brother's record collection.

There was the energy, realism and morbid quality of classic punk songs like "Anarchy in the UK," "Bodies" and "God Save the Queen."

I have to admit at that age, the only reason we put that old album on the turntable was because it had the word sex in it, but when we heard the angst-ridden reality of Sid Vicious, Johnny Rotten and the rest of the Pistols, it was kind of a turning point in my taste in music.

It at least started to really bug my parents.

I first heard Green Day on MTV last summer. I immediately picked up on what the band was trying to do.

It was almost a homage to the Sex Pistols.

Green Day has similar energy, attitude and aura to the Sex Pistols, but a softer political edge.

The band is not the most talented outfit, but appears to be having a good time.

My only hope is that the kids buying the Green Day compact disc will look back to the Sex Pistols, the band that made Green Day's success possible.

4 suspects in lot theft

CORI CORNELISON
Collegian

Four juveniles from Abilene are suspected in connection with the theft of stereo equipment stolen from five vehicles in Lot B-3.

Richard Herrman, investigator for the K-State Police, said the exact time the theft occurred can not be pinned down, but it was sometime between at 10:15 p.m. Monday, Sept. 26 to 7 a.m. Tuesday, Sept. 27.

The Dickinson County Sheriff Department recovered seven stolen items from the juveniles last week. There is still some stolen stereo equipment unaccounted for, Herrman said. The equipment was returned to the owners.

"We have recovered seven items, which belong to three victims," Herrman said. "We are further investigating and working with Dickinson County Sheriff Department to recover the other stolen property."

Campus police discovered the five vehicles broken into Sept. 27. The five owners of the vehicles reported a net loss of $4,955 for the stereo equipment and $1,050 in damages to the vehicles.

Police: theft down in B-3

CORI CORNELISON
Collegian

Surveillance cameras, additional lighting and emergency telephones have improved conditions in parking Lot B-3.

"I've been here since B-3 came into existence," Richard Herrman, investigator for K-State Police, said.

"When B-3 was first built, it was a gravel lot and poorly lit, so at first there was a lot of burglary and theft."

Controversy arose when students complained about vehicles in Lot B-3 that were throwing rocks and dust into the air and damaging other vehicles, Herrman said.

Lot B-3 was paved about six years ago, Dwain Archer, director of parking services, said.

"It was a very dusty campus, and I think people forget it was," Archer said.

Along with the paved blacktop in Lot B-3, campus police stepped up security by installing surveillance cameras, additional lighting and emergency telephones, Herrman said.

"The cameras, lighting and extra patrol is easier than it used to be."

The crime rate to vehicles parked in Lot B-3 has been lower since the paving and the additional security measures were added, Herrman said.

There is no way of telling exactly how much the crime rate has gone down, because there is not a separate record for Lot B-3, Herrman said.

The burglary was unusual because it is easy to catch the perpetrators with the cameras, Herrman said.

Surveillance cameras aided the campus police in finding the four juveniles who are suspected in connection with the five burglaries in Lot B-3 last week, Herrman said.

"There hasn't been any more theft in the last couple of years in Lot B-3 than anywhere else on campus."

Herrman said there is not any extra duty assigned to officers to patrol Lot B-3.

"The officers are aware, and I'm sure they have taken it upon themselves to try and cover areas we have had problems with," he said.

Cast: play ambiguous

into Gould's life showcasing her tempting body, but offering her mind, instead. Karen wants Gould to make the nuclear piece.

Charlie, realizing the potential box-office disaster in the nuclear piece, rages against Bobby in a terrifying, yet hilarious tirade.

"I don't think this play has a message," Shelton said."It's a very ambiguous play."

Travis Malone, graduate student in theater, plays the indecisive, sleaze-ball producer, Bobby Gould.

"I think this character could be a real person," Malone said. "The real challenge in playing this character is finding the substance behind the stereotype."

Malone said Gould and Fox claim to be the whores of the business — the classic go-boys of Hollywood — but, they have fears and dreams like everyone else.

Gretchen Morgan, senior in theater, who plays Karen, said playing Karen is difficult because she is very ambiguous.

"Mamet doesn't give women much to work with," she said. "Nobody knows exactly why she does what she does, so I have to find that out. That has been challenging."

Morgan said she likes working with the small cast. Morgan studied the past year in an exchange program in Italy. After playing in "Hamlet" two years ago at K-State, she returns for "Speed-the-Plow."

Tim Aumiller, graduate student in theater, plays Charlie Fox, Gould's underling.

"I've never played someone I see as a very real person that I see as such an asshole," Aumiller said.

The play contains rough language.

CATEGORIES

To help you find what you are looking for, the classified ads have been arranged by category and sub-category. All categories are marked by one of the large images, and sub-categories are preceded by a number designation.

TIPS FOR WRITING A CLASSIFIED AD

Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.

Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.

Consider including the price. This tells buyers if they are looking at something in their price range.

WE DO NOT USE PHONE NUMBERS OR LAST NAMES IN PERSONALS.

Americans explore African ties enough about each other.

"African Americans adopt a holistic view of Africa. We don't know very much about the many different cultures in Africa. You hear people say things like, 'Do you speak African?'

"On the other hand, Africans know very little about slavery. I think that's a problem, too," she said.

African Americans are at a crucial period, Hammond said.

"We are at a point where African Americans are finally getting into fields that concern Africans, but were formerly dominated by Europeans. We are getting to see a different point of view," she said.

Hammond said African American children need to be taught about their African culture in schools.

"Because of what most African Americans are taught, they don't want to identify with Africa. We need to make our schools culturally safe for our children," she said.

Hammond also spoke about Afrocentrism among African Americans and said it is more than just wearing clothes and jewelry that looks African.

"To be honest, I think adopting Afrocentrism is a gradual process. It's something that you have to internalize. It's not just wearing the symbols," she said.

Jawwad Abdulhaqq, president of BSU, said Hammond brought many important issues up for discussion during the meeting.

"The area of African and African American relations is one that needs to be discussed. It brought out a lot of questions," Abdulhaqq said.

Farrell Webb, an assistant professor of human development and family studies, said the discussion should not have focused on what Africans and African Americans don't know about each other, but rather on the similarities.

"I'm becoming very disturbed and angry by what I'm hearing here. There are very many more similarities between Africans and African Americans than differences. I think we should discuss those," Webb said.

Rules could reduce money given to groups lobby — came up at out retreat," he said. "There was also a question of power and responsibility. This takes care of that by getting it defined in the constitution and bylaws."

Another item of business concerned informal guidelines for allocations made by the Senate.

Ben Clouse, the newly approved Student Governing Association treasurer and senior in accounting, said Senate's approval of the allocation guidelines would reduce the requests for monies from various groups and organizations.

"We received requests from 28 groups this year," Clouse said. "The total amount of money they requested is far greater than the money we have to allocate. The informal guidelines give us a way to reduce this."

Allocations to the Taiwanese Student Association and to the Ag Competition Team were passed.

Trent LeDoux, College of Agriculture senator and junior in animal sciences, said he supported giving money to the ag team.

"They compete nationally on behalf of K-State, and they're one of the best in the nation," LeDoux said. "That's a group that we need to be spending money on."

Depression... is more than just the blues

Everyone gets the blues at some time in their life, but when the blues make you feel like you're in a black hole, you may be experiencing major depression. One in every four of us will have depression that warrants treatment. However, only a third of us who could benefit from professional help seek it.

As part of National Mental Illness Awareness Week, The Menninger Clinic will present a free public Depression Education Forum that features:
- A presentation on depression by the Menninger professional staff
- A videotape about depression entitled Faces of Depression
- A question & answer period with Menninger mental health professionals
- A voluntary, self-administered questionnaire, and
- An opportunity, if you choose, to meet privately with a Menninger mental health professional. (This five-minute screening is designed to be informational and will provide free professional guidance, but it is not a substitute for an evaluation.)

Depression is more than just the blues, and at Menninger we've been helping people with depression for 69 years. We invite you to learn more about this widely misunderstood and very treatable illness. This is an opportunity for you to help yourself or someone you know. No reservations are required.

SERIES ODDS AND ENDS

- In the past four seasons, the home team has won.
- Kansas leads the overall series 61-25-5.
- The biggest K-State win was a 46-0 victory in 1955, and the biggest Kansas win was a 55-0 victory in 1946.
- K-State enters the game ranked No. 19 by the Associated Press, and the Jayhawks aren't ranked in the top 25.

Rivalry improved with winning programs

JEREMY CRABTREE

It's the war that divides families.

No, this isn't the 1860s, and this isn't the Civil War.

It's the Sunflower Showdown, and this season's game could be the biggest game in the 92-year-old series.

Just six years ago, the two teams combined for a 1-21 record, and the Jayhawk's victory came against the Wildcats. That game was called the Toilet Bowl by many members of the national media.

The two programs were the laughing stock of the country, and Sports Illustrated went even further and said football at K-State was dead.

Kansas coach Glen Mason said it hurt him when people laughed at the game.

"I reflect back to the days when everyone made fun of this game," Mason said. "It made me mad because they were making fun of people who were trying to build something."

From that point on, things started to change as both K-State and Kansas decided to make a commitment to bring winning football programs to the schools.

President Jon Wefald went out and hired an unknown offensive coordinator from Iowa, Bill Snyder.

Snyder entered as the Cats' new coach, and K-State went 1-10 in its first season.

"I remember our first game against Arizona State," Snyder said. "We couldn't move the ball and missed a field goal, too. Then, Arizona State came back and beat us 31-0.

"It was a real letdown because there were such great expectations going in. Like we were going to turn around the program in one 60-minute ball game. We ran into reality all of a sudden."

However, the program did show signs of improvement. The next season, the Cats finished with five wins. The next season, K-State captured seven wins, followed by another five-win season.

Then came last season, when the Cats won nine games and won their first bowl game ever.

While turning the Wildcat program around, Snyder ended several streaks that haunted the team. The Cats ended a 16-game losing streak, a 30-game road losing streak, a 22-game Big Eight Conference road losing streak, a 27-game Big Eight winless streak and an 18-game non-conference losing streak.

Rustys LAST CHANCE SALOON

KU's lead rusher still breaking ground

ANDREW GILMAN
University Daily Kansas

He said as a freshman all he wanted to do was play.

With more than 1,100 rushing yards last season — including a 237-yard effort against Iowa State — and the Big Eight conference's offensive newcomer of the year award, June Henley did.

It was just a little more than he imagined.

"I didn't even think I would get any of this publicity," Henley said. "I just figured I'd go out and have some good seasons while I was here. Last year no one knew who I was."

Now everybody does.

Perhaps that can be attributed to his off-the-field activities as much as his accomplishments on the field.

Despite being one of the most decorated freshman ever to play at Kansas, his accomplishments have been overshadowed at times by legal troubles.

Last November, a week before the season was finished, he was arrested for shoplifting at a Lawrence business.

In May, he was cited for possession of a stolen parking permit.

The charges on the parking ticket were dropped, and after paying a $215 fine on petty larceny charges, Henley apologized to his parents and his team.

"I'm embarrassed about what I've done," he said.

"Facing my parents and family was one of the most difficult things that I've dealt with," Henley said.

■ Charles Henley Jr. prefers to be called June.

"It's short for Junior," he said. "My mom like it better than junior, and it stuck."

Now, he's known as June to his teammates, fans and the constant hordes of media following him around Lawrence.

He was the most popular player when the Big Eight Skywriters came to visit.

With them he talked about coming to Kansas.

"When I was younger I always wanted to play for Michigan," he said.

"But they didn't recruit me. Ohio State did, but they wanted me to play defensive back. But I wanted to run the ball. Now I'm here enjoying myself and playing football," Henley said.

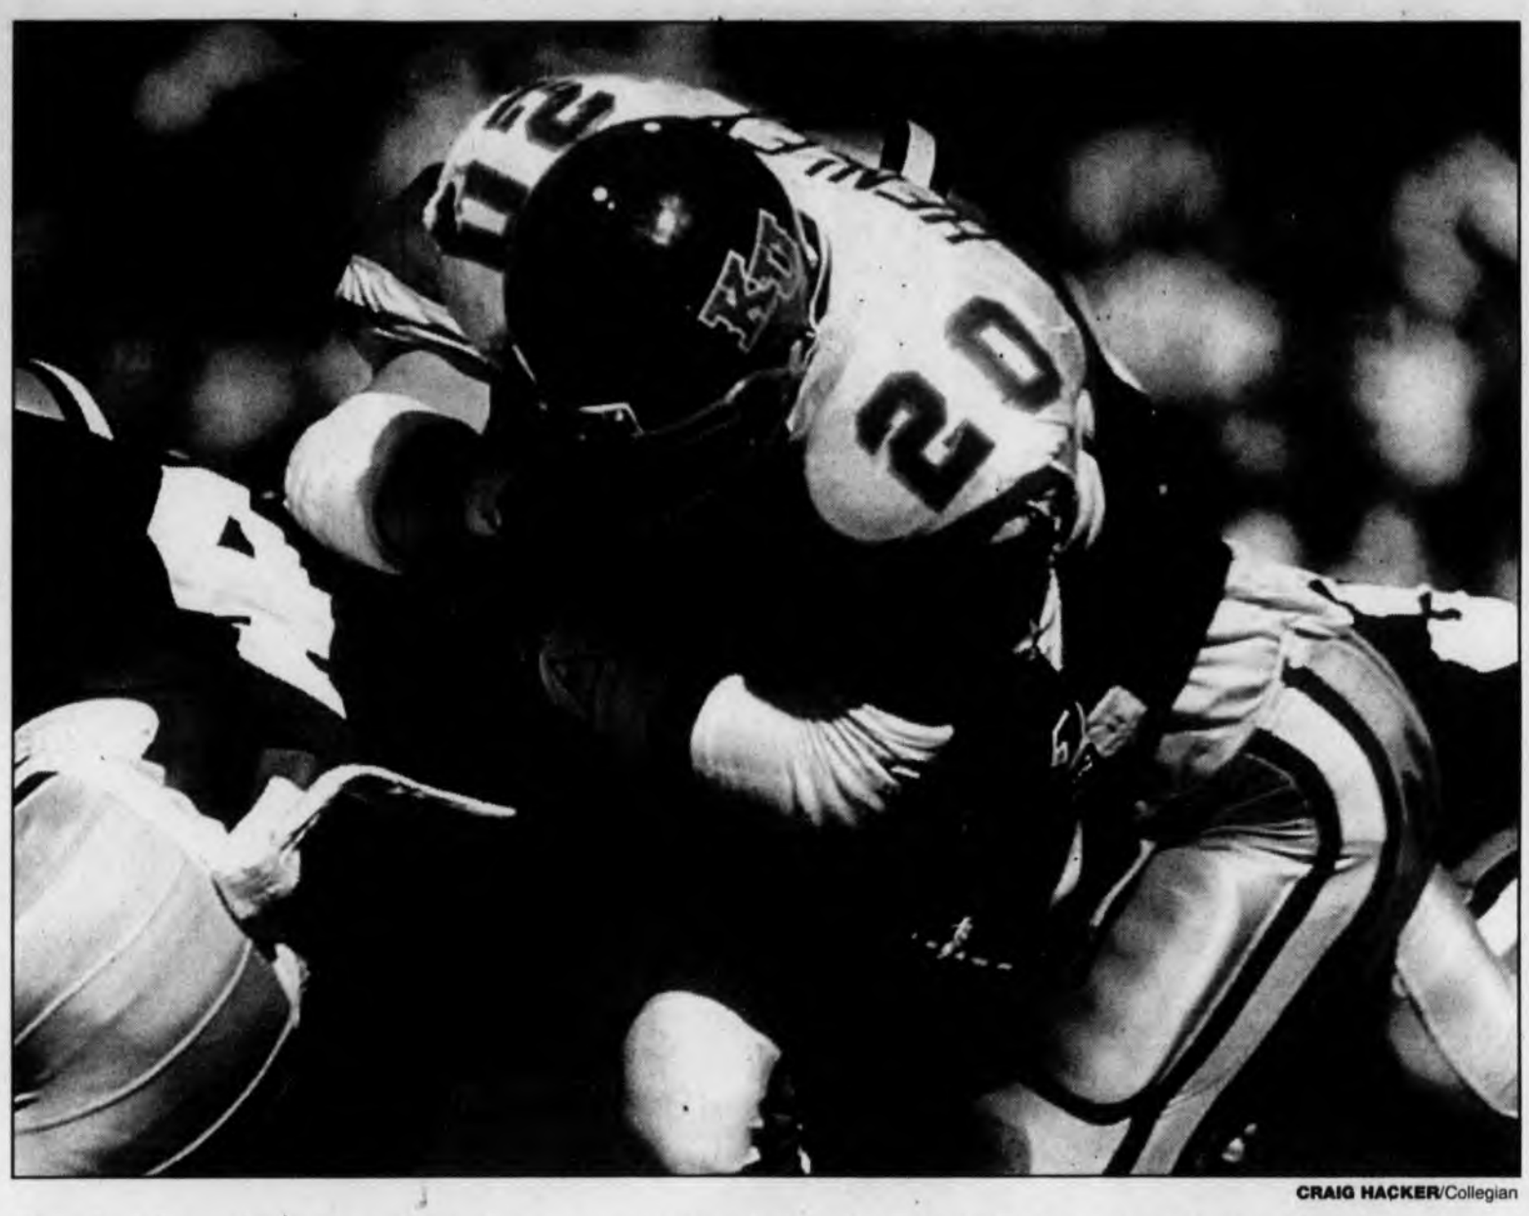
In high school, Henley broke Ohio's single-season rushing record, formerly held by two-time Heisman Trophy winner Archie Griffin, with 2,582 yards and 35 touchdowns.

ONE on ONE

But Henley was told to he couldn't play running back at the major college level.

"Back home, in the paper, it said if I wanted to play college football, I'd have to be a defensive back," he said.

Now he's running past those defensive backs, and Kansas coaches wouldn't have it any other way.



"He's instinctive," Jayhawk running back coach Vic Adamie said.

"He can either run through you or around you," he said.

And even after coming off a season where he did more than what was expected of him, Henley knows that this season will be tougher.

His first obstacle coming into the season was getting the same amount of playing time as last season.

Henley is just one of the many highly touted running backs who have gotten the opportunity to show off their moves at Memorial Stadium so far this season.

CRAIG HACKER/Collegian

Even though June Henley only rushed for 60 yards against K-State last season, he finished with 1,127 yards for the season.

"I just can't go out there and expect to be the No. 1 back," Henley said. "I have to prove myself. Any of us are capable of getting the job done."

Henley said his main concern was to be a better individual coming into the season.

"Now I want to strive to be a better person, get my work done and stay out of trouble," he said.

And part of being a better player is helping Kansas win football games.

"I want a division championship and a trip to the Orange Bowl," he said. "I need something to put on these fingers."

JUNE HENLEY'S CAREER RECORDS

- Henley broke the Big Eight rushing record with 1,127 yards on 233 carries.
- He was selected as the Big Eight's Newcomer-of-the Year last season.
- Against Iowa State he rushed for 237 yards, which is the fourth-highest mark by a Big Eight freshman.

1992: A game to forget

SHANE KEYSER/Collegian

The Jayhawks' pass rush gave the Cats little time to throw in the 1992 game. Twenty of K-State's 54 offensive plays went for negative yardage, and Kansas had nine sacks.

Linemen remember nightmare

BRIAN ANDERSON
Collegian

When K-State's offensive tackle Jim Hmielewski thinks about the 31-7 loss to the University of Kansas two years ago in Lawrence, he shakes his head.

Hmielewski remembers how the KU defensive line, featuring future NFL players Dana Stubblefield and Chris Maumalanga, dominated the K-State offensive line.

He said the game was a nightmare.

"It was terrible. We were unprepared for the game," he said.

"It was frustrating that we couldn't stop them. It was horrible."

Twenty of K-State's 54 offensive plays went for negative yardage, and the Jayhawk defense sacked quarterback Jason Smargiasso nine times, 3 1/2 of them by defensive end Kyle Moore.

Smargiasso had been sacked just nine times the entire season prior to the KU game. He was forced to make a decision within seconds, resulting in several plays for negative yardage and a pair of interceptions.

His statistics for the afternoon were 14 rushing attempts for a total of minus 77 yards.

The Jayhawks held Eric Gallon, the Big Eight's leader in rushing going into the contest, to 11 yards on nine carries.

Five of those nine carries went for negative yardage, and his 11-yard run in the third quarter kept him from finishing in the minus column.

He had been averaging better than 100 yards per game prior to the contest.

The Hawks contained the entire Cats running game, which had been gaining nearly 125 yards per contest, to a total of minus 56 yards on the ground, and they held the Cats to zero first downs through the entire first half.

The Wildcat offense was kept scoreless.

K-State was in KU territory just four times, twice after recovering fumbles in Jayhawk territory and twice in the final quarter after the game had been sealed.

KU stopped K-State to 69 yards of total offense, most of which came in the fourth quarter when the KU regulars were on the bench.

The total yardage was the fewest the Hawks have given up since 1961 when KU held the Cats to 35 yards.

The offense was struggling so bad, in fact, that Coach Bill Snyder told the defensive players at halftime that they may have to score to get K-State back in the game.

"Their front four gave us no opportunities whatsoever," Snyder said.

"We couldn't get it inside. We couldn't get it outside. And we certainly couldn't throw it."

Hmielewski said everyone learned a lesson from that game.

"It won't happen again," he said.

"The coaches prepare us for every game now because of what happened there."

The K-State offensive line was put to test and failed, and they said they knew it after the contest.

"We just couldn't get it done," former K-State offensive tackle Mike Orr said. "That's the first time I've ever been through a game like that.

"And hopefully the last."

Jayhawks' defense dominates

BRIAN ANDERSON

"It wasn't a good day for K-State."

That is what former linebacker Brooks Barta said after the K-State Wildcats were pounded by the Kansas Jayhawks 31-7 on Oct. 10, 1991, in Lawrence.

Kansas 31
K-State 7

The win for the Jayhawks moved them to 4-1, while the loss gave the Cats their first setback of the year after starting the season with a perfect 3-0 slate.

The win for Kansas was also the 11th-straight series victory in Lawrence, it was 1969 when the Cats last won at KU.

The Jayhawks were so dominant that afternoon in Memorial Stadium that —

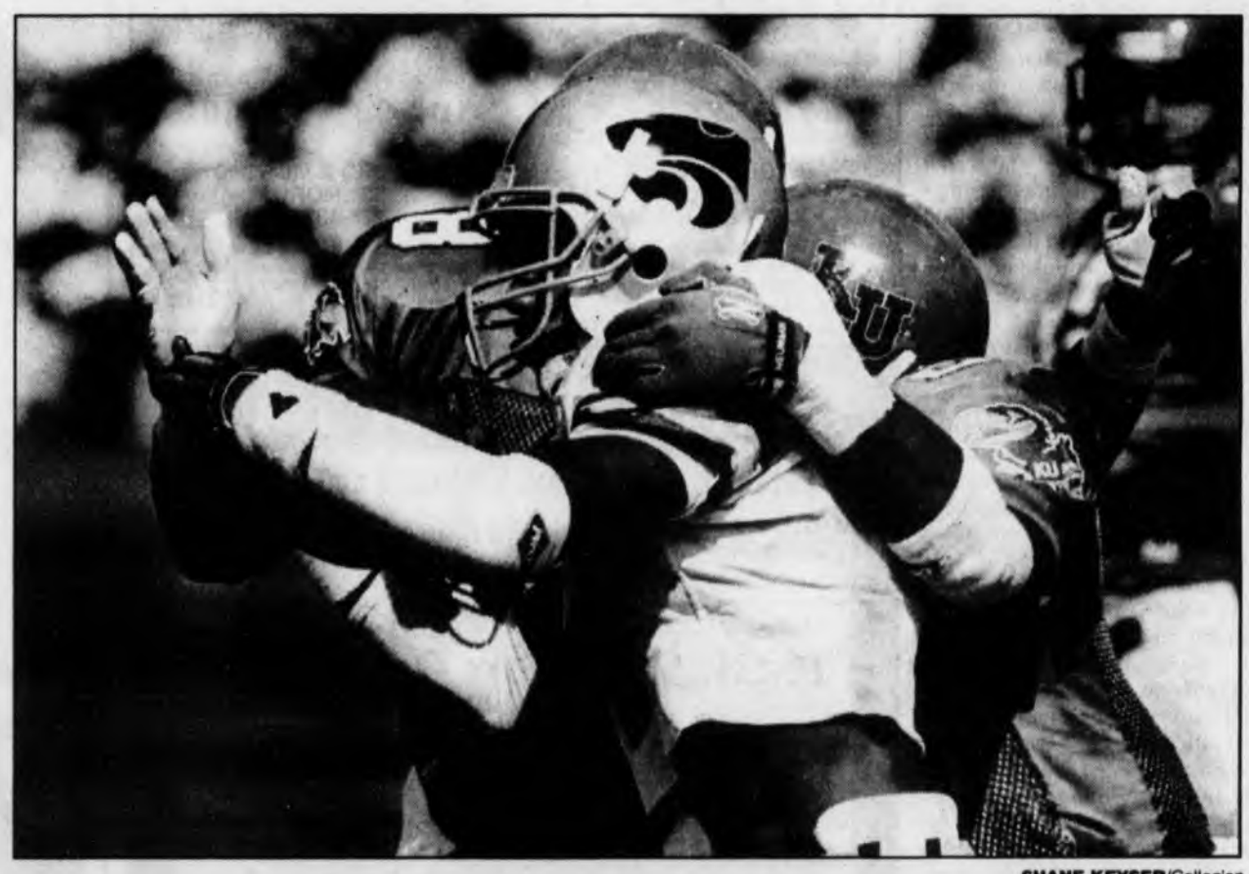
■ When Kansas scored its final point of the game at the 4:22 mark of the third quarter, the Hawks had 19 first downs and 345 yards of total offense. At that same point of the game, the Cats had only one first down and minus 43 yards of offense.

"I just did a poor job of getting our football team ready collectively, and that's where the fault lies."
BILL SNYDER
K-State football coach

Twenty of K-State's 54 plays were for negative yards — including nine quarterback sacks.

■ Running back Eric Gallon, who was the Big Eight rusher leader before the game, was held to 11 yards on nine carries.

K-State coach Bill Snyder said his team simply wasn't ready to play.



"I think Kansas proved to us what we have been saying for the past two or three weeks — we've haven't quite gotten it together yet," Snyder said. "I just did a poor job of getting our football team ready collectively, and that's where the fault lies."

The only K-State highlight came when cornerback C.J. Masters intercepted a Chip Hilleary pass and returned it 80-yards for the only Wildcat touchdown near the end of the first half.

The final statistics showed K-State had 69 yards of total offense — which was the sixth-lowest for an opponent in a game against a Jayhawk team.

Kansas pounded out 295 yards on the ground and 156 yards in the air as it held on to the ball for 37 minutes.

K-State went 2-3 afterwards to finish the year with a 5-6 record, and Kansas ended its season with a 8-4 record, including a victory over Brigham Young in the Aloha Bowl.

SHANE KEYSER/Collegian

Andre Coleman breaks loose for a reception. Coleman's reception was one of the few highlights for the Cats on that day, as K-State's only touchdown came when cornerback C.J. Masters returned an interception for 80 yards.

Cats squeak past Hawks with Wright's field goal

JULIE KUHLMAN
Collegian

Remember the victory over the other sunflower-state football team last year?

It wasn't a spanking, in fact, K-State scored all of its 10 points in the first quarter and spent the other three trying to keep the Kansas offense from catching up.

Kansas may have even won with another second on the clock.

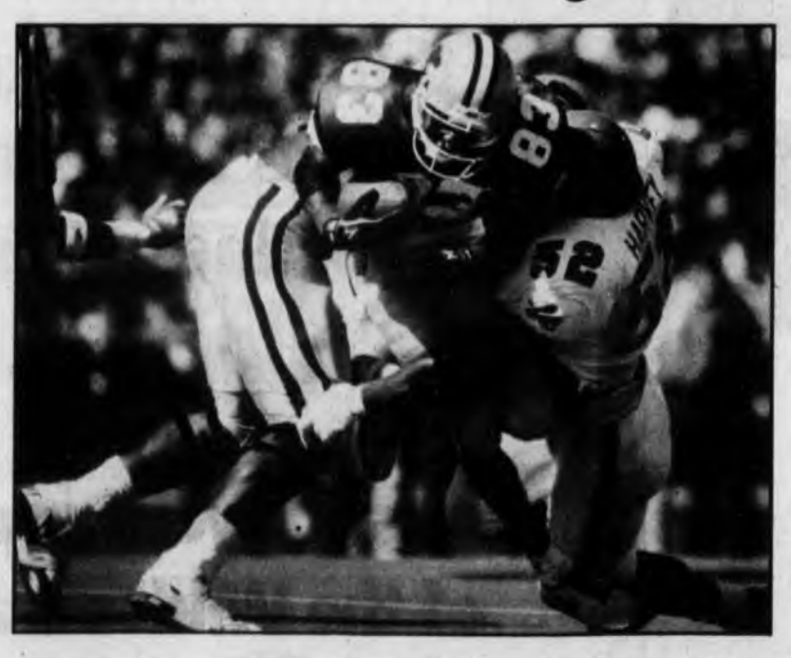
But when the last second ticked away, the score showed K-State 10, Kansas, 9.

And it was the one-point difference that mattered.

That one point gave K-State their 10th consecutive win at home and a No. 24 ranking in the USA TODAY CNN/Coaches poll.

Twenty-three years had gone by since the K-State football program reached such a plateau in the polls.

Respect was finally earned by the win, and "Bowl Bound" was beginning to confidently come from the lips of K-State fans.



"I thought it was a great football game," Kansas coach Glen Mason said. "Anytime you start talking rivalries, it comes down to a very tough, close-fought battle.

"You look back to one or two plays in one game, and that's the difference."

One of those key plays appeared to be former K-State kicker Tate Wright's career-long 50-yard field goal.

Wright almost didn't get the chance to kick the field goal because K-State coach Bill Snyder had to make a decision between Warren Claassen and Wright. Classen was the Cats long-range place-kicker.

Eventually, Snyder chose Wright and he lived up to the billing nailing the 50-yarder.

DARREN WHITLEY

K-State receiver Kevin Lockett dodges through KU defenders in last season's 10-9 victory.

"I was pretty scared," Wright said after the game. "I tried to hit it good and let the wind take care of it.

"I'm glad I made it," Wright said.

K-State's only other score came on a pass from Chad May to Andre Coleman for a touchdown.

Despite having 258 yards on the ground the Kansas offense failed to score a touchdown the entire game. The Jayhawks were held to just three Dan Eichloff field goals.

The Jayhawks then threatened for the entire fourth quarter, and that kept the game in question until the final play of the game.

That was when KU quarterback Asheiki Preston was forced out of the pocket, and he scrambled into field goal range. There was only one problem, when Preston was forced out of bounds, the time had expired.

Snyder said he felt old after the game.

"I feel like I'm 97 years old right now," Snyder said. "This was a mentally challenging game."

K-State also mustered a rushing attack as J.J. Smith rushed for 135 yards on 26 attempts. Kansas leading rusher was L.T. Levine, who finished with 115 yards on 24 carries.

K-State center Quentin Neujahr said the victory was important.

"This was a big victory," Neujahr said.

▶ TELEVISION

ESPN to televise Cats

CRESTON KUENZI
Collegian

When the Wildcats and Jayhawks collide tomorrow, it will be the first time in 12 years that the game is nationally televised.

This season's game will be televised by ESPN, and the pregame show is scheduled to start at 6:30 p.m. Kickoff is set for 7:01 p.m.

In 1982, the Wildcats pummeled the Jayhawks, 36-7, in Manhattan. The game was shown on TBS.

Kansas coach Glen Mason said he would expect many people to tune into the Thursday night game no matter who is playing.

"If you're a football fan, you're going to turn on the game regardless if it's a good one or a bad one," Mason said. "Let's face it, some of those Thursday night games aren't very good games, but a lot of people still watch them."

Mason said the Thursday night game shouldn't affect the number of viewers.

"I think it would be interesting to turn the TV on," Mason said. "It's a big rivalry. One team's having a decent season so far, and one team's having a great season so far.

The sunflower state rivalry has been broadcast nationally on two other occasions in history.

In the first of which, on Nov. 7, 1953, the Cats beat the Hawks, 7-0 on NBC.

Fifteen years later, on Nov. 16, 1968, the two teams faced each other in Manhattan on ABC. The Hawks won this one 38-9.

This year's game will be each team's third time on ESPN.

The Hawks are 0-2 when broadcast on ESPN, with the losses both occurring in 1992. On Sept. 24, California squeaked by the Hawks, 27-23, and on Nov. 7, Nebraska pounded the Hawks, 49-7.

The Cats are 2-0 on ESPN, including a 22-13 win over Iowa State in 1992, and the Copper Bowl victory over Wyoming last season, 52-7.

"I want to believe that the national perception of this game is that two pretty good football teams are going to play Thursday night," Snyder said. "I think there will be a strong audience for a number of reasons, and one of those is that there is a national respect for both teams."

▶ COLUMN

Name calling all part of the Sunflower Series

GERRY FEY
University Daily Kansan

The rivalry. Around these parts, the phrase can only refer to the Kansas vs. K-State game Thursday in Lawrence.

It seems this game is getting more and more exposure, as is the rivalry itself. ESPN is blowing this one up big, by giving the game its time to shine on national television. The nation used to name this Midwest battle, "The Toilet Bowl," never to be in the same sentence as Nebraska-Oklahoma, Auburn-Alabama or even Texas Christian-Texas Tech.

The Wildcat fanatics are just a bunch of good-ol' boys who watch reruns of the Dukes of Hazzard with a Pabst Blue Ribbon in one hand and a fistful of pork rinds in the other.

But perceptions are changing, and this game is no longer just a country-hillbilly thing. It's a nationally recognized war.

I am a Nebraska native, which has given me some exposure to big rivalries. Similarities surface when comparing the Sunflower State rivalry to Nebraska-Colorado, but in a way, this game is unique.

Here are three things to consider:

■ The Aggies vs. the Greeks — For some reason, Kansas students think everyone in Manhattan is a farmer, while K-State sees Kansas students as rich fraternity and sorority types that have BMWs and like to play golf. Obviously, both are untrue, but it's fun to believe the stereotypes.

The Wildcat fanatics are just a bunch of good-ol' boys who watch reruns of Dukes of Hazzard with a Pabst Blue Ribbon in one hand and a fistful of pork rinds in the other.

The Jayhawk faithful tailgate in their Oxford sweaters on plush chairs before the games as they read the Wall Street Journal.

This fight has been known to leave the field and onto the streets after the game. Many times a rumble has ensued in Manhattan's bar strip called Aggieville, usually after a Kansas victory. By the way, the Jayhawks lead the all-time football series 61-25-5, so this scene occurs a lot.

But if the term Agriculturalists is incorrect, why do the Wildcat fans call their favorite hangout Aggieville in the first place? We don't call Massachusetts Street Greekville. The label for the other Kansas school must be true.

■ In-State Boundary Lines — The battle doesn't wander past the Kansas border. Not many rivalries are self-contained within one state, which adds to the intensity.

It seems people in western Kansas have more of an affiliation with that other Kansas school than the one in Lawrence, just because the Agriculturalists help stop cow diseases and develop hybrids.

That's fine. Just stay in the pasture growing corn, and we'll just keep doing more important things, like winning basketball national championships and bowl games.

■ More than football — Thursday night's game is big, but there have been many big Kansas-K-State games in both football and basketball. The actual sport doesn't matter, just who the opponent is.

Many Kansas fans say if we don't defeat the Aggies, then the season isn't a success. Success by one Kansas school means an obligatory retaliation by the other.

Example: Kansas wins the basketball national championship in 1988 and posts a sign on the Kansas Turnpike. K-State retaliates with a highway sign proclaiming its debate championship in a sub-standard league. It's all relative.

How does this relate to the upcoming collision? Hold true to all of your beliefs about the enemy. They may be false, but we can still believe them, which makes this rivalry all the better. If you can't make up lies and propaganda about your opponent, there's no fun at all.

Besides, we're going to destroy K-State badly because it's at our place, and the Wildcats couldn't fight themselves out of a paper bag.

With offensive linemen like Hessley Hempstead at 300 pounds and John Jones at 295, the Kansas running attack will roll over K-State. June Henley might break the NCAA single-season game rushing against the Aggies. Wouldn't that be embarrassing, knowing Kansas did that against the 1992 Missouri team? It could happen, so you better watch.

As for quarterback Chad May and the vaunted K-State passing attack, la-ti-frickin'-da. Without wide receiver Andre Coleman, May won't have a chance. He'll be too busy sucking wind while running away from Kansas linebackers Don Davis and Robert Reed.

The prediction for this game is a no-brainer, which describes those hillbilly Aggies perfectly ... Kansas 38, K-State 30.

▶ GAME PREVIEW

KU prepares for K-State offense

Putting pressure on May key to stop passing game

WESS HUDELSON
Collegian

Coach Glen Mason has concerns about K-State's offense, his defense and injuries.

The Jayhawks will take the field against K-State for the 92nd time at 7 p.m. Thursday night at Memorial Stadium in Lawrence.

"Top to bottom, I think they're a better team than they were a year ago," Mason said at his press conference Monday.

"You don't get to be ranked in the top 20 if you're no good."

Mason fielded several questions about the status of quarterback Asheiki Preston and tailback June Henley, but he said their condition wasn't certain.

"I don't know," Mason said of Preston.

"I'll have to wait until Thursday to see how he feels."

Mason said Henley is in the same situation as Preston, and he will have to wait until game day to make a decision.

Neither Henley nor Preston played against Alabama-Birmingham Saturday.

Henley was sidelined with a bruised shoulder, and Preston was recovering from a cracked rib and partially collapsed lung he sustained against Texas-Christian Sept. 17.

However, Mason said he is comfortable with starting back-up quarterback Mark Williams again.

"He's a good athlete and he's tough. After last year, I'm not going to worry about injuries."
GLEN MASON
Kansasfootball coach

"He's a good athlete, and he's tough," Mason said. "After last year, I'm not going to worry about injuries."

If injuries weren't enough, Mason said the K-State offense is versatile, but he's not nervous about it.

"I'm nervous when I go to the dentist," Mason said.

"I'm excited about going to a party. I consider this a party."

Mason did express optimism about his defensive secondary. He said it should improve.

"We've had our troubles on pass defense," Mason said, "but they'll play better. I think they will rise to the occasion."

Defensive end Sylvester Wright said the key to stopping K-State's passing game was putting pressure on quarterback Chad May.

"K-State has a good offensive line, but we think we can put some pressure on up the middle," Wright said.

Offensive tackle Mark Allison said the K-State front seven he will be confronted with Thursday has more experience than the squad he faced last season.

"All but one of their starters up front are back," Allison said.

"We have a great deal of respect for them."

Mason said the Jayhawks' running game is important to his team's success.

"Our running game is pretty important to us," Mason said.

"As far as controlling the ball, that is always important in every game."

The rivalry of the annual battle adds to the emotion of the contest, Mason said.

However, Mason said revenge for the University of Kansas' 10-9 loss at Manhattan last season is not a factor.

"I don't think revenge is a factor," Mason said.

"We went there, and we lost. Every team we play is going to try to beat us.".

Allison said he took some abuse from people during his summer vacation in his hometown of Minneapolis, Kan.

"Last summer was a long summer," Allison said.

"In the back of your mind, you know you don't want to go through it again. That makes you push a little harder in the fourth quarter.

"Being from K-State country, it was a game I always paid a lot of attention to."

▶ GAME PRECEDE

Can the Cats rock the Hawks?

JEREMY CRABTREE
Collegian

It's been a long time since K-State has won in Lawrence.

How long, you ask? Well, the last time K-State went into Memorial Stadium and left with a win was back in 1969.

Even K-State coach Bill Snyder said the 11-unsuccessful trips to Lawrence has been a long time.

"I know it's been an awful long time since K-State won at Lawrence," he said.

That game between the Wildcats and Jayhawks turned out to be a showcase for the two teams offenses. However, the Cats went on to win 26-22.

That brings us to Thursday's 92nd meeting of the intrastate rivals, which should again feature two explosive offenses.

The K-State offense is led by quarterback Chad May, who threw for 157 yards in a 35-0 victory over Minnesota.

Last season, May threw for a Big Eight Conference-record 489 yards against Nebraska.

May is also the leader of the K-State offense, which averages 124 yards a game rushing and 194 yards a game through the air.

Kansas coach Glen Mason said the Cats are tough to stop on offense.

"We are going to have to play sound defensively," Mason said. "You can take one thing away from them, and they might do something else."

Adding to the K-State offensive attack is a group of wide receivers which some publications have rated the best in the Big Eight. Evidence of this can be seen by the Cats' 11.3 yards per reception.

The Cats' leading receiver is Tyson Schwieger, who has 18 receptions for a 13-yard per catch average. Kevin Lockett and Mitch Running are the Cats other top receiving threats, as they both average over 10 yards a reception.

In contrast to K-State's passing attack, Kansas features a smash-mouth, run right at you offense.

Kansas has a plethora of capable running backs, but their top rushing threat is June Henley.

Last season, Henley set several school and Big Eight records. However, his highest award was being named the Big Eight Conference offensive newcomer of the year.

Henley was injured earlier this season against Texas Christian, but Mason said his status is day to day.

"It will go right up to game time on Thursday, if he will play or not," Mason said.

The other runners in the Kansas backfield include L.T. Levine, who tore up the Cats last season for 115 yards, and Chris Powell.

Earlier this season, the Hawks lost their starting quarterback, Asheiki Preston due to a collapsed lung. Preston sat out the University of Alabama-Birmingham game, but he could return against the Cats.

"He's practiced, and he'll play if he's capable," Mason said.

Snyder said he expects Preston to play.

"We have to prepare as if Asheiki will be back," Snyder said.

In Preston's place, Mark Williams filled in and played well against UAB. Williams threw for 144 yards, and he rushed for an additional 20 yards to lead KU to a 72-0 victory.

Even though Snyder expects Preston to play, he said the Cats will be ready for Williams.

"Williams really had a fantastic game," Snyder said. "He can handle the offense."

With the game being televised on ESPN, there tends to be more tension surrounding the game. Even the coaches from both teams said the game is big.

"Experience surely helps," Mason said. "I think that the older players know all that matters is how you play on Thursday."

Snyder said these are the type of games that players love to play in.

"This is a game that will heavily motivate players," Snyder said. "The rivalry is healthy and very exciting."

Cats to feast on Hawks Thursday

Stop kidding yourselves, Yuppies.

WESS HUDELSON

The only reason there is any hype surrounding this game is because of the intrastate rivalry. If K-State lost to another team with Kansas's talent, it would be embarrassed.

The Yuppies are primed and ready to be beaten like a rented mule.

K-State has an advantage in nearly every phase of the game. I will take this opportunity to list all of KU's deficiencies.

(This list is especially intended for all of you flannel-wearing, Birkenstock-worshipping KU fans who plan on driving the Prelude that dad bought your to the game. Hey Biff, save yourself the gas and sell your ticket to a K-State fan — this is a game you won't want to see.)

■ The most glaring weakness is obviously at quarterback — with or without Asheiki Preston, the situation is hopeless.

Remember last season when the Jayhawks could have taken the lead when Dwayne Chandler was all alone in the end zone and Preston dumped a dying quail on the turf two feet in front of him. That was a perfect example of Preston's chicken-like arm strength.

Anything beyond a 15-yard out route will be out of range.

■ The Yuppies pass defense isn't much better. The Yuppies gave up 304 yards against Houston, 299 against Texas Christian and 304 yards against Alabama-Birmingham. Anyone heard of quarterbacks Chuck Clements or Max Knake?

They might have become Heisman Trophy candidates if they played the Yuppies every week.

Chad May's arm could be ruined if he has to throw the length of the field ten times.

■ The TCU game may conjure up bad memories of pass protection as well. Apparently, the "Guard Dogs" couldn't even guard Frogs.

■ Now lets all bow to the Yuppies' tailbacks. The preppies have to carry the ball 200 times a game because the offense isn't flexible enough to do anything else.

Glen Mason's playbook must look like something out of the 1930s. I recommend adopting the single-wing philosophy. Remember, it's the offense that was used when it was illegal to pass.

■ The Yuppies' "versatile and athletic" linebackers seem to be beaming about their shut-out of the Alabama-Birmingham Blazers from the Southland Junior High School Conference.

Allowing only 310 yards total offense is remotely impressive. However, a real shutout is 195 yards against a Big Ten school (K-State 38, Minnesota 0).

The Yuppies have set themselves up for a big disappointment after pasting UAB. It's unbelievable anyone can find anything positive about beating a team that way.

I guess something had to be done after the mighty TCU Horned Frogs gave them warts.

I hope the peace-loving, tie-dye wearing fans at the school down the river don't get too upset when the Cats come to Lawrence and turn this farce into a track meet.

K-State 24-0, this one's for you, UAB.

■ A year before Snyder was hired, Mason was hired. Mason came to Kansas from Kent State, where he compiled a 12-10 record in two seasons.

In 1988, the Jayhawks were in a similar situation as the Cats.

Before Mason's arrival, Kansas went 15 games with a Big Eight victory. It also won just four games in the past two seasons, and the team was down to just 50 scholarship players.

Mason's first season was also very similar to Snyder's as the Jayhawks finished with only one win, but the next year they went 4-7.

Then in 1990, Kansas dropped a notch, and it finished with a 3-7-1 record. However, five of those losses came to teams that played in New Year's Day bowl games.

Finally, KU broke into the win column with a 6-5 record in the 1991 season. It followed that with a 8-4 season and a Aloha Bowl victory against Brigham Young.

Last season, half of KU's returning starters were sidelined with injuries, and the team suffered through a 5-7 season.

Two of those losses were by a total of two points (against K-State and Nebraska), and it was the first time in three years the Jayhawks didn't finish with a winning record.

■ That brings us to this season's match-up in Lawrence. For the time ever, the Cats will bring a top 20 ranking in the game with the Jayhawks. K-State is ranked 19th, and Kansas almost cracked the top 25 as it finished 27th in the polls this week.

K-State quarterback Chad May said he understands the importance of the game.

"It's going to be a tough game," May said.

"It's going to be a war. We're going to prepare har, and do things right. We've got a great chance of winning."

May said the K-State-Kansas game is one of the top rivalries in the country.

"UCLA and USC is probably bigger, but ours is right up there," May said.

"I didn't grow up here, so I think it's more for the Kansas people," he said. "But, it's still a big game to me."

Snyder also said the game will be big.

"This is a game that will heavily motivate players. They see this and say, 'wow what a big game,'" Snyder said. "The intrastate rivalry is a healthy and excellent one.

"The fans on both sides are into the ball game," he said.

Another factor in the game is in recent history the winner of the annual battle has the tendency to have a successful season.

Remember 1992, when the Wildcats were crushed by the Jayhawks 31-7 at Lawrence? The game devastated K-State.

Three straight losses followed including a 28-16 loss to Utah State, a 54-7 loss at Colorado and a 16-14 loss to Oklahoma.

K-State pounded out two wins over Iowa State and Oklahoma State for a 2-5 record in the Big Eight Conference and 5-6 overall.

Last season, the Cats beat KU 10-9, lost to Nebraska 45-28, tied Colorado 16-16 and beat Oklahoma 21-7. K-State finished the season at 4-2-1 in the Big Eight and 9-2-1 overall.

In 1991, K-State defeated the Jayhawks 16-12 in an emotional victory at Manhattan.

The Wildcats finished the season 4-3 in the Big Eight and 7-4 overall.

However, in 1992 the Jayhawks pounded the Cats 31-7 in Lawrence.

That was the same season that Mason took Kansas to a 8-4 record and a 23-20 Aloha Bowl victory.

Manhattan is teaming with activity today in anticipation of tonight's K-State vs. Kansas game.

Practically every bar in Aggieville is either planning a live telecast or drink specials.

Rusty's Last Chance Restaurant & Saloon, perhaps the "in"-est spot in Aggieville, will be broadcasting the game on televisions with surround sound on all the speakers.

"Veteran bartender Marvin Peck will be dancing on the bar in purple underwear if K-State wins," Rusty Wilson, owner of Rusty's Last Chance, said.

"He'll dance until he falls off," he said.

Rusty's will have $1 Purple Hooter shots and $1.50 Coors Light tallboys.

This being the first ESPN-televised game, Wilson said he thinks more people will turn

Tonight, Purple Pride will run rampant on the streets of Lawrence.

This week, Manhattan residents have been spending their hard-earned money, gearing up for the big game.

The K-State Union Bookstore reported a slight increase in sales this week, which grew even bigger on Wednesday.

"Lot's of people have been asking for T-shirts and sweatshirts with both KU and K-State on them," Lori Davis, bookstore sales clerk, said.

The Bookstore also reported an increase in the sales of purple rain ponchos, probably due to Wednesday morning's showers and the threat of more tonight.

"We have sold a ton of rain gear," Davis said.

Varney's Book Store also reported a large increase in rain-gear sales.

"We sold a lot Wednesday," Stacy Runnion, Varney's sales clerk, said. "Most people are just trying to make sure they have purple on."

GAME TIPS

WEATHER:
40-percent chance of thunderstorms in Lawrence.

TRAVEL:
If you are driving to Lawrence, don't forget to take toll money.

SCOREBOARD:
KU is favored by 2-1/2 points.

PSYCHIC PREDICTION:
Steve, a psychic from Kansas City's Sophisticated Psychic Readings, predicted that K-State will absolutely win the game today by 14 points, ensuring the team a glamorous media image. But he also predicted an ugly victory in which Chad May will be intercepted four times and that someone will suffer a possible career-ending injury.

HISTORY:
- K-State hasn't won at KU since 1969.
- KU has won 11 straight games in Lawrence.
- In the last four KU/K-State matchups, the home team has won.
- In the last two years, the winning team has gone on to a bowl game.

Fountain flows purple in the heart of KU campus

DAVE KATZER
Collegian

Editor's note: Due to the nature of this story, the names have been changed.

Purple Pride is flowing, not only at K-State, but at the home of the Jayhawks as well.

"Let's just say that the fountain at KU is flowing bright purple now," "Joel" said.

Three K-State students traveled to Lawrence Tuesday night to make sure that the University of Kansas knew the Wildcats were coming.

None of the pranksters wished to be identified.

"It's all about tradition and rivalry. I mean, come on, it's the KU and K-State game," he said.

The pranksters said several gallons of purple dye were dumped into a large fountain near the Chi Omega sorority on the KU campus.

With their backpacks laden with spiritual symbolism, the small band crept toward the local Lawrence landmark hoping that by dawn's light, every student at KU would see their handiwork.

"It was pretty easy. We just walked up, dumped in the purple stuff and got the heck out of there. We were across enemy lines and a long way from the home. There were lights on everywhere around the fountain, but nobody seemed to notice us," "Travis" said.

The group was inspired by past pranks the intrastate rivalry has sparked. Live chickens were turned loose near the field last year when the game was in Manhattan.

"The chicken prank was pretty good, but we thought we'd do something a little more civilized. Driving to Lawrence to make their fountain flow purple is better than just calling them chicken hawks," he said.

When asked if they expected retaliation from the Lawrence faithful, the group collectively commented.

"I doubt it. What we did wasn't mean or too damaging. We tried to keep it good-natured. If they do try to get back at K-State, I hope it won't get out of hand," "Brock" said.

The pranksters said they were optimistic about the game.

"We'll win. We have to win. The gag won't mean as much if we end up losing to them. We're the better team and the better school. We just felt like it was a good time to show our Purple Pride," "Brock" said.

TIPS FOR SURVIVING A GAME-DAY RIOT

How to escape safely from Lawrence after K-State wins:

- Take extra clothing that is not purple.
- Leave your K-State parking permit at home.
- Wash off the purple face paint.
- Disguise yourself in Birkenstocks and flannel.
- Watch out for grease on the goal posts.

How to enjoy the victory in Manhattan:

- If you drive a Volkswagen Beetle or a similar small car, walk to Aggieville.
- Do not wear anything colored blue or red.
- Hang a stuffed Jayhawk in effigy.
- Buy all the Purple Passion you can carry.

NEWS BRIEFS

▶ FORT RILEY SOLDIER SHOT TO DEATH; SHOOTING IS STILL UNDETERMINED

A Fort Riley soldier was found shot to death in his quarters on Monday.

At 11:30 a.m., Specialist Wayne S. Schrueder, 22, had not reported to work. His First Sergeant called the Military Police to investigate.

At about 11:55 a.m., police found Schrueder's body in his living quarters on Custer Hill.

Schrueder was an armor crewman from Lame Deer, Mont. He had served at Fort Riley since February 1993.

Mark Meseke, of the Fort Riley public affairs office, said the shooting is still under investigation. It is still undetermined whether it was an accident, murder or suicide.

▶ FORT RILEY SOLDIER CONVICTED FOR INVOLUNTARY MANSLAUGHTER

FORT RILEY (AP) — A 19-year-old Fort Riley soldier has been sentenced to 4-1/2 years in military prison and a bad-conduct discharge after being convicted in a fatal traffic accident.

Pvt. Kevin Perkins was convicted Tuesday of involuntary manslaughter and drunken driving resulting in personal injury, after a one-day trial before military judge Col. Gregory Varo, the base said in a news release.

Perkins was charged in the April 2 death of Teresa Clarke, the wife of another Fort Riley soldier.

Clarke was standing near the site of a traffic accident on Kansas 77 about 15 miles south of Junction City when Perkins' vehicle plowed into a van, pushing it into Clarke.

Varo also reduced Perkins' rank from E2 to E1 and ordered him to forfeit $500 in government pay each month for 14 months.

Perkins, a member of the 556th Maintenance Company, will serve his sentence at the U.S. Army Disciplinary Barracks at Fort Leavenworth.

▶ MANHATTAN CRISIS CENTER CASHES IN WITH $53,000 FROM STATE GRANT

TOPEKA (AP) — The Crisis Center in Manhattan has received $53,000 from the state.

The state Crime Victims Compensation Board has allocated $705,000 in grants to 23 local domestic-violence programs, Attorney General Bob Stephan announced.

The money comes from marriage-license fees that go into the state's Protection From Abuse Fund and from the federal Family Violence Prevention and Services Fund. Stephan said $515,000 came from the state fund.

Programs cah use the money for temporary emergency shelters for victims of domestic abuse and their children, counseling and assistance to those victims and educational services aimed at reducing the incidence of domestic abuse.

▶ 48 MEMBERS OF RELIGIOUS SECT DIE IN UNDERGROUND MASS SUICIDE

CHEIRY, Switzerland (AP) — The bodies of 48 members of a religious sect were discovered today in a concealed underground chapel and other buildings after apparently committing mass suicide.

Some victims wore ceremonial robes, their hands clasped in prayer and plastic bags tied over their heads.

Police found the bodies in the burning ruins of a farm and three ski chalets in southern Switzerland. The victims apparently killed themselves before the fires were set shortly after midnight, they said.

Authorities said most of the victims appeared to be Swiss, French and Canadian and were investigating possible links with a religious sect in Canada.

Twenty-three adult bodies were found at a farm in the canton of Fribourg, northeast of Geneva, police said.

One man was in the farmhouse with a bullet wound to the head, and 21 others were in an underground chapel lined with mirrors, where they had apparently suffocated themselves with plastic bags.

Some of the victims in the chapel, which was reached by a door hidden behind paneling in a barn, were wearing red, white and black ceremonial robes, said Fribourg police spokesman Beat Carlen.

Two women were wearing gold robes. One couple was in an embrace.

The bodies of 25 more victims, including several children lying next to each other, were found in three chalets in a ski area at Granges-sur-Salvan in Valais canton, southeast of Geneva.

"We are still reeling from what we found," said investigating judge Andre Piller after visiting the farm. The building, perched on a wooded hill over the village of Cheiry, was sealed off from reporters.

Albert Torche, a neighbor, told The Associated Press the farm was bought about three years ago by a group that said it wanted to do biological research.

Villagers said they had no idea the sect existed.

Police said they were assuming the deaths were a mass suicide by a religious sect called the Cross and Rose. It was unclear if the group was related to the Rosicrucians, a centuries-old secret society with beliefs in occult lore and power, whose symbols include the rose and the cross.

Literature for the Cross and Rose and various religious objects were found at the farmhouse, along with an audio cassette, authorities said. They did not say what was on the cassette.

Police were investigating links with an arson fire Tuesday near Montreal in two duplexes owned by members of the Order of the Solar Temple, a group that advocates stockpiling weapons to prepare for the end of the world. Two bodies were found in the wreckage.

Police said one of the three chalets in Valais had been rented by Luc Jouret, described as leader and founder of the Canadian group. Jouret is believed to have fled to Switzerland after he was charged last year with weapons possession and conspiracy.

Kite's is gonna' be WHAT?

Renovations to former Aggieville businesses don't have final goal in mind

Rumors fly, but nothing has been confirmed

TAWNYA ERNST
Collegian

The clatter of hammers has become almost as familiar as the sound of traffic and music in the Aggieville business district.

Anyone who has passed through the 'Ville recently has probably noticed construction in the buildings that formerly housed Kite's Bar and Grille and the Aggie Bike Station.

What will appear out of this construction is a well-kept secret. One that even Cheryl Sieben, director of the Aggieville Business Association, doesn't have an answer for.

"That's the million-dollar question. Everybody's talking about that," Sieben said. "There are a lot of things changing and going on. You hear a lot of rumors about what might happen, but nothing's been confirmed."

Confirmation lies in the hands of Gwyn Riffel, a Manhattan resident in real estate business, who acquired those two properties as well as the ones at 1101 Moro St. and 1111 through 1119 Moro St. during the last year and a half.

However, since plans are still under negotiation with possible tenants, Riffel remains quiet on the subject.

"I don't want to mislead or give any false ideas. Nothing's signed yet," Riffel said. "I would have expected something already, but the parties involved haven't been ready, and as such we haven't been able to formally execute anything.

"I appreciate everyone's patience," he said. "I'm anxious to draw it to conclusion."

Sieben said she appreciates Riffel's reservations about disclosing information.

"How can you answer questions about prospective tenants if you aren't sure yet? I understand and respect his not wanting to say anything at the present time," she said.

Edwin Olson, owner of Olson's Aggieville Shoe Service, said rumor around town has it that a clothing store and a bakery may be in the works.

"He doesn't talk too much about it, but he must have some kind of visions," Olson said. "He's putting so much money out there. I don't know how he's going to get it out, but it's really good for Aggieville."

As for now, Riffel said he is concerned with the construction.

"We want to refurbish the buildings. We had an architect study the exterior of the building," he said. "We want to update and be sensitive to the historical composition of the buildings."

He said he hopes to have construction completed and new tenants by the fourth quarter of this year.

The changes Riffel is making are positive ones for Aggieville, Sieben said.

"He's put a lot of money into it and really made some improvements. Anytime we have someone come in and spend money and take pride in Aggieville, it can only help," she said.

Others who have an interest in Aggieville business said they are happy to see the construction and changes.

Change is nothing new to the 105-year-old district, and, in fact, it appears to thrive on it, Eleanor Brent, owner of Woody's Ladies Shop, said.

"It's a real boon to Aggieville economy and aesthetic value," she said. "You never quite know what you're going to find down here. There's always a successive change-over of business.

"We want people to stay in business, but the change is also what keeps Aggieville alive and young," Brent said. "No matter what age I am, I'll always be high on Aggieville."

Should rumors about a clothing store prove to be true, Brent said she couldn't be happier.

"I would love to have every clothing store in Manhattan here in Aggieville," she said. "Because I know women, and they like to be able to look around several stores and comparison shop. It's difficult to get them down here if I'm the only store."

Not everyone is exactly overjoyed with the new construction.

Waid Davis, owner of the Aggie Bike Station, said he has conflicting opinions about it and Riffel.

"I have mixed feelings," he said. "He's the reason I had to move. It was frustrating because we only had two months to move.

"But I would have to say one thing — when he buys buildings, he makes them look nice," Davis said.

The Bike Station's relocation hasn't been too much of a drawback, though, he said.

"When you're next to one of the busiest bars in town, there are a lot of people that walk in front of your store," Davis said.

Student claims racial discrimination

J.R. PRATHER
Collegian

A claim of discrimination against the K-State Police has struck a note of discord in the celebration of Racial/Ethnic Harmony Week.

During the Student Senate meeting Tuesday, Chuntao Yan, graduate school senator, called attention to a letter from Genwang Wen, graduate student in physics, describing the treatment he and his wife, Xiao Xiao Wen, received from the campus police.

In the letter, Wen said he believed he and his wife were treated unfairly by Officer John Selvidge, who, he said, failed to take responsibility in investigating a traffic accident his wife was involved in.

Xiao Wen said that at 8:20 a.m. Monday, Sept. 19, she was riding her bicycle south on Denison Avenue on her way to her husband's office in Cardwell Hall.

Wen said she signaled a left turn into Lot A-28 between Ackert and Durland halls. As she was turning into the lot, she was struck by a car coming out of the lot, she said.

The car, driven by Carol Dunkin, Manhattan resident, struck Wen with the left front bumper and knocked her off her bicycle.

Wen said she didn't know if Dunkin had run the stop sign at the intersection or had stopped and then turned onto Denison.

Wen said Dunkin got out of her car, helped her up and said she was sorry, admitting it was her fault because she hadn't seen her.

Dunkin's husband was riding in the passenger seat, and Wen said he went off to report the accident while Dunkin moved the car and the bicycle out of the intersection.

When Officer Selvidge arrived, Wen said he asked her if she needed an ambulance. Wen said she refused because she was so scared and upset, and she couldn't tell how serious her injuries were.

"At first, I just felt stomach pain because I was hit in the stomach with the handlebars," she said. "I felt some pain in my leg, but I couldn't tell if it was serious because I was wearing blue jeans."

Wen said all she wanted to do was go to her husband's office, where she could lie on the sofa.

Wen said aside from Selvidge's offer to call an ambulance, he never talked to her about the accident.

Genwang Wen said he feels that the officer didn't talk to his wife because she is Chinese and wouldn't understand.

Wen said Selvidge did tell her that she had the right of way.

The officer inspected Wen's bicycle for damage, she said, but didn't find any.

Because there no apparent injuries or damage, Selvidge did not fill out a report, she said.

"He said there was no damage to bicycle, person or car, so there wasn't any need to file a report," Wen said.

The officer said if she found any damage or any injury, she could call the police a week or even a month later, she said.

Wen said it wasn't until she tried to ride the bike home at lunchtime that she noticed one of the pedals

By the Collegian Editorial Board

Cats are gonna sock it to the Jayhawks

Make the journey to Lawrence to cheer the Cats on to victory.

Let's do it.

Tonight, let's claim Lawrence as the makeshift mecca for K-State football.

The University of Kansas could not sell out Memorial Stadium for tonight's game; their loss is your gain.

Forget your studies for the night, and forget your responsibilities for the evening. Instead, load all of your friends into your car, head west down I-70 wearing your best K-State attire and paint Lawrence purple.

Besides having a good time, you will be witness to history.

For the first time in 25 years, your K-State Wildcat football team will take it to the Jayhawks on their home field.

What a beautiful sight it should be, and you'll be there.

But a mere victory is not enough — any town that cannot sell out their biggest game of the year needs to be punished.

Treat Memorial Stadium as you would your own Wagner Field.

Of course, the Collegian doesn't condone storming the field, tearing down the goalposts and bringing them back to Aggieville to be set on fire, but wouldn't it be a sight?

So what are you waiting for?

Go.

Drop everything, and get there anyway you can.

For tonight, Lawrence is the home of your Wildcats.

TOLES

It's easy to criticize religion

Before beginning another totally immature column this week, I just want to mention the outcome of my service.

For those of you who failed to attend the opening service of my new church (The Blind and Nekkid Disciples of Christ) in front of the K-State Union last weekend, we had a great time. Hundreds of faculty and students were in attendance. The eyeball-plucking did not go over quite like I had anticipated however — in fact, not one person did it, but since it was optional for membership I did not force the issue.

BRAD SEABOURN

Now, if I had really wanted to whip the nekkid masses into a religious fervor that would have generated thousands of eye-balls bouncing all over the sidewalk, I could have said (using my best preaching voice, which can be self-taught for the low, low price of $4,999.95 by enrolling in the Jimmy Sluggart Correspondence School of Evangelism and Other Arts of Con), "Yea, verily, verily, verily, if thy eyeball so much as looketh upon unclothed human flesh, even thy own flesh, plucketh itout! YES! PLUCK IT! PLUCK IT OUT RIGHT NOW! PLUCK IT OUT — praise Jesus — LEST YE LUSTETH — have mercy — AND THY SOUL — say amen — PERISH IN THE FIRES — hallelujah — OF ETERNAL DAMNATION! You can also put five bucks in the collection plate and we'll forget the whole thing."

Or something to that effect.My immature topic this week, however, actually concerns my immature column last week, which concerned the obviously mature and completely logical aspect of religion known as religious fanaticism — albeit in a humorous fashion. Some people, as will always be the case, failed to read through the iconoclastic humor and grasp the true intent of the column.

I would expect this from students, but not from faculty members, particularly those who, because of their profession, should know better.

Over the years, I have received many disparaging comments from people on and off campus who would prefer I simply "lay off", or in other words "shut up", regarding the topic of religion. On the other hand, I have never attempted in any fashion to inhibit the free expression of anyone's opinions or religious beliefs. If anything, I have encouraged it.

In my humble opinion, the fact that anyone would use a forum for free speech (for example, this newspaper) in an attempt to force another person into relinquishing their right to free speech is appalling — doubly so when it comes from people who are supposed to have acquired sufficient knowledge in a specific field to teach others, and more importantly given the authority to teach others. It is appalling, because the intent is to limit Constitutionally guaranteed free speech and thus squelch dissent.

One can conclude from comments made by these people that it is, of course, acceptable to them for me to comment on politics, taxes, sex, family and children, war, racism, child abuse, education, Presidential policy, Congressional salaries, marriage, underwear, childbirth, circumcision, door-to-door salesmen, pets and a multitude of related and unrelated topics, which I have written about and critiqued in both serious and humorous fashion over the years as a columnist.

Yet to do so with religion is to be attacked, not for the content of what was written, but attacked personally for writing it. And always with the comment that I should "lay off" or "shut up."

I have even received death threats from defenders of the faith and other Christian soldiers who would seek to expedite my journey toward the hell-fire they feel I so richly deserve for speaking blasphemy and "poking fun" at religious beliefs. Yet, not once has anyone offered to defend the specific beliefs which I have criticized.

Again, unlike my columns, their attack has always been against me personally, and not the beliefs or opinions I expressed.

Despite these obstacles I still feel it is reasonable to ask, "Why is religion so special? What gives it the right to be treated differently? Why can't religion and religious authority be questioned?"

The answer lies in religion itself. The overwhelming majority of religious faiths discourage honest, open questioning of beliefs and religious dogma.

Skepticism is the hallmark of the unbeliever, not the believer. To doubt, question, and seek with an open mind is incompatible with most religions, and to Western religions regarded as a sin. This is religion's problem, not mine.

If it is truly considered "IQ-challenged" (as some have said) to be free from religious dogma, free to question that which has no basis in fact, free to demand more than supernatural explanations as a foundation for belief, than I am indeed IQ-challenged — and gladly so.

But to demand that I relinquish my right to express my beliefs whenever I choose, in any manner I choose, however blasphemous and repugnant they may be to some, is to essentially ask the impossible — because I can not do it.

More importantly, I will not do it.

Hochhauser comments incorrect

Dear Editor,

If Mr. Boone wants to challenge Rep. Sheila Hochhauser's record of support for KSU, at least he should get his facts right.

I would like to help him. Funding for the expansion of Throckmorton and Farrell, increases in student aid, and better salaries for faculty and staff are successes that speak for Rep. Hochhauser's efforts. But I particularly want to correct Mr. Boone's statement that Sheila was "vacationing in Europe" during the 1993 flood.

Sheila was in Europe taking care of her husband and daughter while her husband, an associate professor in entomology, was on sabbatical leave conducting research at the University of Amsterdam. They left in early June, before there was any inkling of a flood and hired me before she left to help her with constituent issues.

When the town flooded, she directed me to arrange meetings, contact local, state and federal agencies and be her eyes, ears and hands to help the community.

Maybe Mr. Boone has a few thousand dollars to hop on a plane at a moment's notice, but I know Sheila does not. Our choice in November should be for a work horse like Sheila Hochhauser.

▶ PROTESTS

Students choose wrong items to protest

Dear Editor,

While student protests are nothing new at U.C. Berkeley, I learned in Tuesday's newspaper about one that concerned the idea of having a multicultural-class requirement. Student protest, however, is not restricted only to the "People's Republic of Berkeley." While working on my B.S. and M.S. degrees at the University of Maryland and University of Illinois respectively, I witnessed and participated in a fair number of protests and rallies. Such rallies concerned the lack of recruitment of minority faculty and students to the school, the recruitment of students by the CIA on campus, the Pro-Life/Pro-Choice debate, the divestment of stocks and bonds the Universities held that were in companies that did business in South Africa, and the U.S. intervention into various third world countries, particularly those in Central America. Several times while at the University of MD., students from my old alma mater got together with students from neighboring schools and had combined rallies in the nation's capital. One rally was in front of the South African Embassy protesting against apartheid and another was in front of the Department of Justice protesting against the actions of then acting attorney general, Ed Meese.

Now I'm at K-State working on my Ph.D. and in the two months I've been here I've noticed that K-State students are also very vocal on numerous issues. These issues have included; riding bicycles on the sidewalk, "the Wall", and the parking and seating problems at the football stadium. Although it's too early for me to pass judgment on this institution of higher education, I'm starting to believe that as one moves geographically closer to "the Crease of the Nation" (you know when you open up a map of the United States how the center crease runs through Kansas, more specifically, Manhattan, KS.), the more the pressing issues of the day are of greater triviality. Maybe that's why Bob Dole is continuously elected to the Senate.

Don't have to be from New Yok to talk kinda funny

The Midwest is the home of a wonderful American dialect.

SCOTT ALLEN MILLER

Most people from the Midwest don't always realize just how unique this dialect is uhtil they leave the region and spend a long period of time in another part of the United States. Just for the heck of it, let's look at some of those wacky, way out words that reinforce the Midwest's highly undeserved reputation of being the land of the inbred and the home of the moron.

larnyx: If you look up larnyx in the dictionary, you will not find it. Some dyslexic Midwesterners have twisted the word "larynx" around and made a new word. Really, it's American ingenuity at work, creating the new and unnecessary from something that was fine the way it was. See also pharnyx.

chimbley: This word can be pronounced with or without a silent b. A chimbley, of course, is the part of a Midwestern house that smoke comes out of (besides the kitchen.)

libary: Many, many people claim that they go to libaries. Elementary school teachers remind their students to bring their libary cards and to pay their libary fines. The r in the middle of this word has gone the way of the 55 mile per hour speed limit; it's there, but some people just don't notice.

twonny: OK, this is one that I'm guilty of using. This Sunday I will turn twonny-four years old. Note the obvious lack of a t sound in this word. Maybe it was all of those French settlers who turned the en in "twenty" into this new word. Maybe I'm just a redneck after all. See also hunnerd.

Massathuthetts: This word can start fights with Irish-Americans, although plenty of other things can, too. Many people of Gaelic extraction live in the state of Massathuthetts but they get angry when you point this out. Who can blame them? It's one thing to have a speech problem. Just being a Midwesterner is another thing entirely.

motorsickle: This word is not very common but it is out there if you listen for it. A motorsickle could be either a two-wheeled motorized vehicle or it could be a motorized cutting machine that has yet to be invented. Who knows?

boot: In North Dakota, Minnesota, and parts of Wisconsin and Michigan, a boot is a water vehicle. This accent is extremely hard to understand even for Kansans who live only a few hours away. Among other words in this region are hoose and yasureyabetcha.

nucula: This is another case of dyslexic Midwestern pronunciation. An example of usage of this word would be, "When I grow up, I want to be a nucular physicist." See also nuculus.

To be fair, this word isn't limited to use in the Midwest and neither are many of these words. They just seem most prevalent where the corn grows the tallest.

Now that the Midwest, has been sufficiently discussed, let's take a brief journey down the eastern seaboard to see what a bunch of bozos they sound like. We'll start in Boston, which amazingly was the home of the Father of American English, Daniel Webster.

pak: This is one of those funny Best words. A pak is where children can go play and where you can wak ya dag . It's also a common Korean last name. Baston is the birthplace of words like this.

pok: If you drive some five hours from Baston to New Yok City you will find no place to pok for less than ten dollars. Your dag will become a two-syllabled creature known as a doowug. If you are from Indiana, like me, you will be called a Hooziah from Indianer. New Yok is yooge, it's yoomungous. It's also home to a minority of English speakers, so be prepared.

wutter: Another two hours from the Big Rotten Apple is Phi'adelphia. This is the home of the pretzel, the cheese steak and the glass of wutter.

You may also wish tophoon your family and tell them what a nuhyse city Phi'y is, although you'd probably be lying. It's a yooge city, too.

Three hours from there, you will hit Washington, D.C. where people intentionally speak any language but plain English.

If you travel much farther south of the capital, however, you may really run into a language barrier. A whole book could be written on speaking English down south.

Come to think of it, when you compare language foibles in America, Kansas may not be so bad after all. At least we can unnerstan each other here.

Reading palms to survive

AMY ZIEGLER
Collegian

For most college freshmen, moving away from home is both a frightening and refreshing experience.

For Page Getz, it's all too familiar.

In the eighteen years of her life, she has not only struggled through an alcohol and drug addiction, but she has also lived on her own.

To get extra cash to survive after leaving her broken-home life, Getz developed the power to read palms.

"At first, I didn't believe in it at all. I made the promise that I wouldn't get caught up in it and after a long time, it amazes me. Out of the hundred palms I've read, only one person has told me I'm off," she said.

Getz, a freshman in English, now lives in the residence halls and has converted her room into a minimuseum filled with hundreds of unusual paintings, pictures and charming figurines and sayings.

Quotes such as "I am Creative" and "I am a Kindred Spirit" are written on pieces of typing paper and hung up on her walls. Photocopies of Maharaj-Ji, the sexual orientation of God, are plastered everywhere, and a Buddha shrine complete with flowers and an ethnic woven cloth rests on the floor.

"When I was little, someone told me that everything in my house would have a story behind it. Look at my room now — it's already coming true," Getz said.

As she sat on her bed and smoked a cigarette, she started to unfold the history behind her interest in palm reading.

Getz said she first read a book about it and then started to experiment on her friends.

She soon earned a reputation for making accurate predictions.

As the news of her psychic powers spread, more and more people approached her and offered her money for the palm readings.

"Someone came up to me and said she heard I did it for money. After that, people started to pay me," Getz said.

To support herself while she was on her own, she followed people around at parks, festivals and malls and asked them for spare change in exchange for a and the rear wheel was bent.

Selvidge and Sgt. Andrew Amaro arrived and gave her the options to pursue to cover the damages on the bicycle. She said she had to call in a neighbor to help her translate what they were saying.

Xiao Wen said she discovered that night that she had been injured.

"That night, I felt more pain all over my body," she said. "I decided to go to the hospital. One of my American friends suggested to us that if I go to the hospital, I should file a report."

Before the Wens went to the hospital the next morning, they went to the police station to file areport for the insurance company.

Xiao Wen said she felt that Selvidge tried to prevent them from filing the report.

"At first, he denied that he said I had the right of way," she said.

Then, she said he told her she didn't have a witness. When she told him she could find one, he said the witness had to be someone who saw the accident happen, and she had to find one that day.

"He said we needed to find a witness before 5 p.m. that day so he could finish his report," she said.

Genwang said the officer made it impossible for them to find a witness in time.

"I feel he wanted us to understand there were no physical witnesses to this accident," he said.

Then, Wen said Selvidge insisted she write out her statement there in the police station. Wen said she told him that her English was not very good and that she needed the help of a dictionary. Also, she said she was feeling too dizzy and shaken to organize her thoughts .

Selvidge insisted she fill out her statement then and there, she said.

"He said, 'You have to finish the report here. You have to.' I said, 'I can't,'" Wen said.

Genwang Wen said Selvidge also insisted that Xiao write the report without help from him.

"He emphasized that she had to write it herself. He said if I helped her, she'd be in big trouble."

Wen said Sgt. Amaro then intervened and convinced Selvidge to let her take the report home.

Xiao Wen said she then went to Memorial Hospital. Afterwards, she wrote out her statement and took it to the police station, she said.

The next day, when Genwang Wen went to get a copy of the police report for the insurance company, he said he found that the driver had not given her statement.

He said he did not think it was fair that a person fluent in English was given extra time to file a statement, when a person who was injured and not fluent was not.

Xiao Wen said she felt upset and angry by her treatment.

"It is the first time I cried since I came to America. I felt so helpless. I just feel he treated me as if I'm not a human being."

Genwang Wen said he thinks the officer should have apologized for his behavior and expects a reply from the police director.

Ronnie Grice, director of police, said both sides should be looked at.

From what he read in the report, Grice said he didn't see any inappropriate actions by the officer.

He said he had gone over the Wens' complaint with Genwang Wen and that he had sent him a letter with his findings.

Grice said he didn't believe that Selvidge had acted insensitively.

"He is a first-class officer," Grice said. "It does not fit his profile."

Wildcats vs. Jayhawks

▶ K-STATE/KU PRECEDE

Rivals clash for 92nd time

JEREMY CRABTREE
Collegian

The game that everyone has been waiting for is finally here — the Sunflower Showdown.

K-State vs. Kansas.

The No. 19 team in the country against the No. 27 team.

The last time the two teams met, the Cats squeaked out a 10-9 victory, and the season before, the Jayhawks smashed K-State 31-7.

In fact, the past four seasons the home team has won the match-up, and K-State hasn't won in Lawrence since 1969.

GAME-DAY INFO

Date: Thursday, Oct. 6
Kickoff: 7 p.m.
Place: Memorial Stadium
The opponent: KU Jayhawks (3-1)
Last season's record: 5-7 (3-4)

Hawks to watch:
#22 RB L.T. Levine
#97 DE Sylvester Wright
#39 OLB Dan Davis
#66 OG Hessley Hempstead
#20 RB June Henley
#69 OG John Jones

"I know it's been an awful long time since K-State won at Lawrence," K-State coach Bill Snyder said.

As with past match-ups, this game should feature several high-octane offenses.

The K-State offense has been averaging 318 yards of offense, 124 yards a game rushing and 194 yards a game through the air.

"Top to bottom, I think they're a better team than they were a year ago," Kansas coach Glen Mason said.

"You don't get to be ranked in the top 20 if you're no good.

"We are going to have to play sound defensively. You can take one thing away from them, and they might do something else."

Then there is the Kansas offense, which uses a smash-mouth approach behind an experienced offensive line led by guards Hessley Hempstead and John Jones.

The Jayhawks have fashioned their way to a second-place ranking in the Big Eight Conference rushing statistics.

Their top rusher is June Henley, who was the Big Eight's newcommer of the year last season. So far this season, Henley has been averaging more than 107 yards a game, which places him fourth in the conference.

However, Henley injured his shoulder during the Jayhawk's loss at Texas Christian.

Mason said Henley could play, but his teammates Sylvester Wright and Mark Allison said that he will play.

KU's quarterback Asheiki Preston was also injured against TCU and Alabamba-Birmingham, but he has practiced and should be back for the game.

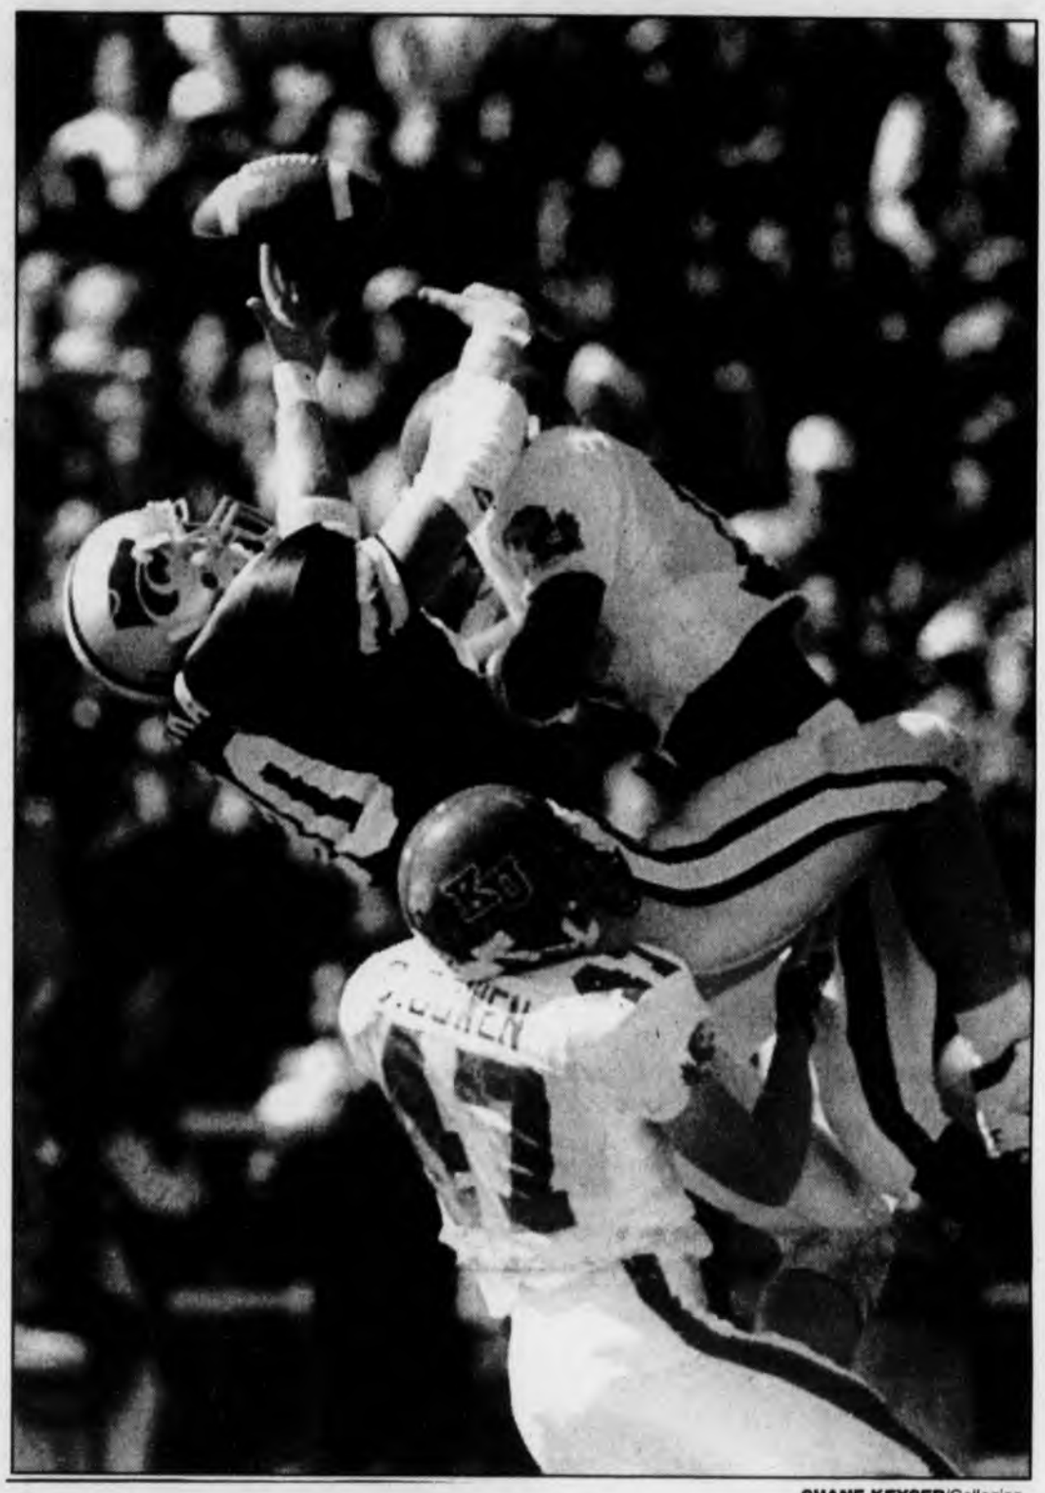
"I don't know," Mason said of Preston. "I'll have to wait until Thursday to see how he feels."

However, Mason said he is comfortable with starting back-up quarterback Mark Williams again.

"He's a good athlete, and he's tough," Mason said. "After last year, I'm not going to worry about injuries."

In Preston's place, Mark Williams filled in and played well against UAB. Williams threw for 144 yards and rushed for an additional 20 yards to lead KU to a 72-0 victory.

Even though Mason won't give a definite answer to Preston's status, Snyder said he expects to see him.



Snyder said he expects Preston to play.

"We have to prepare as if Asheiki will be back," Snyder said.

■ The National Weather Service said there is a 30-percent chance of rain tonight, and that could favor the run-orientated Jayhawks.

However, Snyder said the rain shouldn't have any effect on the Cats.

"We know where we are going," Snyder said. "The defensive backs don't."

Brian Lojka, tight end, reaches for a pass during the Kansas game last season. Lojka will start at tight end against the Jayhawks tonight at 7 when K-State faces KU.

Club defends Cats in Lawrence

NICOLE POELL
Collegian

You could say they're pilgrims in an unholy land.

These pilgrims are members of the K-State Catbacker Club who operate in the heart of Jayhawk territory itself — Lawrence.

"It is a challenge," Cynthia Ochs, president of the Lawrence group of Wildcat fans said. "There is a lot of animosity from some Jayhawks who we come in contact with, but we deal with it."

While dealing with Jayhawks goes along with the territory, the group's primary goal is to keep Cats fans involved with K-State athletics, no matter where they may live.

Living in Lawrence, however, tends to complicate things for the 65-member group, Ochs said.

"One of the biggest challenges we encounter is drumming up enough support from the local merchants," she said.

"Sometimes it is quite difficult to get a lot of the merchants to donate, and there are hard feelings involved at times, but we have accepted that challenge," she said.

Ochs said while the sometimes unfriendly environment can cause friction, the group's activities make any trouble worthwhile.

"We have little game-watching get togethers at a local bar and grill before every K-State football and basketball game," she said.

"We also get some members of the K-State athletic department to make appearances at our monthly meetings as guest speakers. We usually manage to have a good time at any event."

The group's main event of the year is a K-State fundraiser that is named after Ochs' late husband — the Jacob Ochs Memorial Golf Tournament.

"This is a very big event for us," Ochs said. "We have it in July, and we get various K-Staters and K-State coaches to participate."

"We then donate the money raised from this event to various K-State groups — the Power Cats organization, the Mike Ahearn Scholarship Fund and the Jacob Ochs Fund. We also provide scholarships from this to two Douglas County students who will be attending K-State."

As far as this week's activities go, Ochs said the group has a couple of busses lined up to take members to the big game Thursday night, while some of the club will watch the game from its favorite Lawrence hangout.

"We need a lot of them at the game to cheer on the Cats, but there will also be some watching it on the big screen," she said. "That way, we can kind of spread out our spirit a little bit more."

Ochs' background includes a lot of that K-State spirit. Ochs herself attended K-State, and her husband, Jacob, was a K-State graduate. But the K-State ties don't end there.

"Our two daughters graduated from K-State, and I think we have about 13 total K-State graduates in our family," Ochs said.

Two more Ochs family members, Dirk and Travis, are currently attending K-State as they make names for themselves on the football field.

"Dirk and Travis are my nephews, so they're keeping the Ochs Wildcat tradition alive," she said.

While Ochs admits keeping any K-State tradition alive in Lawrence is a tough job, she said one thing keeps her group of Catbackers going.

"We're all proud to be K-Staters."

Cats end 30-game streak against Jayhawks

Yolanda Young, outside hitter, celebrates after putting away a kill Wednesday. The Cats defeated Kansas for the first time since Nov. 17, 1988.

The streak is over.

The K-State women's volleyball team ended its three-year, 30-game Big Eight Conference losing steak in a 15-11, 15-12 and 15-1 rout of the University of Kansas.

"I feel like there is a big monkey off my back, even though this is my first year here," Coach Jim Moore said.

The Wildcat's last conference win was an Oct. 24, 1991, win over Missouri.

The streak did not look to be in danger of falling in the early going, however.

The Jayhawks jumped out to a 10-4 lead in the first game.

"Kansas came out playing harder than us, and we really had to battle back," Kathryn Wylie, swing hitter and only senior on the team, said.

Wylie is the only player on the team to witness every loss in the streak.

Kate DeClerk, sophomore middle blocker, said the slow start was due to some fundamental mistakes.

"Our passing really hurt us early on," DeClerk said. "Once we got that going, everything seemed to click."

The Cats roared back to outscore the Hawks 11-1 and took the first game 15-11.

Just when things seemed under control for the Cats, they lost their momentum. The second game looked like an exact duplicate of the first, as the Hawks once again took the lead 10-4.

"It's a trademark of my teams to be slow starters," Moore said. "It's been that way for four years, and I'm getting real sick and tired of it.

"I'll have to figure out what I'm doing wrong and correct it."

The Cats once again came back in this game to take an 11-10 lead. The run featured a huge kill by Yolanda Young down the middle for the ninth point and two straight blocks by Jill Dugan for the 10th and 11th points.

The Hawks took a 12-11 lead, and that's where the score stood for many side-outs, until Young took over.

Young nailed two straight kills, and the Cats went on to the 15-12 victory.

As the teams talked in the locker rooms, Moore said he gave a plea to his team.

"I just told them to correct a few things we were doing wrong, and as I walked out, I told them, 'please, don't give them a 4-10 lead,'" Moore said.

The Cats were definitely not outplayed as they smoked the Hawks 15-1 to finish them off in straight sets.

"It was so great to beat KU," Wylie said. "I am really hyped."

The losing streak was not the only thing to fall during the night.

Jill Dugan recorded 11 assisted blocks to set a new school record in a three-game match.

On hand to see the Cats dismantle the Hawks were 1,364 fans. The Cats were very appreciative.

"I've never seen so many people packed in here," DeClerk said. "They really helped us a lot."

In Focus

The King of Spain patiently awaits the wedding of his daughter to a French prince. The Royal Wedding is a new addition to this year's Renaissance Festival.

FACES FROM THE PAST

Sir Richard Nevelle, played by Joe Tremel of Grandview, Mo., donned a full suit of plate armor for the Age of Knighthood weekend. The armor, although made from aluminum, dates to the period of the War of the Roses and cost $2,000 to make. Tremel answered questions from from visitors about knights and their roles, and armor.

Puke, of the comedy team Puke & Snot, played by Mark Sieve of Minneapolis, reveals the most sensual word in the English language — "alfalfa". The duo has always been a favorite of visitors. Sieve and his partner Joe Cudla have been performing their act for 20 years and liken their style to old Vaudevillian actors.

Top left: Karen Alexander of Overland Park works wool through a spinning wheel to produce yarn. Alexander was demonstrating her craft as a member of the Society of Creative Anachronism. SCA has had craft and combat demonstrations at the Kansas City Renaissance Festival for many years. Top center: a blacksmith with "Schep's Forge," an artisan shop at the festival, hammers a piece of red-hot metal into shape. Top right: David McNally, a member of Saint Andrew's Pipes & Drums plays "Scotland the Brave" on the highland bagpipes. Above: actors toss a "wench," or servant woman, during the Wench Pass contest. The contest, in which actors competed with men from the audience, was part of the Highland Games held last weekend. The theme for the weekend was the Age of Knighthood. Next weekend's theme will be A Musical Harvest.

Where is it acceptable today to play in the mud, eat whole turkey legs, be saved by knights and chased by madmen?

No, it's not a new night club, it's the Renaissance Festival.

Once a year in a field in Bonner Springs, Kan., the Kansas City Art Institute brings to life the era of the Renaissance.

Sword fighting in the streets, pub singing and beer drinking are only a few of the audience participation activities to enjoy.

Dancing and singing are acceptable in the pubs as well as the streets at this celebration of the past.

Past weekend themes have been Pirates and Buccaneers, Wine, Women and Song and Musketeers, Matrimony and Mayhem.

When attending the festival, you may witness a royal wedding, a masked ball or even a 16th century trial.

Besides the many activities, there are also nearly 160 shops from which to buy past and present treasures.

Among some of the merchants and artisans at the festival are glass blowers, blacksmiths, woodcarvers, sculptors and weavers.

You can buy anything from a dress of the period to custom leather boots to handmade musical instruments.

Not just any crafter is accepted, Leigh Reinhart, director of sales and marketing, said. After a long process of judging, only the best are accepted.

Maureen Keenan, proprietor of the Wood, Wench & Stone Crone, is a first-year artisan.

"It's been a challenge to do this," Keenan said.

"They told us to use an Elizabethan theme and do research for our costume and shop," she said.

"They check all of our items to see if they meet the theme, and then we are accepted," Keenan said.

Artisans at the festival do demonstrations such as pot throwing, glass blowing and sword making.

Patrons can visit shops with modern items like cookware and prints fully framed or venture to the past in a shop filled with swords and armor all handmade.

Another shop that might interest the history buff is a dress shop filled with gowns handmade in a Renaissance fashion. Slips, hoops, corsets and full royal garb are available to any patron willing to pay the price.

In many of the shops, one might find dragon figures or what seems like royal jewelry. All are handcrafted by the artisans that are at the festival.

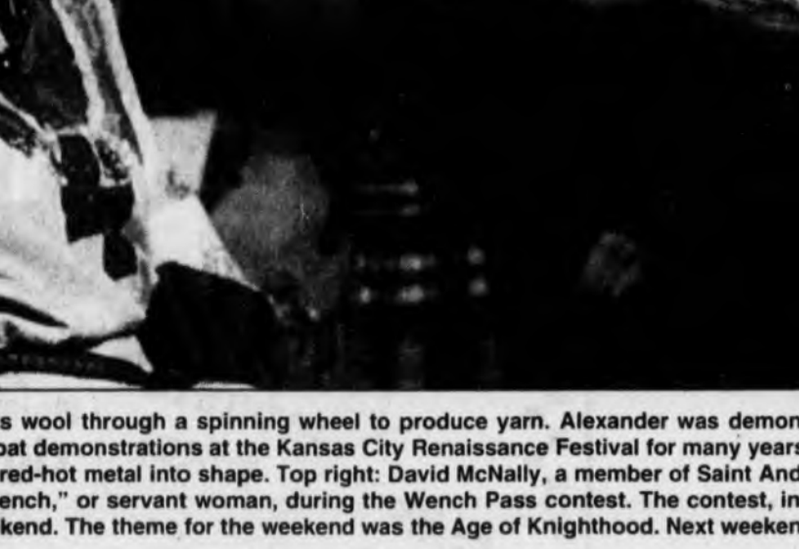
'Many of the crafters are from the Kansas area, but some travel quite a distance. One jeweler travels from Bath, England.

Michelle Mason of Des Moines, Iowa, said, "We all had a great time. My son loves swords and was in the sword shop for hours, and it was only two little rooms."

Since 1977, the Kansas City Art Institute has been host to the Renaissance Festival as a way to raise the funds needed to run the fine arts college.

Thespians from all over are recruited to take part in this seven-week summer stock of sorts.

A six-week long academy is attended by the potential actors and actresses, where they learn the history of the Renaissance and hone dialect and the character they choose to portray.



Heather Devine, a 15-year-old from Lee's Summit, Mo., was recruited by a director of a production of "Camelot" in Blue Springs.

"I thought it would be fun," Devine said.

"I had to pick a character and make or buy my costume, then audition the character to be approved."

Devine said she plans to come back next year, unless she were to get a better offer (one that pays).

Badger, Ken Barkus of Colorado Springs, carefully lays a sword into a shotgun case at the close of the festival day last Saturday. Badger helps sell the blades in Sky Castles, a shop owned by Shane Madden of Shawnee, Kan. The swords range in price from around $150 to $1000.

Art Bunker III, of Kansas City, Kan., taps a Celtic knot into a piece of leather which will become part of a leather bag. Bunker has been a leatherworker for five years and became interested in the trade because of an artisan at the Kansas City Renaissance Festival. Bunker apprenticed under Bob Heath, who had a shop at the festival for many years.

David Lewis, senior in nutrition and exercise science, runs "Dave's Distribution," a home business, out of his bedroom.

Money rolls in depending on size of your dreams

PRUDENCE SIEBERT
Collegian

You could be making $200,000 a year by working only five to 10 hours a week in as little as 18 months.

David Lewis, senior in nutrition and exercise science, said he hopes to achieve this goal through interactive distribution of personal and cleaning products.

"This business is strictly dependent on how hard you want to work," Lewis said. "It's based on how big your dreams are. The bigger the dream, the faster the business will grow."

Networking is key in the success of distribution, he said.

"Orders are placed through me back to the wholesaler. I then distribute the product out, and that's where the networking comes in. The product is distributed to people I network with."

Lewis said it is the networking that allows for profit.

"You're buying products directly from the wholesaler for yourself that you're going to use in your home. The business deals in increasing your volume by introducing it to other people," Lewis said. "As your business volume grows, your income grows with it."

Jeff Petersen, Manhattan resident and two-year distributor, said interactive distribution allows you to make money from what you would be buying anyway.

"You don't have to buy things you normally wouldn't use," Petersen said. "When you share this with someone else, he sees how it works, buys the stuff he needs and introduces someone else to buy what he or she needs."

Lewis said the business was not only convenient, but simple.

"All you have to do is know how to write checks and fill out an order form," Lewis said. "There is no required resale. There are no required door-to-door sales."

Appreciating the experience of people who have already succeeded in the business is important, Lewis said.

"You have to learn from the people who have succeeded before you. They have figured out a plan, and it should work for you, too."

Petersen said he agreed.

"We have a system. If you follow the system to a T, it will work. If not, it will take longer," Petersen said.

"There's a potential to make a profit within six months — $3,000 on a glorified scale," he said. "People can do it quicker. Some will take 10 times that. It's really not a get-rich-quick scheme."

Petersen said interactive distribution allows you to set your own limits and goals.

"Whoever hired you in a conventional job will make more money than you. But with this, you can make more than who introduced you."

Lewis said the business brought reality to his dreams.

"As a coach, I couldn't make a living," he said. "This gave me the opportunity to coach kids and make a living."

He said his dreams go beyond being able to pay the bills.

"My biggest dream is to be earning enough money where I can start taking my mom on trips," Lewis said. "I want to repay her for the support she gave us as a single mom."

Virtual reality really on campus

CASEY MILLER

Many students' experience of virtual reality comes from the 1992 movie, "The Lawnmower Man."

K-State students will have an opportunity to experience it firsthand. The Union Program Council is bringing the virtual reality organization, Funny Business, to the Union Courtyard. There is no admission fee.

"It's a standing setup with different games that involve wearing a helmet," Christy Drake, special events chair for UPC, said.

A few lucky students who have already played virtual-reality games will still be in for a surprise.

This CD-ROM system is the newest in technology. It is 10 times as real as any virtual reality system before it.

"This system has five times the speed, clarity and animation as any other virtual reality from the past," Melissa Wells, UPC eclectic events chair, said.

The cutting-edge system is played between partners who can communicate with each other while in virtual reality.

Also new to the setup is a closed circuit television so spectators can see what kind of virtual world the players are in.

UPC committee members are hoping that the display will be successful so more virtual reality will be available at K-State in the future.

"This is something that the average college student wouldn't normally have access to. And it's completely free," Drake said.

"This is an opportunity to see something that you only see in the movies," Wells said.

The virtual-reality stand will be in the Union Courtyard on Friday between 11:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Wisconsin governor's office hit by bomb

ASSOCIATED PRESS

MADISON, Wis. — A pipe bomb exploded in front of Gov. Tommy G. Thompson's campaign headquarters Tuesday, shattering a glass window and knocking a campaign worker to the floor.

No one was injured in the 12:40 a.m. explosion. Police said they had no suspects and no motive.

Mark Liedl, Thompson's deputy campaign director, said lights were on in the headquarters at the time, a car was parked out front and it was obvious that there was someone in the headquarters.

The Republican governor was at his home about a half-mile away at the time of the blast.

His opponent, Democratic state Sen. Chuck Chvala of Madison, called the bombing a cowardly and despicable act.

"Any attack of this sort on the governor, his staff or his re-election staff is an attack on our system of government," he said.

Liedl said the campaign is hiring security guards as a precaution.

A rock was thrown through a window at the headquarters on Aug. 18, campaign manager Bill McCoshen said.

Sinful acts should be environmentally protected

Dear Cassandra,

My girlfriend and I are concerned about the environmental effect of using prophylactics. We don't feel guilty about buying them, due to the fact that this helps support the rubber/latex industries in South America, although they are wastefully packaged. Our concern is that we average 3-4 a day, and we don't know how to dispose of them. We hate to throw them out for fear that they will end up in a landfill and become certain death for a seagull or further contaminate our water supply with Nonoxydyl-9.

Signed,
Tarzan and Jane

Dear Tarzan and Jane,

Being that you aren't formally wedded, prophylactics shouldn't be an issue for you, because youngsters like yourself have no business engaging in sinful conduct like intercourse before marriage.

Hopefully, the two of you will reconsider your uncalled-for, immoral actions and abstain from using these filthy devices altogether. However, if you become weak with temptation, make sure you use products that are environmentally safe. Read the labels or check into the company doing the manufacturing.

▶ REVIEW

Spielberg film exposes Holocaust

RUSSELL FORTMEYER
Collegian

It's hard to review a film that has swept the Oscars, received great critical acclaim, and touched thousands of people worldwide.

Nothing can really be said for the experience of having seen "Schindler's List" that hasn't already been said countless times. On Thursday, Zev Kedem, a Holocaust survivor and a member of Schindler's list, will speak to what I'm sure will be a packed house.

Anyway, I guess this is more of a re-review.

But, with the advantage of hindsight, we can explore just why "List" is so important as an informational source and as a piece of film, and why this film wasn't made for Hollywood.

'LIST'

The Union Program Council presents "Schindler's List" at 7 p.m. on Friday and Saturday in Forum Hall. Tickets are $1.75.

Before the film hit theaters, it wasn't exactly creating widespread industry buzz. Most features that I can recount reading somewhat brushed the movie off as some sort of Steven Spielberg artsy film.

Most critics panned it as a risky, black-and-white venture, filmed in depressing Poland, that wouldn't reach American audiences.

Most of the movies that were being gushed about in Hollywood periodicals in fall 1993 were deservedly "The Remains of the Day" and, perhaps not so deservedly, "The Age of Innocence."

Both those movies failed to reach audiences. After the hubbub of "Mrs. Doubtfire" slowed up, the highly dramatic "Schindler's List" appeared in theaters in winter 94.

"Schindler's List," which eventually became a $100-million success, had everything going against it.

Liam Neeson, although very well-known to theater-goers, was a very low-profile star. Ralph Fiennes was completely unknown.

Ben Kingsley (Oscar Best Actor winner for "Gandhi"), the only real, well-known actor in the film, is a very un-Hollywood type.

The film is also shot in black-and-white, a convention usually reserved by independent film-makers, not the Hollywood powerhouses like Spielberg.

Perhaps most significant, the subject matter dealt with by the film is something most people don't know about or really don't care to know about.

With these obstacles, Spielberg could have easily directed a film completely off-base with an unbearable three-hour length and absolutely no point to make (Wyatt Earp?).

The sheer success of the film is a tribute to Spielberg's genius. Not only are Neeson and Fiennes big stars, the subject of the Jewish Holocaust has entered the mainstream consciousness.

It is no longer something that can be locked away and forgotten. Much as the little Jewish girl in the red dress reappears in the movie, we must also re-examine the Jewish Holocaust from time to time so we understand where we have been and where we are going as a species.

Services accommodate students

University Counseling Services has extended its hours until 9 p.m. to accommodate evening appointments.

TRINA HOLMES
Collegian

You're in need of counseling, but have classes until 3:30 p.m. and then have to work until 7 p.m. What can you do?

If it's Tuesday, you can make an appointment at University Counseling Services until 9 p.m.

Dorinda Lambert, assistant director for clinical services at Counseling Services, said the extension of the center's Tuesday-evening hours was Counseling Services' way to accommodate students whose schedules made it impossible to make daytime appointments.

"The evening appointments are available mainly for students who can't get another appointment time," Lambert said.

"For example, students who have such tight schedules that they can't get in, like vet-med, engineering or architecture students," she said.

Although the extended hours have been in effect since Sept. 13, Lambert said there are still some students who do not know about the change.

"I don't think that all of the students are aware yet of the change in scheduling," she said. "Our intent is to continue to advertise and let people know about availability when it's needed."

Relationship problems, stress, family conflicts, depression and confusion about career choices are some common issues Lambert said students come to Counseling Services for.

"We have three staff members and probably a total of eight or nine appointment slots available in the evening, but that varies from week to week because people do groups," Lambert said.

Mary O'Donnell, therapist at Counseling Services, said the groups that meet on Tuesday nights are the Healthy Relationship Workshop and the Stress Management Training Workshop.

O'Donnell said if there should ever be a waiting list, a group may be added to the Tuesday-evening schedule for those on that list.

"We don't have a waiting list now, and we have not had a waiting list in over a year and a half," O'Donnell said.

"Should there come a time when there may be a waiting list, something to add would be a group for those people on Tuesday nights. The idea would be to help people get service while they're waiting for regular therapy sessions," she said.

O'Donnell said an on-call counselor is also available to see people in an emergency situation.

"There's always an on-call counselor whenever we're open for people who need to be seen immediately," she said. "If somebody is in a crisis situation, or is in danger of hurting themself or somebody else — obviously that person needs to be seen immediately."

On-call staff members also see people who aren't necessarily in danger of causing harm, Lambert said.

"We recognize that a crisis can come up unpredictably," she said.

"Someone may need to talk to somebody to sort out what's going on," she said. "The on-call staff is a helpful service to have for the immediacy of a situation."

Lambert said people may call in for information, but the Counseling Service is not a call-in hot line.

"People sometimes call in to get information because they're in a crisis," Lambert said. "We'll take these calls, but we're not like a phone line."

O'Donnell said she doesn't mind working the longer hours.

"I like having the option of having a longer day and being able to be flexible and take time off," she said. "I have four extra hours in my week, and I can take a longer lunch or leave a little earlier on Friday.

"I think it's a great thing to do for the students, and I appreciate it myself," she said.

Staff response to the evening hours has also been good, O'Donnell said.

"I think our staff is really open to being creative and trying new and different ways of reaching out to students on campus," she said. "If this is something they need, I really hope they use it."

Polluted drinking water does not have to stay

MIKE HIND
Collegian

High rates of well-water contamination have prompted the state of Kansas to educate the public on ways to limit pollutants in drinking water.

The Kansas Department of Health and Environment has come up with a well-water fact sheet, which lists ways to reduce the chances of contamination.

According to the sheet, some basic steps are required.

- Well owners should place wells uphill from possible pollution sources so rain water doesn't wash pollutants toward the well. Possible sources include fuel, feed, chemical-storage facilities, livestock facilities, septic systems and waste lagoons.
- All abandoned wells should be plugged and never used for disposal or dumping. They can affect water in active wells by providing direct routes to groundwater.
- Wells should be 200 to 500 feet from livestock areas, waste facilities and silos.
- Chemicals and fertilizers should be stored and cleaned up at least 400 feet from wells.
- Cesspools shouldn't be used and should be filled immediately.
- Pollutants of the greatest concern are nitrates, coliform bacteria, atrazine and lead.
- Reverse osmosis, distillation, chlorination and the use of activated carbon filters are all ways in which contaminants can be removed.

Barry Brooks, KDHE flood response coordinator says if a well owner suspects water contamination, county sanatarians or extension agents will test the water free of charge.

John Cramer, assistant director of public works/utilities for the city of Manhattan, thinks there is a chance that the aquifer that Manhattan draws most of its water from is contaminated by private wells.

"Realistically, there is probably not a good chance that there could be contamination," Cramer said. "There are not that many private wells located in the vicinity."

Over-the-counter drugs harm children

ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHICAGO — The millions of parents who try to treat their preschoolers' colds with over-the-counter medicines may do more harm than good, a researcher said Tuesday.

"For young children, there's been strikingly little research in the medical literature on the effectiveness of cough and cold medications," said epidemiologist Michael D. Kogan, of the National Center for Health Statistics.

"And what research there is has not shown them to be effective in relieving symptoms," he said by telephone from Rockville, Md.

The American Academy of Pediatrics recommends against giving any young child a cough or cold remedy without a doctor's permission, saying they can make cold symptoms worse and cause such side effects as drowsiness.

Yet more than one-third of 8,145 3-year-olds whose mothers were surveyed in 1991 had given the youngsters over-the-counter cough or cold medications in the 30 days before the survey, Kogan and his fellow researchers found.

Their survey, described in Wednesday's Journal of the American Medical Association, did not explore whether a doctor's permission had been obtained. Even if it had, an accompanying editorial suggested, doctors may have been appeasing parents.

A previous study in Maryland found the most frequent reasons pediatricians gave for recommending or prescribing cold medicines for children were parental request or insistence or that the parent was kept awake by the child, according to the editorial by Dr. Anne Gadomski of the University of Maryland in Baltimore.

The Nonprescription Drug Manufacturers Association released a statement Tuesday calling over-the-counter medicines safe and effective in proper doses.

But Kogan said, "Children can have adverse reactions to over-the-counter medications even when they're given according to directions."

SARA SMITH/Collegian

One of the over-the-counter remedies often given to preschoolers in the survey was antidiarrheal medicine. Researchers said 2.7 percent of the youngsters had received it in the 30 days before the interviews.

Antidiarrheals are not recommended for preschoolers without a doctor's OK, according to the pediatrics academy, which said they can often worsen intestinal injury and not stop dehydration if infection is present.

Mothers most likely to give over-the-counter medications to preschoolers were better-educated women with higher incomes, possibly because advertising targets them, researchers said. Mothers without insurance also were more likely than others to give over-the-counter drugs, the survey showed.

Kogan said the good news of the study was that aspirin use was rare, with a little more than 1 percent of the children taking it.

Aspirin is an effective fever reducer but is linked to such side effects as upset stomach, intestinal bleeding, and potentially fatal Reye syndrome, the academy said.

John M. Hunkins, senior in computer science, is prepared for transport to Memorial Hospital Wednesday evening after being struck by a car while riding his mountain bike.

Motorist hits bicyclist

Student injured, walks away with broken arm

RUSSELL FORTMEYER
Collegian

A bicyclist was hit by a car at 11th Street and Bluemont Avenue at about 7:30 p.m. Wednesday.

John M. Hunkins (who goes by the name Dudley) senior in computer science, was hit in the back wheel of his mountain bike while attempting to make a left turn north onto 11th Street off of eastbound Bluemont Avenue.

The accident practically shut down east-west movement on Bluemont Avenue, making it difficult for motorists.

Hunkins suffered a broken left arm, numerous scrapes, body pains and a small injury to his head. After the accident, Hunkins was wearing a neck brace in case of possible serious head injuries.

Fred Fay, freshman in forestry, witnessed the accident from the northeast corner of the intersection.

Hunkins had just pulled out of Arby's and was in the left turn lane when a car hit him from behind, Fay said.

"He fell back into the windshield and broke it," Fay said.

The windshield of the car was completely broken.

Janet Flanary, a staff member of the K-State Financial Aid Office and a friend of Hunkins, heard the accident from her apartment.

After rushing outside, Flanary saw Hunkins and recognized him.

"He walked out of the accident," Flanary said.

He told us to move his bike out of the street and then he laid down on the grass, Flanary said.

Bryan Mehl, a senior in math and also a friend of Hunkins, said the neck brace was just a cautionary device.

Mehl said Hunkins was conscious and doing fine.

Patrol Officer Cook, of the Riley County Police Department, said the investigation is ongoing.

Cook said, "I have several witnesses that have given the same scenario."

He said he was going to be talking to the driver of the vehicle that hit Hunkins.

"This was not a hit-and-run accident," Cook said.

The driver of the car was present at the scene but was not able to comment on the accident.

▶ RILEY COUNTY

Nobody wants jail in backyard

Overcrowding, standards, reasons for jail

MIKE HIND
Collegian

The site of the proposed new county jail has the county and some Manhattan home owners butting heads over the location.

The proposed jail complex, which will be on the Nov. 8 ballot, will give Riley County an area in which it can house 54 inmates with an expansion potential of 104 at a cost to the public of $8.3 million.

The reason for the new jail, said Wilton Thomas, Riley County commissioner, is because the current jail is overcrowded and doesn't meet the legal standards of the law.

"The current structure is not handicapped-accessible," Thomas said. "You can't put an elevator in the old structure. You can't carry the guy up the stairs. You've got to have an elevator, according to the Americans with Disabilities Act."

Thomas said that female inmates were being transferred to Junction City because of the overcrowding and that he has been told privately by attorneys that the county will be in court if adequate space is not found soon.

"If we get in court and have to build this on court-settlement bonds, it will cost a lot more money," Thomas said.

Debra Frey, Manhattan resident and member of jail CORP (Citizens Organized for Responsible Placement) said that the county doesn't comply with any of the criteria set forth in the Small Jail Design Guide.

The guide is published by the U.S. Department of Justice and lists recommendations for the construction of U.S. jails.

The guide recommends the Riley County facilities to be built on a minimum of seven acres. The new jail will be built on a site of 2.1 buildable acres, Frey said.

Alvan Johnson, director of the Riley County Police Department, admitted that the people who drafted the small jail design guide were some of the top jail architects in the country, but that their suggestions didn't have to meet any budget requirements.

"If we had the capacity to do anything we wanted, these recommendations would be fine," Johnson said. "We are building a jail with a limited amount of money."

Frey said that the option of a multi-jurisdictional jail (two counties sharing one jail) was something that the county should examine.

"This would cut the construction and administrative costs in half," Frey said.

Pottawatomie County commissioner Richard Carlson said that the multi-jurisdictional jail had not been discussed by the Pottawatomie County commission.

Thomas points out that the jail sits on county land, and the Seven Dolors school bought the land around the county lot 35 years after the jail was built.

"All those homes came in there knowing the jail was there," Thomas said.

Thomas said the new jail will take the whole lot, which includes the part used as a playground by the Seven Dolors School.

The county turned part of the lot over to the city in 1954 with the agreement that the city could use it as long as it maintained it. The city in turn let the school use it.

"The school began using it as a recreational area and maintaining it," Johnson said. "So in a way, there is no breaking of a contract."

Kathy O'Neil, whose three children attend the Seven Dolors School, feels that the expanded jail should be an issue that concerns everyone in Manhattan and not just those in the immediate area.

"Escapes can happen and will," O'Neil said. "What happens when they don't fit there anymore?"

"They keep saying the word 'jail complex.' It's just a flowery word for penitentiary. I'm not opposed to a new jail, just not at that site."

Prostitutes exist in Muslim cities

TAMARA JORDAN
Collegian

Prostitution among Muslim Hausa women and how it exists in a Muslim society inspired the research of a guest speaker who lectured in the Religion in Culture class Wednesday.

Barbara Hammond, a K-State alumna and a graduate student in cultural anthropology at Northwestern University, presented her research as one of the events of Racial/Ethnic Harmony Week.

She said her focus of study is Muslim women in West African societies and women's work.

Hammond spoke on life choices among Muslim Hausa women in Northern Nigeria.

Among the Muslims of Kano, Nigeria, where Hammond's study was done, she said prostitution is translated as karuwanci, the term used to describe the unIslamic, deviant culture of Muslim Hausa women.

Hammond said karuwanci is an option for a Muslim Hausa woman when she divorces, instead of taking the three-month divorce period, called iddah.

If a woman chooses iddah, she goes back to her father's household and lives there to ensure that she is not pregnant. The women are labeled as going into the world, Hammond said.

Kano is one of the cities where women who have chosen karuwanci as an option after divorce go, she said.

They go to "houses of women" that consist of a mother of the household (usually an older woman), the women themselves, and men, called dan doudu, who prostitute the women.

"My argument is that karuwanci is a form of work for women that offers economic autonomy and status," Hammond said.

She said she believes by the western definition of prostitution — Muslim Hausa women do not commercialize or commodify sex.

"Muslim Hausa women court men, similar to what women essentially do before marrying, except the Muslim women are divorced," she said.

They rely on sexual activities for their livelihood because they are cut off from their family, she said. They look for their own men as opposed to having arranged marriages by a father or spouse and are essentially on their own.

Hammond said karuwanci is not accepted as Islamic behavior and is associated with bori, a deviant religious culture.

These women are often scapegoats for such disasters as the drought in Africa and are married in and out of the society, Hammond said.

Hammond said she is studying two research explanations of Muslim Hausa women activity by Abner Cohen and Renee Pittin.

Hammond said another researcher, Renee Pittin, found that there were several reasons why the women choose karuwanci.

Sometimes, they disagree about the marriage (women marry as early as 14 years old), she said. Poverty (their fathers may not be able to afford to keep them in the home anymore) and childlessness may be other factors.

Martin Ottenheimer, professor of sociology, anthropology and social work, who teaches the class, said the plight of Muslim Hausa women gives a good background for the discussion of how religions deal with deviancy.

"The Religion in Culture class is discussing religion and the influence in deviancy," Ottenheimer said.

Kathiellen Gilligan, sophomore in American ethnic studies and anthropology, said the lecture was very informative.

"Ms. Hammond had a lot of area to cover in a short period of time, but she hit the major parts and explained them," Gilligan said.

Jawwad Abdulhaqq, a Muslim student, had one criticism about the lecture.

"I think Ms. Hammond should have made the distinction earlier that the behavior of the Muslim Hausa women is not Islamic but very much unIslamic," Abdulhaqq said.

Renaissance performers entertainment for the family

"From the Royal Court to the street performers, there are many different levels to see," Reinhart said.

"The Royal Court is the only scripted and scheduled act. The rest do improvisation through the day," she said.

The characters are approved by a committee, and once the street performers sign a contract that binds them to the seven-week festival, the performance begins.

Lorraine Kliesen, senior in architectural engineering at K-State, is a fifth-year veteran at the festival.

"I play Rowan Wildecent Laurel Loxley, the Deutchess of Wellington. It is a mutation of my first character five years ago. I was a mute at the front gate," Kliesen said.

The corp of actors and actresses Kliesen has become friends with put together a family history and started a story of their own that enabled them to change characters.

"We put together a new twist on our family tree just last weekend at the Pizza Hut," she said.

Kliesen wears a dress designed by a Kansas City seamstress that weighs about 25 pounds and after a day in the mud weighs about 35 pounds.

"I've worked on the beading of my dress since April. I've put in at least 100 hours of work, and it's still not done," she said.

Performers are responsible for their costume, whether they make it or buy it.

"Some of the Royal Court has dresses made from $40-a-foot fabric," Kliesen said.

The Royal Court is actually paid quite well to help compensate for the costumes and the script memorization, Reinhart said.

"The first year you perform for free, as an apprentice, then as your character grows, you're able to make a wage that ranges from $2 to $5 a day," Kliesen said.

Even though it all seems fun, the actors and actresses work hard during their weekends.

"We usually do a four-hour shift where you get about a 10-minute break, long enough to visit the privy (bathroom)," Kliesen said.

"It's hard work. You must stay on top of things the entire time, trying to guess what reaction the patron will give you and how you will react to it," Kliesen said.

"As long as you're in costume, you must stay in character even if your shift is over. That means the dialect, the way you eat and the alcohol," Kliesen said.

"If you're caught with alcohol on your breath, you will be fired, even if you're playing a drunk," she said.

Kliesen is taking off until the last weekend for her full-time job but plans to be at the festival for the final weekend when the cast party takes place.

"I'll be there from Saturday morning until Sunday evening, not leaving the grounds the whole time," Kliesen said.

"It is the greatest time. I'll do it until I can't anymore," she said.

Patrons can enjoy the activities of the Renaissance while munching on a turkey leg and drinking a mug of ale. They can ride a dragon or enjoy a strolling minstrel.

There are shows by the dozen and acts in the street from juggling to sword fights.

Michelle Corum, a senior at the University of Missouri, said she enjoyed the hawk show and the treasure hunt.

"We all won a medallion at the end. It was great following the 13 clues we were given," Corum said.

This was Corum's second year at the festival, and she said it rained both times, but she and her boyfriend didn't mind.

"The beer and food are so good you forget the mud and just have a great time," Corum said.

There are two weekends left to enjoy at Bonner Springs: Oct. 8-9, which is a Musical Harvest, and Oct. 15-16, which is themed Market, Merchants and Artisans.

Tickets are being sold at the Union Program Council office on the third floor of the Union. Buying through UPC takes the gate price of $10.95 down to $8.50.

The festival is just 15 minutes from downtown Kansas City, Kan. It is located in Bonner Springs, Kan., just off Interstate-70. Follow the banners and signs to the festival gates.

"They'll see the bikes at night and remember them in the morning.

"I think you have to look at Aggieville in two ways," he said. "During the day, it's a shopping and restaurant area, and in the nighttime, which is totally different, you've got the club and bar scene."

The taverns and retail stores compliment each other, Patricia Yeager, owner of Patricia's Undercover, said.

"One of the best things about the business is the neighbors," she said. "We're a pretty tight community, and we work well together. There's a certain camaraderie."

"I think it's the place to be. It's pretty secure economically, with the campus nearby and generally there's a real positive feeling about Aggieville," she said.

"Aggieville has the reputation of being fun. That spirit rubs off on you and keeps you young."

CATEGORIES

To help you find what you are looking for, the classified ads have been arranged by category and sub-category. All categories are marked by one of the large images, and sub-categories are preceded by a number designation.

TIPS FOR WRITING A CLASSIFIED AD

Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.

Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.

Consider including the price. This tells buyers if they are looking at something in their price range.

WE DO NOT USE PHONE NUMBERS OR LAST NAMES IN PERSONALS.

out to watch it on television.

"It will be interesting to see who comes out," he said.

Scoreboard's will be opening at 10:30 a.m. for the serious fans.

"We're not kidding around," Shaun Roberts, bartender and senior in mechanical engineering, said.

"We've taken reservations for tables," he said. "I expect one in, one out until game time."

Scoreboard's will be offering $1.75 bottles and $1.75 Zimas.

Chad Shields, senior in advertising and marketing, said he'll probably be at Scoreboard's with a bunch of friends, just watching the game.

Get there early.

Lucky Brewgrille is having a big Corona Party/Game Day Party starting at noon.

Bob Leetch, owner of Lucky's, said the party starts early so as to allow for the people driving up for the game.

The actual game party starts at 6 p.m., Leetch said.

Among the festivities at Lucky's are 50-cent hot dogs, T-shirt and hat giveaways, $1.75 Corona's, and a real, live, female Corona model.

Leetch said he expects a packed crowd.

There is no cover charge.

Rowdy Trouty's will be having T-shirt giveaways and schooner races at halftime, Bill Porter, co-owner and bartender, said.

Schooner races involve seeing who can drink a skinner, a 32-ounce beer, the fastest.

Jeff Barrett will sing at Champions directly after the game, Jeff Rome, owner and sophomore in aviation and criminal justice, said.

TW Longhorns will have the game on a big-screen TV and will offer 50-cent purple-passion shots, quarter draws and food specials, Troy Warnken, manager and owner, said.

Silverado's, Bobby T's, In The Bleachers and Auntie Mae's will offer the TV broadcast of the game.

Ford Hall is having numerous floor parties for the televised game.

Catherine Joyce, junior in civil engineering, said the ninth floor had planned a popcorn and snack game party in the lobby.

Goodnow Hall has a viewing party, with food, planned for the second floor.

Darren McElfresh, Goodnow Hall president and sophomore in electrical engineering, said he was trying to get a hold of a projection television.

Gretchen Ricker, president of the Alpha Chi Omega sorority and senior in elementary education, said she knows of several girls going to the game from her house.

Fellow Alpha Chi Lynn Balthrop, sophomore in accounting and marketing, said she knew of 33 Alpha Chis going to Lawrence.

"Oh, god, we're all so excited," Balthrop said. "We have made big banners on sheets and we all have purple T-shirts with K-State and our letters on them."

Among several students studying Wednesday night in Union Station, Brett Platt, senior in computer engineering, said he felt the administration messed up when it didn't call off Friday classes for the Thursday game.

Shawn Wichman, sophomore in agriculture economics and animal science and industry, said after work, he planned on attending a friend's party.

Student charges $2 for palm reading spare change in exchange for a palm reading.

"Three years ago, I would always go to a park in Wichita because there were always people around. If I read someone's palm, and it freaked them out, soon 10 people were crowded around me," she said.

She said that although other palm readers charge about $15 for a prediction, she only charges $2 for a palm reading because students in college generally have a lack of funds.

"One time I went to someone who charged $15 to read palms and she was so generic I wanted to beat her up. I thought if this is the competition, then I can make a lot of money. For now though, I'm only charging $2 because most people don't have any more than that," she said.

Getz said she uses her psychic abilities to evaluate people's personalities and character traits.

"When I first meet people, I look their palms over and see what they're all about. The way their palms are shaped shows the most important thing in their life, and the love lines show what kind of people they are attracted to. If they have a strong addiction line, I'm usually attracted to them because I'm a recovering alcoholic myself," she said.

Getz said when she first started doing the palm readings, she concentrated on the basics, such as the lines in the hands.

Now that she is more experienced, she examines the importance of the entire palm during her readings.

She first looks at the lines and then as something comes into her head, she gets in tune with it and starts to make predictions.

"Palms have energy. Every once in a while, everything is there and I can see into someone's soul. I usually start saying stuff and I have no idea where it's coming from," she said.

She feels like she was given the gift to read palms as a way to help people and as a therapeutic tool to help her recover from her alcohol-abuse problem.

"I think it's something I've been given to provide a service for people and tell them what is going to come between them and their ambitions. I'm helping others and at the same time helping myself because I'm giving something to someone else," she said.

K-State apparel, rain gear selling fast at local stores

Place in Manhattan Town Center, said sales there doubled on Wednesday from what they were the previous day.

"We've had a lot of people getting rain gear," Meyer said, "and we just got a lot more in."

Nettquetta Sheppard, Assistant Manager of Wildcat Spirit, said sales just started picking up Wednesday night, but she is expecting a bigger rush today.

"We'll sell a lot of purple sweats and t-shirts," Sheppard said.

Sheppard also reported receiving many requests for an item not many K-State fans would think to buy.

"We've had a lot of people who want to buy stuffed Jayhawks," she said. "They want to put a noose around its neck."

Sheppard said Wildcat Spirit sold out of rain gear before the last K-State home game.

There is a 40 percent chance of thunderstorms for tonight's game.

Most of the stores said they were expecting a lot of last-minute business today. So if anyone still needs that purple umbrella, get to the stores early.

AGGIEVILLE — The cheers of Manhattan were in Aggieville for the K-State vs. Kansas game Thursday night.

"This is the place to be to watch the game, be with friends and get beer served to you," Dolly Alonso, sophomore in theater, said.

Rusty's Last Chance Restaurant & Saloon had its televisions tuned in to the game on ESPN and the surround sound tuned in to KMKF-FM 101.5 K-Rock.

"Even though they supposedly have surround sound, I can't hear the announcer," Tara Maniaci, sophomore in pre-nursing, said.

Sometimes students just want to go where they can get a tattoo, get loaded and get away from homework.

"I came here to watch the game and get tattoos," Maniaci said. She said for 75 cents she got a cartoon tattoo out of the vending machine in the bathroom.

Booze won out over tattoos for others.

"I just wanted to get loaded," Dan Gililland, freshman in pre-health, said.

Others liked to mix their booze with friends.

"It's fun because there are more friends and beer," Jana Wolff, senior in social science, said.

Some said they just thought that Last Chance was a cheaper and closer alternative.

"We came to Last Chance because we didn't have to drive 100 miles or buy tickets," Crystal Turgeon, freshman in pre-law, said.

Still, others came to the bar to get away.

"This is much better than studying," Heather Adams, senior in engineering, said.

Regardless of why, Last Chance workers were glad they came.

"Tonight is a lot of fun, because the spirit is great, even though the tips aren't," Jeff Hawkinson, Last Chance waiter, said.

Purple paraphernalia filled the bar. Last Chance added to purple pride by serving purple beer.

With each K-State touchdown, the crowd got louder and jumped around more.

Smoke flew, colored lights flickered, and people danced around and threw their arms up in victory.

Patrons yelled at players like they were at the table next to them and would listen to the suggestion of those under the influence.

"The more they drink, the louder they get," Adams said.

When players landed hard and didn't get up right away, students wondered if the psychic's prediction would come true. Steve, a psychic from Kansas City, predicted a career-ending injury to a K-State player, but it did not come true.

At halftime, Last Chance sounded sirens, and patrons pounded the tables with their hands and beer bottles.

Not even rain dampened the spirits in Aggieville.

The rain started pouring during halftime. People migrated in and made Last Chance packed. The front doors were left open.

As the game progressed, the bar cheered for K-State's good plays and drank through K-State's flaws.

When the game ended, Last Chance sounded like it was the stroke of dawn on New Year's Eve.

Cats rule field, students the hill

MEMORIAL STADIUM, LAWRENCE — From the very beginning, both the Wildcat and Jayhawk fans talked the talk.

"The Cats are going to a bowl game again this year, and KU's going to be sitting at home watching us," K-Stater Chris Dierks, sophomore in construction science and management, said.

The Hawkers sure didn't agree.

"Actually, I'm kind of surprised K-State showed up," Mitch Dickson, a KU fan from Overland Park, said.

"Obviously, the Cats bought off the referees, but I predict the final score to be KU 24, K-State nothing," he said.

But as the game progressed, only the fans in purple kept talking. Dickson and his fellow Jayhawks were at a loss for words as the Cats took control of the contest.

"I don't want to talk about it," KU alumnus Rob Cleavinger said.

In fact, some Jayhawk fans, like Brad Metzger, of Topeka, grew increasingly bitter toward their team as the game progressed.

"So far, the game kind of sucks," he said. "KU doesn't seem to be able to do anything with the ball."

While there wasn't much joy among the crimson and blue fans in the stands, the mood was entirely different among the Cats fans already celebrating on the hill at halftime.

"This is just a great atmosphere for football tonight," K-Stater Tim Shearer, sophomore in milling science, said. "I love being up on the hill. You've got so many people up here, it's just a good time for both schools."

While the Hawk fans on the hill weren't enjoying the game as much as Shearer, supporters from both schools were out pre-partying together before the kickoff.

"You should have seen it at the bar earlier," David Case, K-State senior in chemical engineering, said.

"There were lots of Jayhawks out at the bars, but man, there was just a sea of purple, just a hellacious sea of purple, and having all that fan support is why we're dominating this game," he said.

Another Cats fan also noticed something different about the K-State support in Lawrence this year.

"The thing that amazes me is how the Cats are down here in force," Charles Wagon, senior in nuclear engineering, said.

"I've never seen K-State fans this enthusiastic about a game. I hope we continue to do this throughout the season," Wagon said.

While it was the Cats who ultimately walked away with the 21-13 victory, there was one Jayhawk fan who wasn't upset with the outcome.

"I'm excited about this game, because I'm going to win money on it," KU freshman Jason Lyons said.

"I bet against Kansas," he said.

Peterson recuperating

Jeff Peterson, student body president, and 10 members of Student Governing Association watched Thursday night's K-State-KU football game from a unique vantage point.

Peterson and friends rooted for K-State from a lounge at Wesley Medical Center in Wichita, where Peterson is recovering from surgery.

Doctors operated on Peterson on Thursday morning to treat an infected pressure sore in his abdomen. The surgery began at 7:30 a.m. and was finished an hour later.

Many of the doctors in the operating room were KU graduates, and they used the game-day rivalry to lighten the mood.

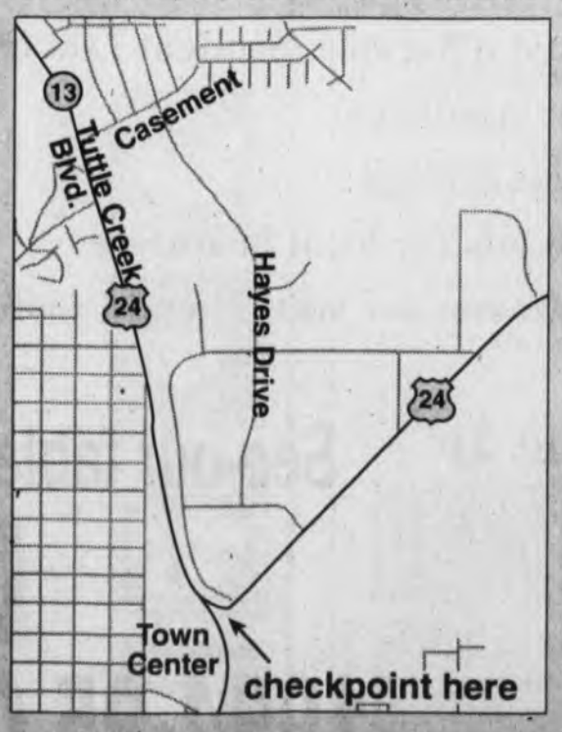
"When I came into surgery, they were kidding me about the 'Rock Chalk Jayhawk' chant,'" Peterson said. "They also kept asking me if I was wearing purple."

Doctors didn't put Peterson under anesthesia during surgery.

"They gave me a sedative so that I would sleep," Peterson said. "I was asleep for about 40 minutes of the hour surgery, but I was awake the rest of the time."

Peterson said he is looking forward to moving to Wesley's rehabilitation center for recovery.

"There is more freedom there and more fitness rooms where I can stay in shape," Peterson said.



Peterson entered the hospital Sept. 20. He said he hopes to be back in Manhattan during the first week of November.

Until then, he is keeping in constant contact with members of SGA, said Brad Finkeldei, student body vice president.

"We talk to Jeff two or three times a day, and he is doing all the work that he can from his hospital room," Finkeldei said.

"I am doing a lot of the meetings here and representing K-State," he said.

SOBRIETY CHECKPOINT LOCATION

The Riley County Police Department announced that a sobriety checkpoint is scheduled for the nighttime hours on Saturday, Oct. 8, on U.S. Highway 24. This is the fifth in a series of checkpoints scheduled for Riley County.

The checkpoint sites are chosen based on the frequency of alcohol-related crashes and the number of impaired drivers stopped by officers there before.

▶ PANEL DISCUSSION TO UNITE HOMOSEXUAL AND RELIGIOUS COMMUNITIES

Religious and homosexual communities have traditionally sat on opposite sides of the fence when the sexual-preference issue is raised.

The Bisexual and Gay and Lesbian Society is hoping to bridge the gap between these communities. BGLS will have a panel discussion titled "Is Homosexuality a Sin?" at 7 p.m. Monday in Seaton 132.

The Rev. Don Fallon, coordinator of religious activities at K-State, and Cindy Meyer, United Methodist campus minister, will lead the discussion.

"The purpose of the panel is to give affirmation to the gay and lesbian community," Fallon said.

He said recent studies show that suicide is the No. 1 cause of death in the gay community.

"I am aware of the need for pastoral care and support for gay and lesbian people coming out," Fallon said.

Fallon said he and Meyer will discuss the Christian perspective on homosexuality. Fallon said the Christian community has rejected the homosexual community in the past.

"However, in recent years, there has been an understanding and acceptance of homosexuality," Fallon said.

Meyer said she thinks the religious community and society at large seem to be divided by the issue of homosexuality.

"It's not a cut-and-dry issue from any religious perspective," she said. "Many religious communities can and will be accepting of homosexuals."

A list of places where people can get more information about homosexuality will be given at the discussion, she said.

Meyer said campus ministers and University Counseling Services are willing to help people who are struggling with their sexuality.

▶ LATIN FIESTA TO KICK OFF LATIN AMERICAN AWARENESS MONTH

A fiesta of Latin American food and dancing will kick off Hispanic Awareness Month on Saturday night.

The K-State Hispanic American Leadership Organization will sponsor a potluck dinner at 6 p.m. Saturday in the International Student Center, Arleen Baiges, public relations chairperson for HALO, said.

"All you need to bring to the potluck is a covered dish to share," Baiges, senior in industrial engineering, said.

Members of HALO are encouraged to bring an authentic Latin American dish. However, those attending can bring whatever they want, Baiges said.

There will be plenty of live entertainment throughout the evening, she said.

"Trio Atzlan, a band from Kansas City, has three guitarists," Baiges said. "They play mostly Latin American ballads."

Baiges said she booked the bands through K-State alumni connections.

Taller Borincano, a band from Fort Riley, will play Puerto Rican music, Baiges said.

In addition to the bands, several dancing groups will perform.

The Puerto Rico Baila Folkloric Dance Group, which is made up of K-State students, will perform, Baiges said.

"Not everyone in the dance group is from Puerto Rico," Baiges said. "We have students from Argentina and Costa Rica, too."

Baiges said it's difficult to keep the group going because each year new people join and have to be taught all the dances.

Mexican folkloric dancing and Costa Rican dancing also will be performed, Baiges said.

"We just want everyone to come in and have a really good time," Baiges said.

▶ FALL POTTERY EXHIBIT IN WILLARD GALLERY A CROSS SECTION OF STYLES

The K-State Pottery Guild's new fall exhibit in the relatively new Willard Gallery is interestingly varied.

The Guild, made up of K-State ceramics students, is host to an exhibit of the students' work every semester, Yoshiro Ikeda, professor of art and ceramicist, said.

The exhibit of ceramics is a nice cross-section of styles, to say the least.

"Lungs," the work of Brian Bays, junior in fine arts, is gruesomely figured with some obvious references to disease and adverse effects from human vices.

"Lungs" has been blown up into a larger-than-life rendition of human lungs.

Bays' social commentary on the way humans treat themselves or, perhaps, the gritty interior of people, is very in-your-face.

"Jester Teapot" and "Oliphant," by Mary Ann Clark, senior in fine arts, are humorously rendered. "Oliphant" is, well, in the shape of an elephant.

The "Dotte" cityscape, a plate with organic shapes glazed onto the surface by Nick Tomasic, senior in fine arts, deals with the artist's home life in inner Kansas City, Kan., in Wyandotte County, hence "Dotte."

Wyandotte County doesn't have a very good reputation in the Kansas City area, Tomasic said.

Tomasic said he wanted to show that something of beauty can come out of Wyandotte County.

The art department moved to Willard Hall for the Farrell Library construction, so a new gallery was required.

The Guild used to present exhibits in the Art Building, Ikeda said.

The exhibit consists of the major works by each member of the Pottery Guild, Ikeda said.

By exhibiting in Willard Hall, the Guild gets more exposure, he said.

Ikeda said he has seen chemistry students in the gallery at times.

"A lot of people don't know the gallery exists," he said.

Most of the works are for sale.

The exhibit of work will be through Oct. 21 at the Willard Gallery (Willard 116). The Gallery is open 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Friday.

SCHINDLER'S LIST OF LIFE

TODD FEEBACK/Collegian

More than 1,000 people attended Zev Kedem's lecture Thursday afternoon. The audience overflowed into the K-State Union Courtyard, where two closed-circuit televisions were set up.

CHRISTI WRIGHT
Collegian

"Schindler's List" gave Zev Kedem the language to break his 50 years of silence and relate his story of the Holocaust to the rest of the world.

Kedem spoke to a group of more than 1,000 people Thursday in the K-State Union Forum Hall.

Kedem said being a consultant on the film "Schindler's List" made him relive his childhood.

"I felt like it was the story of my childhood life. Steven Spielberg made a film about me and 1,100 people," he said.

Kedem spoke about his experiences as a child during the Holocaust, while beside him, a man translated his story into American Sign Language.

Kedem was born in 1934 in Poland to a wealthy Jewish family who spoke Polish and German. By September 1939, he said the Germans had taken over Poland, and the family went to hide with his grandparents in an apartment in the ghetto.

At that time, the only way to avoid the German Gestapo was to have a work permit, he said.

"The work permit was a passport to life. But no child under the age of 13 or an adult over 45 could have one," Kedem said.

In 1943, when Kedem was 9 years old, the Gestapo came to deport the entire ghetto. As the other Jews were being loaded into trucks, Kedem and his family hid in the top level of the apartment behind a pigeon coop.

"We heard the people being dragged off. We heard them go into the children's hospital and empty the building," Kedem said.

"The children who could walk went out to the trucks, and then we heard systematic shots being fired. They were killing the children who were too feeble and sick to get out of bed. They were all being shot."

At the end of the day, the ghetto was empty. Of the 20,000 people living there that morning, around 1,000 remained. There was silence in the community until the Gestapo started searching apartments.

"My grandparents both had bottles of poison they would drink if we were found," Kedem said. "I remember begging them not to leave us to the Germans. They told me to be quiet if I wanted to live."

At that moment, Kedem said he learned to internalize his emotions. He knew that to survive he would have to be quiet.

TODD FEEBACK/Collegian

After his lecture, several members of the audience approached Kedem to autograph their program sheets.

To keep him from being taken away, Kedem's mother smuggled him into a neighborhood concentration camp.

Once inside the camp, Kedem said he saw the horror.

"The Germans were destroying, degrading and reducing people to levels below human beings and almost below animals," he said.

The camp was built on top of a Jewish cemetery, and the entrance was paved with the tombstones. The entrance was to remind the prisoners of people stepping on their past culture, he said.

It wasn't enough to tread through the graves.

The Nazis had the Jewish slaves open every grave and take all the jewelry, including pulling the gold teeth out of the corpses' skulls, he said.

Since no one under the age of 13 was supposed to be in the camp, 9-year-old Kedem went to work in the brush factory to keep out of sight. He stayed in the factory around two years, until he was sent to work for Oskar Schindler.

Schindler developed empathy for his workers, Kedem said.

"In a weird world that celebrated death, he recognized the Jews as humans. Schindler used the corrupt ways, creativity and ingenuity against the monster machine dedicated to death."

When the Russians started rushing on Poland, the Germans needed to move the camps. Kedem's adoptive father was on Schindler's list and insisted that Kedem be placed on it, too.

"Around 1,100 people were selected in the direction of life, and the rest of the people were sent to Auschwitz to die," he said.

Even though Kedem was on the list, he was picked up and taken to Auschwitz to be with the other 3.5 million prisoners, because he was out in public playing with his friends.

It was in Auschwitz that he saw his mother in the selection line with the other women from Schindler's list and watched them being loaded up to be taken to a safer camp.

Kedem remained in Auschwitz and another concentration camp until May 1945, when he was liberated by the American army.

At the time of his liberation, Kedem was only 11 years old.

He stayed at a displaced-persons camp until he went to England to school.

He graduated from Oxford as an engineer and went to work in Israel. There, he married and had four children.

Kedem said an important thing he learned from his experiences was to teach his children not to be vulnerable to a dominant group of people.

"I want them to know their own rights and to respect the rights of others," he said.

Kedem said he thought it was a

IN OUR OPINION

By the Collegian Editorial Board

Police need to be more understanding

Manhattan is blessed to be a relatively safe place; however, some students are feeling that their safety is in question.

Xiao Xiao Wen was riding her bike Sept. 19 when she was involved in an accident. The K-State Police, who were called to the scene, didn't file a report because the police found no damage to the car, bike or any of the parties involved.

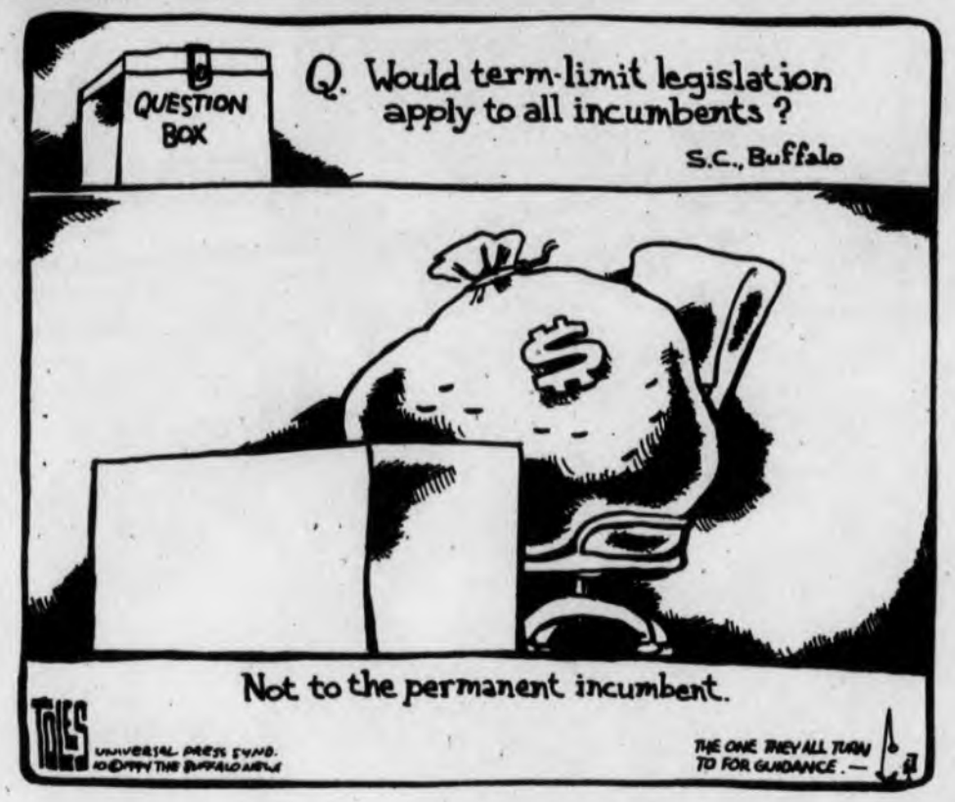
During the next few days, Wen discovered the bike was damaged, and she began to have pains. She needed to see a doctor.

She made several efforts to file a report, only to be overwhelmed by bureaucracy and legal loopholes.

She had enough trauma without being treated in an uncompassionate manner.

Our campus police officers need to be aware of the fact that not everyone in Manhattan is from the United States. We need to extend a little understanding and consideration to these members of our community.

While K-State is celebrating Racial/Ethnic Harmony Week, the police apparently are not. The spirit of Racial/Ethnic Harmony Week is to extend a helping hand to those from other countries and welcome them to America, while celebrating their diversity.



Foreign students shouldn't need to purchase a small law library to survive a year of school in Manhattan.

It is doubtful experiences like these will grant Wen fond memories of the United States.

We can only hope that under the new police chief, acts such as this will no longer occur.

We need a breath of fresh air from the law enforcement in Manhattan.

TOLES

Anybody listening?

If the K-State campus were a corporation, it would have declared bankruptcy years ago.

One of the key elements to a good corporation is good communication at all levels.

Not only does K-State lack those communications skills, it isn't even smooth enough to cover the flaws resulting from those deficiencies.

RUSSELL FORTMEYER

There are many glaring examples of these problems that have already surfaced this semester.

As an arts-and-entertainment writer, I have worked with Union Program Council many times. This year, I covered the problems that arose after the cancellation of the Welcome Back Concert and the ensuing denial of new funds to DB92 for a new concert.

This got me thinking.

The reason past UPC concerts and events have failed is because UPC doesn't really know what the K-State student body wants to see.

For that past decade, UPC has spun out of control by offering musical and informational events that have targeted no one on this campus.

How can you serve constituents if you don't know what they like and dislike?

Well, much to the credit of Ann Claussen, director of Union Program Council, things are slowly changing.

UPC is doing some surveying of students this year, and all I have to say is ... it's about time! Claussen has been at UPC for four years, so why wasn't this done sooner? (Maybe the recent addition of more student money to UPC has got them hot under the collar —hmmm).

What about the K-State Police? Oh, boy.

Not only do these people not ask students what they like and dislike, they feel perfectly fine enforcing rules and regulations that, in most cases, don't reflect student opinion.

I don't think I need to go into great detail about the recent biking problems on campus. I want to know why the K-State Police haven't polled students. (Don't say they don't have time — they have time to stop people for going 23 mph in a 20-mph zone.) Of course, they don't have time to write tickets for illegally parked guests of President Jon Wefald.

The campus police are slowly turning into a dinosaur. Perhaps a comprehensive student evaluation of the necessity of certain campus police functions would be in order?

Well, I'll cut some slack for campus police because K-State has a new director of campus police, Ronnie Grice.

Finally, and probably most disturbing, is the recent administrative decision to tear down the Farrell Library construction wall. The nerve the administration had to tear down a wall (with some minor, relatively clean graffiti) before consulting the students of this campus is one of the most selfish acts performed by the administration in the past decade (not counting any unpublicized salary increases).

Not only had some students from the art department planned on using the wall as a canvas for their work, the College of Architecture and Design had planned on painting a mural of the finished Farrell design on it, too.

The students involved in those projects were denied self-expression by the very people who are supposed to ensure an open, self-expressive environment for students at this campus. Not once did the administration consult students on the ultimate fate of the plagued wall. They simply swept the wall under the proverbial doormat of K-State in order to impress some parents for Family Weekend.

It's discomforting to know that the administration of this campus can simply stifle student expression when it wants too. I'm surprised they're letting a new art museum be built on this campus. What if we get a Mapplethorpe exhibit (highly unlikely, though)? Will the administration squash it?

UPC changed its policies. Campus police changed its director.

Maybe Anderson Hall needs a change. Maybe the real dinosaur on this campus has a house on campus.

Russell Fortmeyer is a sophomore in architectural engineering.

▶ RAPE

Fighing back is not always safe

Dear Editor,

I would like to respond to an article titled "Self-Defense a Must for Women," written by Scott Allen Miller in the Oct. 3 Collegian. I am a detective for the Riley County Police Department and have investigated rapes for more than eight years. I find the advice given by Miller for women to use self-defense to prevent rapes to be overly generalized and simplified, as well as incomplete.

A person who is not knowledgeable about rape and rapists should not be giving advice to women on how to prevent rapes. There is not just one type of rapist, and different rapists respond and react to different stimuli. A statement in the article says that "criminals respect force and pain, not reason and compassion." If Scott had attended any rape-investigation training, he would know that this is not an accurate statement to make. While some rapists might stop if force is used against them, others will respond violently, physically injuring or even killing the woman in the process. To tell a woman she should fight back if she is raped, makes those women who chose not to fight back and survive the attack feel they are somehow responsible because they didn't do what everyone tells them they should.

Each woman must do whatever she needs to do in the situation at hand. There is not one sure-fire answer that will work in all situations. If fighting looks like it will work, that's great. But if the rapist is holding a knife to your throat and threatens to kill you, then doing what it takes to come out alive is the best action you can take.

▶ CHRISTIANITY

Columnist ignores the facts

Dear Editor,

Once again, Mr. Seabourn has sermonized on the evils of Christianity, and once again he has gotten it wrong. So, let me correct him on a couple of things. First, Brad, you are in no way the glorious defender of the Constitution that you have somehow deluded yourself into thinking you are. No Christian is telling you to "shut up" because they are mind-control agents. Still, less would they tell you to shut up because they are afraid of you. The very concept of any Christian fearing your puerile attacks is laughable at best. So, why are Christians upset when they read your columns? It is simply that you are offensive!

While I grant that you have the right to say anything (no matter how uninformed you choose to be) and to say it however you like, you can also expect us, as Christians, to exercise that right as well. When you compare all Christianity to one small group that performs ritual self-mutilation, just because both groups believe in a Supreme Being, you do us a grave injustice. How can we help but wish to correct your ignorance? I could also compare you, as an atheist, to Josef Stalin. If I did, I would hope that someone would correct that kind of gross error. I would also expect you to be very offended.

Second, Christianity does not teach that doubt is a sin. It does not look down on questions. This point is here academic, because I have never once seen a question in any of your columns! A question presupposes a wish for an answer. You already know all the answers and do not wish to be confused with the facts. You do not question anything, and you assert that your right to "free speech" has been violated whenever anyone dares to tell you that your "facts" are wrong.

As for the charge that no one will defend the beliefs you rail against, hear me now. I defend Christianity by saying that I believe that humanity is inherently sinful. If you doubt that, don't take my word for it; look around! I believe that Jesus Christ was God, and died to redeem us from our sin. I believe that God cannot be fully understood, because, by definition, he is omniscient, and we are not. You are not required to agree.

▶ HOMELESSNESS

Program has its faults, but is still good

Dear Editor,

I write to thank Erin Mansur-Smith for her recent column, "Homeless Lifestyle is Hard to Recreate." I appreciate her insight as one of the millions of people who have endured life without a home. She brings a valuable perspective to our campus.

Ms. Mansur-Smith's fear and concern are justified. "American Urban Plunge 101" cannot replicate the experience of life on the streets. The Plunge serves only to bring participants into limited connection with some realities of homelessness, of life as mere survival.

The Plunge is facilitated by the National Coalition for the Homeless, a federation of individuals, local service agencies and national organizations committed to ending homelessness. The organization works through public education, policy advocacy and grassroots organizing.

Urban Plunge serves primarily as an educational tool. However, organizers hope that participants will be motivated to act. We hope they will volunteer in shelters and soup kitchens and become activists for public policy that addresses immediate needs and systematic problems. Maybe they'll join the Coalition. Maybe they'll form a local organization. Maybe the next time they encounter a homeless person, they'll befriend him or her instead of turning away.

I'd like to think participants in the 1994 KSU Urban Plunge will be so strongly influenced by their experience that they'll all become committed to the causes of helping and empowering the homeless and eliminating homelessness. As something of a skeptic, I doubt that will happen; as a person of faith, I live in hope. I hope that no one will think this is only a game. I hope that when students walk away from the Plunge they will walk into a commitment to seek justice for all people, including the homeless. I hope that they will recognize their responsibility to actively participate in improving the world.

I also hope that the Plunge and the dialogue surrounding it all reach beyond the participants to our campus community. All are invited to a "Forum on Homelessness" at noon Monday, Oct. 10, in the Union Courtyard. Speakers will include Michael Stoops, field organizer, National Coalition for the Homeless; Ron Zerrar, executive director of the Manhattan Emergency Shelter and Plunge participants. Your questions are invited. It will offer an opportunity to learn about the issues and how each of us can become involved and make a difference.

Green Day comparision not a good one

Dear Editor,

We would like to address a problem that we have noticed time and time again. Andrew Tomb is NOT a music critic.

All he does is give his very misinformed opinion about music. If he is going to continue writing columns for the Collegian, we would appreciate it if his column would be placed where it belongs: the most unobtrusive place on the Opinion Page.

Tomb consistently spouts mistruths about just about everything he writes about. Even when he mentions something as an example of what he likes, he misrepresents the facts.

In his Oct. 5 article about Green Day, Tomb managed to prove himself a complete incompetent. We'll cite directly from the column to support our argument.

First, Tomb suggests that Green Day is trying to emulate the Sex Pistols. Contrary to what Andrew tries to portray, he seems to know almost nothing about the Sex Pistols or Green Day if he is going to make this sort of remark. The Sex Pistols were a group of guys out to destroy as much as they could, be it musical preconceptions or hotel rooms. They were mad, and they were going to take it out as much and on as much as they could. Green Day, on the other hand, is a group of guys out to play music they find enjoyable for the sake of having fun. Tomb professes to know about the history of the Pistols.

From what he writes in his feeble attempt at a review, it is clear that he knows nothing except that he bought a Sex Pistols album because the title sounded cool, and that that is probably the only thing he has heard or seen of the Sex Pistols.

"Green Day is not a homage to the Pistols. The success of the band is based on the fact that they worked hard..."

TYLER PALMER
Senior in pre-med and psychology

The Sex Pistols had a guitar player and drummer of modest talent, but Johnny Rotten and Sid Vicious have both admitted in interviews that they had no talent whatsoever.

Heck, Sid, the band's bass player, couldn't even play the bass when he joined the band, and before he died, still had almost no skills on the instrument. We wonder if Tomb knows anything about the band or its history, or if he is just spewing forth the popular myths he has heard just so he can make himself think he has an idea what is going on in the music world.

Green Day is not a homage to the Pistols. The success of the band is based on the fact that they worked hard and paid their dues on shitty tours, eking out a paltry existence because that is what they wanted to do. They don't play to pay tribute to the past.

In a recent article in Spin magazine, lead singer Billie Joe says, "We're basically a fun rock 'n' roll band, and we just want to make basic melodic music." That statement about sums up what the band is about, a group of guys just out to have fun and play music that they have fun playing. If Tomb had it his way, Green Day would be paying royalties to Mr. Lyden because he was such a HUGE influence on them.

Our words to Andrew Tomb: It's not that he isn't decent enough at grammar, but we have to think that he is trying to emulate real music critics who actually know what they are talking about.

And Andrew Tomb, you are no critic.

'Don Giovanni' to open at McCain on Sunday

RUSSELL FORTMEYER
Collegian

The classic Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart opera "Don Giovanni," a favorite of opera-goers internationally, opens at McCain Auditorium Saturday night.

The opera, a touring production presented by Western Opera Theater, the touring arm of the highly-acclaimed San Francisco Opera, is the definitive representative of the Don Juan story.

"Don Giovanni" is, perhaps, Mozart's finest operatic accomplishment. It may not be his all-time most popular opera, but it is definitely among his most enriching.

"Don Giovanni" is Italian for the Spanish name Don Juan, which should be somewhat familiar to most people.

The story of Don Juan, a raucous sexual adventurer, has found its place among popular culture for many centuries.

Besides being written about in popular literature, a Don Juan complex has been referred to in the annals of psycho-analogy. Webster's New World Dictionary defines Don Juan as a dissolute nobleman and seducer of women.

A "Don Juan" is also a lusting conspirer who plays all sorts of games in order to enjoy anything (or anyone, for that matter) at anytime.

It will be interesting to note during and after the performance how many modern plays, books and movies have sub-let the idea of "Don Giovanni."

The Western Opera Theater functions under the auspices of the San Francisco Opera Center, which in turn functions under the San Francisco Opera, Laura Schwartz, special projects coordinator for the San Francisco Opera Center, said.

"The Western Opera Theater's mission is to bring opera to rural areas that otherwise wouldn't get the opera experience," Schwartz said.

"We have found that the audiences respond very well to traditional opera," she said.

OPERA TICKETS
The Western Opera Theater production of Mozart's "Don Giovanni" will be 8 p.m. Saturday at McCain Auditorium. Tickets can be purchased at the box office or by calling 532-6428.

The Western does not utilize contemporary opera but focuses on classic pieces, Schwartz said.

It does, however, present aria recitals and small excerpts from operas as performances from time to time, she said.

"The Western Opera Theater was developed in 1967 to coordinate the training of opera singers," Schwartz said.

The Western received the first National Endowment for the Arts grant ever commissioned, she said.

Most of the singers in the Western participate in the internationally renowned Merola Program at the San Francisco Opera Center, Schwartz said.

The Western Opera Theater has toured 46 states, presenting classic operas to more than 2 million people.

The staging of "Don Giovanni" that McCain audiences will see is based on the open-air version staged by acclaimed director John Copley, Schwartz said.

Schwartz said Copley has invented his own direction style that has become a mainstay in modern opera productions.

For instance, Don Giovanni will enter in Act I without his pants, she said.

That is something very contemporary, she said.

Schwartz said David Okerlund, who will play Don Giovanni in the McCain production, is in his second Western Opera production.

Okerlund received his master's degree in vocal/opera performance from the Kansas City Conservatory of Music at the University of Missouri.

Mamet's play a realistic view of life

RUSSELL FORTMEYER
Collegian

David Mamet is one of America's grittiest, most realistic playwrights.

Mamet never forces his viewpoint onto the audience in an attempt to provide the audience with some sort of moral understanding, but instead, he simply offers a glimpse of what life has become.

Mamet doesn't veer much from that basis in his recent play, "Speed-the-Plow," which opened last night in Nichols Theatre.

Mamet's characters of Bobby Gould, the extremely usable, naive head of production of a Hollywood studio, and Charlie Fox, Gould's fast-talking, greasy kiss-ass underling, are brilliant creations.

Gould and Fox, no matter how differently they may be thinking, seem to reach a middle ground. These two sweet-talkers converse themselves off the face of the earth until they agree. Gould gives in. Fox wants more. Gould gives more.

These two guys are typical Hollywood whores, go-boys with one thing on their mind — money.

There are exceptions. Especially when Karen enters the picture. Gould can't help but let himself be swept into a bad idea when all he really wants to do is get laid.

Karen fights for the film production of a completely incomprehensible novel based on the end of the world via radiation. Her insights into the novel are hysterically over-zealous.

Fox wants to see his star-vehicle prison movie with violence, gore and sex become a blockbuster.

Tim Aumiller plays the sly Charles Fox to perfection. Aumiller's Fox is conniving as he pitches a star vehicle to Gould. But, is Fox just bluffing? Aumiller's ambiguity about the status of the project is truly vicious.

Bobby Gould, played by Travis Malone, has a certain little-boy-in-a-candy-store innocence to his overall sliminess. That's what allows Gould to fall into Karen's devilish trap. But, Mamet says greed and ego are of ultimate importance to Hollywood-types, so Fox's persuasion wins out.

Malone convincingly plays Gould's weaknesses. Gould hangs on a balance. For now, he is on Mamet's Hollywood side, the very opposite of the apple-pie, goody-two-shoes end that Karen supposedly enjoys.

Gretchen Morgan's Karen is difficult to see through. Morgan doesn't pass Karen off as some bitch with an ulterior motive, but she doesn't drench her with saccharin, either.

Lew Shelton directs Mamet's Hollywood opus with enough verve to make anyone excited.

"Speed-the-Plow" is comfortably natural, with no wild staging to adversely affect the play.

"Speed-the-Plow" is worthwhile, but the untimely opening night had a dismal crowd.

joke when Steven Spielberg called to invite him to the production of "Schindler's List."

Every survivor of Schindler's list was invited to the production in Poland to celebrate life and were shown in a scene in the end of the movie.

"I was skeptical if Hollywood could reach the depth of the Holocaust and deal with it in a reasonable manner. But at the premiere, it grabbed me from the first moment to the end."

Kedem's speech attracted a much larger crowd than the Union Program Council expected.

"We had 1,058 people in the Forum Hall, and we had to turn away about 200 people because we couldn't fit anymore in," Li Sparks, UPC program adviser, said.

K-State students, faculty, community members and elementary students came to hear Kedem's story. A group of sixth-grade students from Lee Elementary School came with their teacher, Jane Eberle, to hear Kedem.

"I think his story was scary, and it was terrible that he had to sleep with seven people in one bed at the concentration camp," Emma Guy, a sixth-grade student, said.

Another student said her class has been preparing for this by reading books about the Holocaust.

The class has been learning about the Holocaust and watching CNN everyday, Eberle said.

VOLLEYBALL TEAM PREPARES FOR MATCH AGAINST MU

"Scrappy" is what assistant volleyball coach Stacy Metro called the University of Missouri's volleyball team.

"They have a new coach like Jim (Moore), and they dig a lot of balls," Metro said. "We're going to have to play well."

The 9-3 K-State volleyball team will go head to head with the 7-8 MU Tigers at 7:30 p.m. Saturday in Columbia.

Missouri enters the contest with an 0-3 Big Eight Conference record, while K-State improved to 1-1 in conference play after beating the Kansas Jayhawks in front of 1,364 fans Wednesday at Ahearn Field House.

"I feel like this is a big monkey off my back, even though this is my first year here," Moore said after the game.

KU falls to Wildcats at Memorial Stadium

JEREMY CRABTREE
Collegian

LAWRENCE — The streak is dead.

After 11 tries with no success, K-State finally won in Memorial Stadium, as the Wildcats defeated the Jayhawks 21-13 in front of a national TV audience.

The Wildcats improved to 4-0 and will face No. 2 Nebraska at home.

The Cats' victory marked the first time since 1969 that the K-State football team has won in Lawrence.

The final score may sound deceiving as K-State dominated for three full quarters.

In fact, for three quarters the Sunflower Showdown appeared to be the Sunflower letdown, as the Cats jumped out to a 21-0 lead early in the third quarter.

However, the Jayhawks creeped back into the game with two fourth-quarter touchdowns to bring the score to 21-13.

That is as close as it would get, as the K-State offense held the ball for the last six minutes of the game.

K-State coach Bill Snyder said the Cats played solid for most of the game.

"It was a good win for K-State," Snyder said. "However, I felt like we only played well for about 52 minutes.

"Then for the last eight minutes, we didn't play so well."

K-State linebacker Percell Gaskins put the final minutes of the game into other words.

"I thought that we played shitty during the last eight minutes," Gaskins said. "Our defense was tough up until that point."

Snyder said there were two reasons for the Jayhawks' comeback.

"They played hard, and they played well," Snyder said. "Our offense didn't move as well as we had hoped, either."

Despite not moving the ball well in the latter stages of the game, the K-State offense dominated the first half and the first eight minutes of the third quarter.

Behind the arm of quarterback Chad May, the Cats racked up 432 yards of total offense. May had 271 yards in the first half, and he finished with 379 yards for the game and one touchdown pass.

KU coach Glen Mason said May is the main reason the Cats were successful early.

"I give all of the credit in the world to May," Mason said. "He is an awful good quarterback"

Snyder said May played excellent.

"He didn't make a whole lot of mistakes," Snyder said. "He threw the ball well, expect for two exceptions. He made good decisions on where he went with it."

The Cats jumped onto the board first when they took control of the ball after holding the Jayhawks at the start of the second quarter. Eight plays later, K-State got into the end zone with an 8-yard touchdown pass from May to running back J.J. Smith.

Smith's touchdown came on a shovel pass to the left side of the line, and tackle Barrett Brooks escorted Smith into the end zone.

Then, after holding the Jayhawk offense on three plays, the Cats struck again as J.J. Smith dove over the offensive line for a 1-yard touchdown run.

"We took control and got things going," Smith said. "We just kept pounding and pounding them."

Another key to the Cats' success on offense was the play of the offense line. After recording nine sacks the last time K-State played in Lawrence, the Cats' offensive line only allowed one sack in this game.

"It was a good day for our offense," offensive tackle Jim Hmielewski said. "After the first couple of drives, we settled down. We then knew that we could move them.

The K-State defense also played solid during the 52-minute stretch. The Cats limited the Jayhawk rushing attack to only 50 yards in the first half.

"Our guys shut those guys down, because they can run, and I respect their line and their backs," Snyder said.

"To hold them out of the end zone for over 52 minutes — I think that was an excellent defensive period of time."

The K-State defense stuffed the Jayhawks' option attack. KU finished with only 70 yards on the ground.

GAME NOTES — K-STATE VS. KANSAS

✔ In the K-State vs. Kansas series, the team that has scored first has won or tied every contest since 1985.

✔ The oldest player for the Wildcats, Clyde Johnson, wasn't even born the last time K-State won in Lawrence. The Cats' last victory before Thursday was in 1969, and Johnson was born in 1970.

✔ The 48,800 in the stands marked the fifth-largest attendance for a K-State-Kansas game at Memorial Stadium.

✔ With the victory, K-State is now 3-0 on ESPN and KU is 0-3.

✔ For the seventh time in his 16-game career at K-State, Chad May has passed for more than 300 yards. He is 13-2-1 as a starter for the Wildcats.

✔ The Wildcats extended their winning streak to seven consecutive games, the most since the 1930 and 1931 seasons, when they put together a nine-game streak.

May dissects Jayhawks' defensive backfield

Offensive line gives quarterback time to find receivers

DEREK SIMMONS
Collegian

LAWRENCE — What will the Kansas secondary be dreaming about for the next few days?

The screen pass. The bomb. The shovel pass. The post. The hitch. The chair route. The crossing pattern. The button hook. The sideline pass.

One completion and one nightmare after another.

K-State quarterback Chad May picked apart the Kansas defense by passing for 379 yards and one touchdown in the Wildcats' 21-13 rout of the Jayhawks Thursday at Memorial Stadium.

It was the first K-State win at Lawrence in 25 years.

May completed a career-high 33 of his 44 passes, including seven of nine for 79 yards in one drive in the second quarter that yielded the Wildcats' first touchdown.

Kansas running back L.T. Levine had ample time on the sideline to watch the K-State offense work.

"If we could have figured it out, they wouldn't have been passing on us," Levine said, whose Jayhawks had the ball for 19:16 compared to 40:44 for K-State. "We're just not clicking right now."

K-State's offensive line provided May plenty of time to scan receivers throughout the first half. The Jayhawks' defensive front sacked May twice but never really established themselves at the line of scrimmage.

"I've got to give respect to them because they went out there and performed better against us," Kansas cornerback Tony Blevins said. "May threw the ball well, and he found open receivers. It wasn't just him but the offensive line, too."

May was oblivious to the sack count.

"I thought the protection did a good job," he said. "I don't know if they even got a sack on me."

KU (3-2), which came into the contest ranked 76th in passing defense with 244 yards per game, surrendered 271 yards to May and the Wildcats in the first half alone.

"We got things rolling," J.J. Smith said, of the second quarter that produced two touchdowns. "We got a tempo going and started pounding it and pounding it. No one can stop us when we get our offense rolling."

K-State (4-0) ran the ball just seven times in the second quarter and only had 1 rushing yard in the first half. The Wildcats did, however, score two touchdowns in the game on rushes.

The Wildcats took a 14-0 lead at halftime and widened the margin to 21-0 with 8:40 left in the third quarter.

But then the Cats got conservative.

K-State preserved a shutout of Kansas for more than 45 minutes but then gave up two touchdowns in seven minutes in the fourth quarter, slicing the lead to 21-13 with 6:28 remaining.

But the first half proved to be the deciding factor, as the Wildcats hung on for the victory.

"We didn't play very well, and we were not able to stop the pass," KU coach Glen Mason said. "I think we were very lucky to be down 14-0 at the half."

May said the trouble with the KU defense wasn't the secondary but the defensive line.

"It starts up front," May said, who has now passed for more than 300 yards in seven games in his career at K-State. "If they can't get pressure on the quarterback, then they can't be successful."

Although May said he made some mistakes, he did say it was his best performance of the year.

"Yeah, it was probably so far," he said. "I just wish we could get the running game going. That would open up the pass more, too."

The senior quarterback extended his streak of consecutive games with at least one touchdown pass to 14 games.

Offensive tackle Barrett Brooks said the Jayhawks were doing their share of talking.

"They talk too much," Brooks said. "They were saying we're trash and stuff like that. But we came in here, and we won. We beat them pretty good."

K-State fans went so far as to tear down one of the goal posts in a celebration following the game.

"We tore them up, so I guess they thought they had to tear something up," Smith said. "I think our fans are just hyped."

KU entered Thursday's game ranked 76th in the nation in passing defense with 244 yards per game. The Jayhawks surrendered 271 yards passing in the first half alone.

▶ FIRE SAFETY

Week promotes fire prevention

CHRISTI WRIGHT
Collegian

National Fire Prevention Week is Oct. 9-15, and the Manhattan Fire Department is commemorating the event by sponsoring several public-awareness campaigns.

The fire department is kicking off the week with an open house from 10 a.m. to 1 p.m., Saturday Oct. 8, at the Headquarters Fire Station at 2000 Denison Ave.

"The open house is geared toward the children. We have educational displays and various movies for them so they can learn and practice fire safety," Chuck Tannehill, assistant director in charge of technical services, said.

The fire department will also have a simulated setup for children to practice getting out of a room in case of a fire.

Other activities for the day include station tours, fire-prevention kit demonstrations and displays of antique fire equipment.

Fire prevention week is an annual event for the fire department, and the department actively participates each year.

"We do this every year, and each year we try to expand on it," Tannehill said. "This year we are promoting bike helmets at the station open house along with the Kansas Safe Kids Coalition."

The Kansas Safe Kids Coalition is a group of organizations and businesses that have joined to prevent children from intentional injury.

The fire department has also been distributing fire-prevention information to the schools and the Manhattan Town Center.

"We have gone to all the first through fifth graders in USD 383, and we will be passing out information at the mall this Sunday," Tannehill said.

Now that K-State is a part of the Manhattan community, the fire department has been promoting fire prevention around campus, Tannehill said. Posters were distributed to campus buildings and residence halls, and greek houses were also informed.

"We have a meeting scheduled with the fire department personnel, Interfraternity Council and Panhellenic Council Nov. 28," Barb Robel, Greek Affairs adviser, said.

"The inspections of the houses are going on right now," Robel said. "This meeting will be a follow-up where we can give suggestions to abide by the fire codes and give the chapters a chance to respond to the inspections."

The residence halls are also aware of fire prevention week, but it lasts yearlong there.

"We haven't joined a concerted effort in the fire prevention program," Shah Hasan, assistant director of the Department of Housing, said. "We conduct fire prevention all during the year."

Fire prevention week is recognized each year on the anniversary of the Great Chicago Fire, which occurred on Oct. 9, 1871, Tannehill said.

The fire killed around 300 people and destroyed more than 17,000 structures.

'The Return of the Black Man' theme for symposium

TAMARA JORDON
Collegian

African American males are the least-valued students in American higher education as well as public schools, a founder of the African American Male Symposium said.

"There are few African American men in central administration, and they are perceived to be less capable intellectually and more capable physically," said James Boyer, professor of curriculum and American ethnic studies in the College of Education.

Boyer was instrumental in planning the first African American Male Symposium on K-State's campus in 1992.

Boyer said he feels K-State should address the problems facing African American men.

This year, the theme of the third-annual African American Symposium is "The Return of the Black Man; Family and Education."

It will be from 8:30 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. Saturday in the K-State Union Little Theatre.

The symposium is one of the closing activities of Racial/Ethnic Harmony Week.

The symposium will include workshops on Black Men and the Law, the Phenomenal Man, and Man to Woman.

Larry Dixon, assistant superintendent of Geary County schools, will be the keynote speaker.

Black Student Union and the Black Pan-Hellenic Council are sponsoring the event.

Shanta Bailey, senior in psychology, said this year the symposium reaches a larger group of people.

"We tried to make the symposium more powerful with the title and the topics," she said.

Bailey said she is one of the two women involved in planning the symposium

She said she is not turned away from the symposium because its title is directed toward African American men.

"The symposium is just as much a woman's symposium, too," she said.

However, the theme has been a concern to some students, said Jawwad Abdulhaqq, who also helped plan the symposium.

He said people have asked him, "Where has the black man been?"

"When you look at history, black men have been many places. And to go somewhere, you have to return," Abdulhaqq, sophomore in political science, said.

"We are returning to family and education," he said.

Program teaches Kansas inmates skills for future

SERA L. TANK
Collegian

Next time you wash your hands on campus and use the soap, you might want to extend your gratitude to a Kansas inmate.

Soap is just one of many goods and services that K-State gets from the Kansas Correctional Industries. KCI sells state agencies items such as calculators and paint, and services like furniture reupholstering and automobile restoration.

Jan Johnson, staff assistant to the secretary of corrections for the state of Kansas, said KCI is a program in which prisoners work for the state making goods for state agencies.

"The purpose is to provide meaningful employment to inmates while they are incarcerated and teach them a skill which will be helpful to them once they are released from the prison system," she said.

Prisoners apply to be admitted into the program, Johnson said.

"They are hired on the basis of their work history, their skills, their behavior record since they have been in prison, and so on," she said.

Randy Slover, director of K-State facilities, said the state of Kansas as well as K-State benefit from state agencies buying items from KCI.

"It keeps money in the state system, and most of the items are cheaper than what you can buy from private companies," he said.

Lenny Ewell, director of administration for KCI, said K-State is one of the program's largest customers.

"We are able to sell them quality products at very low prices. I think that is a definite plus," he said.

According to the The Prison Made Goods Act, "All state agencies shall purchase from the secretary all articles or products required by such agencies that are produced by inmates and not such article shall be purchased from any other source."

There are exceptions made if an agency does not feel that an item is of high quality. K-State gets an exception for floor wax, Norm Root, procurement officer of the facilities store room, said.

"We filed an appeal and did several tests to prove to the state that the wax just didn't work as well as we needed. They tried to improve the product, but it was never up to our satisfaction," he said.

Slover said this is one of few exceptions, and that most of KCI's products are of high quality.

Smatterings

BY ANDREW TOMB

Compiled from Collegian staff and Associated Press reports

No need to hide your nannie from the IRS, but too late for Zoë

Congressional negotiators agreed late Wednesday to update and simplify the "nanny tax," the Social Security law that sank Zoe Baird's nomination for attorney general and turned thousands of household employers into tax cheats.

"We have decriminalized baby-sitting," Sen. Daniel Patrick Moynihan, D-N.Y., said, announcing the compromise. The legislation now goes to the House and Senate for final votes and is expected to be signed into law by President Clinton.

The agreement would require household employers to pay Social Security and Medicare taxes on any worker earning at least $1,000 a year, up from the current threshold of $50 a quarter, or $200 a year. Teen-age baby sitters would be exempt.

The Internal Revenue Service estimates that only about one-fourth of household employers pay taxes on their baby sitters, housekeepers and gardeners.

The nanny tax issue has been a recurrent problem for the Clinton administration, starting with Baird, the president's first choice for attorney general. Several other candidates for top jobs were also embarrassed by revelations they had not paid Social Security taxes on their domestic help.

Reports made available to Smatterings staff also indicated that soon legislation will be introduced that will decriminalize other dangerous child occupations like snow shoveling, paper routes and lawn-mowing.

Good thing, I'd sure hate for the government to miss out on getting its share of little Bobby's take from shoveling the neighbor's walk this winter.

Only in America: 1. Lie to Congress. 2. Run for Congress.

Oliver North denied on Tuesday that he lied to Congress about the Iran-Contra affair. He conceded later that he didn't tell the whole truth.

Well, Ollie, what's it gonna be?

"The press said I lied, but the jury said I didn't," the Republican candidate for U.S. Senate and former White House aide told about 200 students at Falls Church, Va. High School.

Oh, OK, we get it.

"I acknowledged in (an) informal off-the-record meeting with a handful of members of one committee and some staff that I had not told them everything they wanted to know," he told reporters.

Well, that was a dumb move.

At the same gathering, North also backed away from his endorsement of the Confederate flag.

Well, at least there are not too many Confederates left to offend, right Ollie?

Ross, do us a favor — pretend you've never heard of the GOP

Ross Perot says Americans should let Republicans "have a turn at bat" by giving near-blanket support to GOP candidates for Congress and handing Republicans control of both houses.

"I'm saying give these guys a chance," the Texas billionaire and 1992 independent presidential candidate advised.

Perot vowed that if Republicans win control of the House and Senate and don't deliver, then he would form a third party that would. He sidestepped whether he would run for president again himself.

Not surprisingly, his advice was loudly denounced Wednesday by the White House and Democratic leaders — who don't expect Perot's words to turn many votes but are too nervous about the upcoming midterm elections to risk letting them go by unanswered.

Republicans were gleeful.

"We welcome it. I was pleased by what he said," said Haley Barbour, chairman of the Republican National Committee. "When Perot called for the election of a Republican Congress, he was accurately reflecting the views of the 20 million people who voted for him in 1992."

Using a favorite forum, CNN's "Larry King Live," Perot suggested Tuesday night that voters support Republican candidates for the House and Senate across the board.

Well, given ol' Ross' past record in these election things that could be the best thing the Democrats need to hang on to Capitol Hill this November.

Or not ...

WEEKEND

"The people who come in here this late are either studying, or they are drunk and got the munchies."

CHRISTY PEARCE
waitress, Village Inn

Art by Mike Marlett

Story by Doug Bassett

Village people

Village Inn is more than just a place to go when you're drunk — you can watch the drunks there, too

It's almost 4 a.m., the employees are tired, and the customers are passed out.

There is one group of people with cowboy hats just singing away at a song they think they know the words to. Three couples are all over each other in the back of a booth, and there is somebody getting sick in the bathroom.

They throw napkins and menus, they yell and sing songs, they puke on the tables, and they even have sex in the bathrooms.

This describes some of the people who go to Village Inn restaurant on Friday and Saturday nights.

If you are a person that goes home after partying, then you have been missing the best time to socialize with fellow drunken people.

If you aren't drunk on Friday or Saturday night, then you should go to Village Inn just one evening to see the types of people who show up at 2 a.m. to eat and show just how drunk they really are.

"The people who come in here this late are either studying, or they are drunk and got the munchies," Christy Pearce, sophomore in pre-law and criminology and waitress at Village Inn, said.

Steve Domser, assistant manager at Village Inn, said, "If you come in and look at the people who are here, you will just be amazed at how some of them act.

"One time, I caught two people actually having sex in the bathroom, and they didn't even stop when I went in," Domser said. They were really drunk, but they were still pretty embarrassed, he said.

He said fights are pretty rare at Manhattan's Village Inn.

Not everybody that goes to Village Inn on the weekend is drunk. A lot of people go there to study, and some said they enjoy watching what is going on.

"I usually come in and study, but tonight I am here to eat. I've seen some strange things happen in here," Kevin Bailey, sophomore in education, said.

"The weirdest thing I have ever seen is when a server mooned a customer. I don't even know why they did it," Robert LaMar, Village Inn cook, said.

"One time, I caught two people actually having sex in the bathroom."

STEVE DOMSER
assistant manager, Village Inn

LaMar said he has seen a lot of people making out in booths, and sometimes it gets out of control.

"My friends and I go into Village Inn because it is one of the only places open that late at night," Brian Rose, Manhattan resident, said.

"I haven't seen so many cowboy hats in one place in my whole life — it looks like a rodeo in here," Bill Thompson, Topeka resident, said. "If I go out with my friends, then we all pretty much know that we will end up either at Village Inn or Country Kitchen."

At 4 a.m., things slow down, and people start to rub their eyes, probably wishing they hadn't drank that night.

People who work at the bars start to come in. By this time, everyone knows each other by their first names.

Bus carts are loaded with dishes, and tables are starting to be wiped off. Sometimes, it can take a few hours just to get ready for the next shift to take over.

"Sometimes, we go out after work and eat, but usually we are too tired to do anything," Pearce said. "We know we have to work the next day, and we need our sleep."

Angie Jensen, sophomore in apparel textile marketing and a server at Village Inn, said she doesn't mind working at Village Inn because she said if you flirt with the guys, then sometimes they give good tips. It doesn't matter if they are drunk or not, she said.

"I have no problem dealing with the drunk people that come in at all," Greg Nockleby, senior in rhetoric communication, said.

"You kind of just joke with them," he said, "and it goes pretty good."

Management program accredited

LORI CAGLE
Collegian

K-State now joins the ranks of about 22 schools in the United States to have an accredited program in hotel and restaurant management.

About 175 students are enrolled in the program, which is a part of the College of Human Ecology.

Judy Miller, head of the Department of Hotel and Restaurant Management, said the program was given the opportunity to enter a lottery in 1989 to be accredited.

"The process began in 1989, but it wasn't until the last two years that we began the intense work," Miller said.

The department received accreditation on the first attempt, Aug. 31, from the Accreditation Commission for Programs in Hospitality Administration (ACPHA).

"It is basically an internal review of all parts of our program," Pat Pesci, director of the hotel and restaurant management program, said.

The ACPHA appointed three site team members to evaluate the program in April 1994. The team focused on nine standards ranging from mission to faculty and instructional staff, Miller said.

In the final report, the commission commended the program on the conduct of its self study, the site-team evaluation and response to the team report.

The commission found the overall content of the material to be excellent, according to the report.

"Our faculty worked diligently to document the quality program that already existed," Miller said.

Mike Rice, senior in hotel and restaurant management, took part in the evaluation retreat conducted to get student feedback on the program.

"I went to the retreat, and they asked what they could do to improve the program," Rice said. "I've been here for five years, and I've seen improvements the whole time."

Rice said he felt the quality of instructors and the overall program had been upgraded since the evaluation started.

Pesci said it was important to go through the internal review and become accredited.

Pesci and Miller both agreed the accreditation will benefit students.

"It's an attempt to assure students and employers of the quality of the program," Miller said.

New mystery science theater in Union Sunday

TERRY SCRUTON
Collegian

Mention the names Crow, Gypsy and Tom Cervo to most people, and chances are all you will get in return is a blank stare.

But there are a certain selective few who speak those names with awe, with reverence and, sometimes, without giggling.

For those who don't know, these are the names of the three mechanical stars of a little show called "Mystery Science Theater 3000" (MST3K to those in the know).

The premise of the show is simple enough.

Imagine being stranded in space with a gang of robots who look as if they could have been built with parts from a junkyard, and being forced to watch really bad movies.

The only way to keep from going insane is to make bad jokes about the movies.

The appeal of the show is undeniable. So much so that the Union Program Council has brought it back for another run.

The Comedy Central cult favorite is making its second stop in Manhattan on Oct. 9.

Cliff Pierron, event coordinator for Kaleidoscope Films, said response from last year's show was so good that UPC decided to do it again.

"Last year we had more than 400 people come," Pierron said. "This year we are expecting more because we're doing two shows."

Pierron said there have been calls from fan clubs in Kansas City and a group from Lawrence, all wanting directions to the show.

"There is also a Manhattan MST3K fan club that just started up that will be there," he said.

The show is part of a tour sponsored by Visa, Apple Computer Inc. and Warner Bros.

Other stops on the tour have included Berkeley, Calif., and Washington, D.C.

"K-State is the only school in the four-state area showing the film," Pierron said.

The film scheduled to be torn to shreds by the MST3K crew is called "Zombie Nightmare." It stars none other than TV's Batman himself, Adam West.

"This is a world-premiere episode of the show," Pierron said. "It's never been seen before."

The film will be shown Sunday, Oct. 9, at 9:30 p.m. and midnight in Union Forum Hall. Admission is free, and the first 50 people to arrive will get free T-shirts.

K-State students intern at Disney

MOLLY WEIGEL
Collegian

They went to Jimmy Buffett's Margaritaville. They spent days relaxing at the beach. They saw the launch of the Voyager space shuttle.

Oh, and they worked for the Walt Disney Corp. all summer.

They are K-State students who participated in the Disney summer internship program in Orlando, Fla.

"I heard about the program from a friend. She had a great time, so I decided to apply," Maggie Streck, junior in business management, said.

Streck is one of 13 K-Staters who worked at Disney World this summer. They were chosen from 10,000 applicants, Streck said.

"There were 1,000 student workers from all over the U.S. and 500 international students," Adriene Taylor, senior in hotel and restaurant management, said.

The interns each shared a three-bedroom apartment with five other roommates. This caused a few problems, Taylor said.

"The rent was $65 a week per person, which I thought was way too much," Taylor said. "Also, I had a roommate who had after-hours parties almost every night."

Disney has strict policies on visitors and drinking, she said.

"We could have alcohol but no kegs," Taylor said. "Also, if there were more than eight people in your apartment, that's considered a party and is grounds for dismissal."

MORE INFORMATION
There will be a mandatory, informational meeting for those interested in Walt Disney internships at 7 p.m. Monday in Eisenhower 015.

Visiting hours ended at 2 a.m., so if the interns had out-of-town guests, they had to sneak them in, or the guests had to find a hotel, Taylor said.

Taylor worked at the front desk of the Contemporary hotel. She said her duties were checking guests in and out, answering phones and taking payments.

"I really applied what I've learned in my classes," Taylor said.

Chad Terry, junior in nutritional and exercise science, put his lifeguarding skills to use.

"I worked at a Disney water park called Typhoon Lagoon and occasionally at some of the resorts," Terry said.

Streck was a food-and-beverage hostess in Tony's Town Square.

"I had a great time," Streck said. "I can't say one bad thing about it."

Not only did the interns work, they also learned about the Disney Corp. Once a week, the interns attended a business seminar, Streck said.

"The seminars covered topics like professionalism, what Disney looks for in employees and how to incorporate your Disney experience into your future plans," Streck said.

All the interns said there was more to do in Florida besides work.

Streck said she went shopping a lot and also went sightseeing.

"I went on a tour of Orlando homes one day. I saw Michael Jackson's new house. It was incredible," Streck said.

Taylor said she drove to Key West with some new friends.

"I went snorkeling for the first time," Taylor said. "Also, I went to Margaritaville."

Terry said he spent a lot of his free time in Church Street, the Aggieville of Orlando.

"I went to all the beaches around Orlando," Terry said.

Both Taylor and Streck said they visited Disney World, MGM Studios and Epcot Center often. They agreed the best rides at Disney World were Space Mountain and the newest ride, the Tour of Terror.

Temptation underminds morals of boyfriend

Dear Cassandra,

Recently, I have met a very attractive and intelligent young lady. I would like to get to know her better, The only problem is that I am already involved with a girl and have been for more than two years.I can't seem to get this new girl out of my head. She brings out new emotions in me that I have never experienced. Should I just let these emotions pass, leaving this beautiful young lady a memory of the past, risking perhaps losing the woman I was meant to be with? I am not going to lie to or cheat on my girlfriend.

Signed,
Dazed and Confused

Dear Dazed and Confused

I admire your morals — you're not going to lie to or cheat on your girlfriend. Unfortunately, many people throw their significant other's feelings out the window when temptation strikes.Therefore, you have answered your own question.

If you're going to remain faithful to your girlfriend, you're not going to be starting anything new with this enticing young lady. At least not without fessing up to your girlfriend. If you're still struggling with what to do, give it some time. If you already have, and you're still so attracted to this other woman, you need to decide what you want.

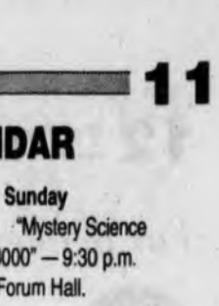
Country music not as bad as it's cracked up to be



What happens when you play a country song backwards?

The guy gets his girl, dog and beer back.

Country music is sweeping the nation, and for years I had no idea why it had any place in the history of American music.

Every time anyone mentioned the words 'country' and 'music' in the same sentence, I visualized cowboys in oversized belt buckles and cowboy boots whining about everything and anything that has gone wrong in their lives.

Each melody seemed like a copycat of the next, and the lyrics had about as much originality as a deadhead at a Grateful Dead concert.

AMY ZIEGLER

I've always thought that all the country-music songwriters sit down at a big table, and once a year they decide on what to whine about in their music.

I've had a warped idea of country singers for years, but one person changed my mind.

Reba McIntire's song "She Thinks His Name Was John," shattered my perception of country music.

The song not only told a tragic story of a woman who contracted AIDS from a stranger while she was under the influence of alcohol, but it had a melody that stayed in my head for weeks.

One time, my roommates even caught me singing along to the lyrics when the song was blasting on the radio in our room.

They were shocked that I would ever even admit to actually enjoying country music, and I even surprised myself.

We have a revolving compact-disc case on top of our CD player, and more than 80 percent of the CDs are from Clint Black, Reba McIntire and Garth Brooks.

For the first few weeks, I thought I was in the country-music festival from hell.

After a few months, I think it is finally starting to affect me in ways that I never imagined.

I recognize songs on country-radio stations now and find myself singing along to them because of their unforgettable harmony. I thought hell would freeze over before I went to a country bar, and I've already been to Longhorn's twice this semester.

It's unbelievable how country music can seep into a person, even one who has always had a passion for alternative and ska and an intense hatred for country music.

When I went into the country bar, I realized there is a whole other culture out there that I had never been exposed to because I had grown up in a large city and not in a small town.

"If you had a pair of cowboy boots, you would be the best dancer in the whole bar," a man told me.

I don't know about that one, but I do know that I now have a new-found respect for the country music scene at K-State.

Self-Defense

SERA L. TANK
Collegian

If you have ever considered taking a self-defense class, now is the time to do it.

With two reported rapes in Manhattan since August, many female students have decided that a self-defense class is imperative to ensure their personal safety.

Lisa Emigh, senior in psychology and ethnic studies, said while some students may not think they have the time, they should do everything they can to learn self-defense.

"Make the time. There is even more of an increased need because of the recent rapes," she said.

I made the time to take the "For Women Only" self-defense class sponsored by the Women's Resource Center and facilitated by Emigh. The three-week workshop met twice a week for a little more than an hour.

The workshop covered every aspect of self-defense, from stretching and mental exercises to verbal and physical-confrontation training.

It was the first of several self-defense workshops WRC is sponsoring this semester. A three-week workshop is planned every month, Emigh said.

Self-defense isn't only about defending yourself, but it also gives women an opportunity to live more confidently and independently, Emigh said.

The first thing we learned was the vulnerable points on an attacker's body, some weapons we have on our own body and some common things we carry with us that can be used as weapons.

Some of the weapons we have on our bodies are our legs for kicking; hands to punch, slap, scratch, gouge, scrape, pull or push; elbows to hit and push with; and knees with which to kick.

While parts of the body can be very effective in defending yourself, we possess more abstract weapons to fight off an attacker. For instance, a loud, aggressive yell can be one of your best defenses.

Other abstract weapons we have are our senses and our minds.

"Each woman and attack is different. You need to use your brain, assess the situation and decide what the best course of action is," Emigh said.

If you are attacked, there are some areas on an attacker's body that you should aim for in order to immobilize him.

Some vulnerable spots are almost any place on the head, face and neck, the solar plexis, elbows, knees, floating ribs, hands and fingers, shins, groin, kidneys and tailbone.

Emigh told us you should try to avoid the groin and the stomach as the first place to strike an attacker.

"Men always protect those areas. You should use that as a secondary target," she said.

Emigh said hitting or kicking one of the other target points will immobilize the attacker and make him focus on the injured area.

At that point, he will not be concentrating on his groin or stomach, and that is the best time to strike in those areas, she said.

It is also important to remember that you have target areas where you can be hurt, too, she said.

"The same points that are vulnerable on an attacker are also your vulnerable points. You need to try and protect those areas," she said.

We practiced some of the techniques Emigh taught us with a partner, but most of the punches and kicks we learned were practiced against a mat.

> "If he wants to kill you, you might as well fight back with everything you have, but you have to make the decision."
> LISA BRATTON
> Riley County police officer

The class not only covered physical confrontations,but also taught us how to deal with verbal confrontations.

Using your voice to frighten an attacher is also very important when you throw punches or strike an assailant, Emigh said.

"Your voice is a powerful tool. It can startle the attacker and can throw him off guard," she said.

During one of the classes, Officer Lisa Bratton of the K-State Police talked to us about preventing attacks and not becoming a victim.

Bratton said a person who is going to attack you usually has the advantage because, in most cases, they have already planned the attack.

"The person who does these types of things has the advantage. They have it in their mind, and they're thinking about it. In most cases, it's been planned in some way," she said.

It's important not to stereotype an attacker and fear only those types of people, Bratton said.

"A lot of rapists are good-looking, charming guys," she said.

Drinking large amounts of alcohol can put you at risk, too, Bratton said.

Bratton said when you drink, you may not take certain safety precautions that you normally take.

"If I was a guy who wanted to attack someone, why would I hide in the bushes and wait, when I can just go down to Aggieville and get what I want? There are a lot of people who will take advantage of you if you are drunk," she said.

Another significant factor in personal safety is surveying your car before you get into it, Emigh said.

"Don't park directly under a light. It's best to park a little off to the side. That way, the light can shine under your car, so you can see better," she said.

Emigh also said that you need to have your keys ready when you approach the car and look inside before you get in.

Bratton said to be wary of giving information out to people you don't know very well.

"You have to be careful of the kind of information you give out. You never want to tell people too much," she said.

Even setting up a date with someone who seems like a nice person should be approached with caution, Emigh said.

"If you meet someone you'd like to get to know better, set up a meeting time or place rather than giving them your address and phone number for the first few dates," she said.

Bratton said you should always report any attack.

"No matter what the circumstances are, you always need to report it. It doesn't mean that you deserve it if you are attacked when you are drunk or by your boyfriend. It's not your fault," she said.

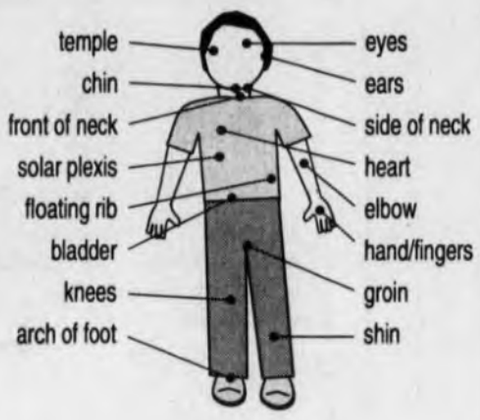
Toward the end of the workshop, many of us in the class felt much more confident that we could fight off an attacker, but some of us were wary as to when we should fight them off.

One of my main concerns was that fighting may actually make a rapist more angry and more determined.

Emigh said there is never a definite answer on whether you should fight back.

"The best advice is to try and keep calm. You're going to be scared, but pay attention to your assailant. Does he want to rape you? Does he want to take your money? Or does he want to kill you?" she said.

"If he wants to kill you, you might as well fight back with everything you have, but you have to make the decision. Every woman is different."



Another concern was that despite all our new found confidence and training, we would be put in a situation or position in which we would not be able to fight off an attacker.

Emigh also said your chances for survival are good if you do fight back.

"Most women who fight back get away," she said.

SELF-DEFENSE TACTICS

- Vulnerable spots on an attacker's body are almost any place on the head, face and neck, the solar plexis, elbows, knees, floating ribs, hands and fingers, shins, groin, kidneys and tailbone.
- Try to avoid the groin and the stomach as the first place to strike an attacker because men tend to protect those areas.
- Keys and pens can be used to stab and scratch. A backpack or bag can be swung around to hit an attacker.
- Weapons such as Mace can be very helpful in an attack situation.
- The next workshops will be Mondays and Wednesdays at 4-5:15 p.m. from Oct. 10 to 26 and Tuesdays and Thursdays at 4-5:15 p.m. from Oct.11 to 27. The workshops are free, but space is limited, so advance registration is required.

VERBAL CONFRONTATION OBJECTIVES

DO hold the person accountable for their behavior.
DO use your voice. Consciously deepen your voice.
DON'T give up your space.
DON'T engage in an extended conversation or battle of wits.
DO beware of your nervous behavior and channel them in a positive direction.
DO expect face-saving comebacks, but DON'T respond to them.
DO take your position with attitude. Present yourself in a physically assertive manner.
DO tell him what to do. DON'T ask.
DON'T use qualifiers like "maybe" or "excuse me, but . . ."

District judge rules income-tax system unfair to single workers

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — Lawmakers are concerned about a judge's ruling that the state unfairly discriminates against single residents at tax time.

"This could be earth-shattering," Sen. Gus Bogina, R-Shawnee, said Wednesday.

Bogina, chairman of the Senate Ways and Means Committee, said the ruling could have considerable effect on the 1995 legislative session.

Last month, Shawnee County District Judge Matthew J. Dowd ruled that it is unconstitutional for the state to have lower income-tax rates for married individuals filing joint returns than for individual filers.

The Department of Revenue is appealing to the state Court of Appeals.The Legislature agreed to pay $58.5 million to settle the case.

The military retirees took their case to the U.S. Supreme Court, which ruled against the state's practice of taxing military pensions but not the pensions of other government retirees, both state and federal.

The Legislature agreed to pay refunds for taxes illegally collected from 1984-91, plus 5 percent interest.

However, in the single taxpayers' case, Dowd refused to certify the lawsuit as a class-action lawsuit.

That means Eric Peden, who filed the lawsuit, does not represent all single taxpayers who paid taxes during the past three years, and the ruling applies to only him.

"During the 1995 legislative session, the Legislature should consider eliminating the differential in rates between married individuals filing jointly and single filers," Parrish said in her letter.

TO ROULETTER DATES; Late on a cold Oct. night you may hear his yell across the plains. He wants to party and raise some hell by taking the reins. It's become our heart and our soul, so back south our wagons will roll. For it's the 56th year that our old friend will rear one hell of a party that everyone will fear. The whiskey is uncorked, the beer a chill leaving nothing but the wrath of our old friends you will feel. So we've shaped our ole' hats and pressed our best britches to impress that one special gal who knows not of our personal riches. This party is not for the weak nor the distressed but rather for the able willing to impress. We would turn in our grave before dancing a line but swinging and stepping twice you'll surely find.

As you will see on Oct. 8 this legend of legends has no mate only the will to live forever 'neath wide open spaces. For the Ghost of Rouletter it will be yet another chance to live for a night in our bodies 'n minds changing with brotherhood over the times. As twilight turns to dawn and the beer and liquor are all but gone ye shall come to understand what it means to be an AGR man. So be sure not to miss this mystical trip and maybe you'll learn the AGR grip. Be sure to prepare, cause Rouletter will show, no one parties like Alpha Gamma Rho.

CATEGORIES
To help you find what you are looking for, the classified ads have been arranged by category and sub-category. All categories are marked by one of the large images, and sub-categories are preceded by a number designation.

TIPS FOR WRITING A CLASSIFIED AD
Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.
Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.
Consider including the price. This tells buyers if they are looking at something in their price range.

WE DO NOT USE PHONE NUMBERS OR LAST NAMES IN PERSONALS.

Racial/Ethnic Harmony Week to end with music by Ashanti

KRISTA COZAD
Collegian

They've come a long way.

And they're about to come a little further to get to K-State.

Ashanti, a three-woman musical group originally from Texas, will be playing at K-State at 8 tonight for Racial/Ethnic Harmony Week.

The band has only been together for three years, but has already moved from its hometown to Minneapolis, signed with Street Life/Scotti Bros. record label and released its first single, "Something's Wrong (Bump 'n Grind)."

Tami Collins, a member of Ashanti, whose sister, Da'Vidra , is also in the group, said Ashanti's first release is a reply to a song written by R. Kelly titled "Bump 'n Grind."

"Basically, R. Kelly's song is just talking about how he sees nothing wrong with, you know. But what we're saying is that in this day and age, there is something wrong — that you need to take time to establish a relationship before going that route," Tami Collins said.

Ashanti's music is heavily influenced by the band members' upbringings. All three women were raised singing in the church and still hold on to their religious roots as well as their sound, Tami Collins said.

"We're very spiritual people, and as far as influencing our lyrics, I'd say yes, in a sense, because what we sing is how we feel, morally," she said.

"We have an old school meets the new school sound. Gospel with a little jazz, with some of the Ashanti harmony on that," Calhoun said.

Chad Campbell, a sales representative at Streetside Records in Aggieville, said Ashanti's first single is selling well.

"It's been doing pretty good through word of mouth. I've suggested it and played it for some people. The people I've played it for liked it," he said.

Success for the group has been relatively easy, Titia Collins said. The group developed a following early on, singing at a wide array of colleges including University of Texas at Arlington, University of New Orleans, and various clubs. However, they decided they could do even better in Minneapolis, so the group relocated.

According to De'Vidra Collins, Minnesota is working well for them.

"We performed at Minneapolis' Black Expo, and that's when things really kicked off. Scotti Bros. saw us live and offered us a recording deal. We didn't have to send out any tapes," Da'Vidra Collins said.

Signing with the company has been a good experience for the group, Tami Collins said.

"We performed a lot before, but signing has allowed us national exposure and has given more people a chance to see us," she said.

The group is looking forward to coming to K-State.

"We're real excited. We love to perform live," Da'Vidra Collins said.

"We love performing for good groups of people that like to have fun," Tami Collins said.

Furnace maintenance a must before cold weather hits

DEANA TESKE
Collegian

Before you find yourself in the dead of winter without heat, make sure your heating system is serviced and working properly.

"Before cold weather hits, furnaces should be serviced by a licensed, qualified heating contractor," T. A. Midrup, Western Resources director of KPL said. "The filters should be cleaned or replaced. Pilot lighting devices, switches and thermostats also should be checked to assure proper working order."

Burners in the furnace should be observed for proper ignition and efficient combustion by making sure all burners are lit and burning clean with a sharp blue flame, Midrup said.

"Changing the filters is real important," said Marlyn Henton, office manager for Henton Plumbing, Heating and Air Conditioning. "Keeping the system working right increases efficiency and lowers heating costs."

Homeowners should also have chimneys and flue pipes checked for soot, residues or any other obstructions disrupting the flow of escaping gases.

Natural gas, oil, coal or wood-burning appliances can generate carbon monoxide, causing a hazardous buildup.

Combustibles such as paper, curtains and cleaning fluids should be kept away from all heating appliances. The area around furnaces and natural-gas water heaters should always remain uncluttered, Midrup said.

"Heating devices need room to breathe so they can continue to circulate air," KPL Division Manager Stacy Kolmeier said.

Tenants should discuss with their landlords about seasonal checking of heating and air conditioning appliances, Michel' Philipp, of Western Resources, said.

Tenants can also do their part by reporting any strange odors or damaged appliance parts to their landlord or gas service, she said.

Henton recommends a seasonal check to ensure safety and efficiency, as well as reducing future expenses, such as replacing an entire system.

Henton charges $35 per hour for a service check, plus any additional labor or repairs needed, she said.

Look in every Wednesday's Collegian for a complete look at K-State sports in the WILDCAT WATCH.
